The new building will be erected by the side of the present Church, facing on one of the principal streets, and making a combination structure having a ninety-foot frontage with a tower connecting the two buildings. The present building will be used for purposes of worship. The new building will be devoted to the use of the Sunday School and for all social and recreational purposes. It will provide for departmental Sunday School work, having separate class-rooms for each class. It will also have a large play-room with shuffle-boards, quoits, handball court, bowling alley and shower baths. The building will also have a Young Men's Club room, and a library and reading room for the young women's organizations. A standard-size gymnasium will be on the top floor, with a stage for home talent plays. The motion-picture equipment will be taken from the Church auditorium, where it has been in use, and placed in the new building. In this way the one building will be used strictly for worship, and the other for the social and educational programs.

The committee is determined to make the People's Church plant one of the most modern and best equipped in the State. The new structure, in combination with the present building, will make an imposing edifice of which the community and the denomination may well be proud. This is the greatest opportunity the Christian denomination has ever had in this State, and the fact that it is the only Christian Church in Delaware aside from two or three small mission churches, makes the present program of People's Church a unique opportunity for the Christian denomination to make its progressive principles known throughout the State. Being an army man, and having had nearly two years' experience as an officer with our men in France and on the Mexican border, I am convinced that the reason so many young men have such little regard for the Church is the fact that its program has been too one-sided.

People's Church believes that it will be able to enlarge its service to the entire community, and especially to the young people of the community, by launching out in a larger way on a program that includes the educational, the social and the recreational life of the young people in addition to the purely religious which at all times will receive the major emphasis as it should.

Respectfully submitted,

J. HENRY HAZEL.

IN MEMORY OF MR. HOBBY.

On March 6, 1844, Simeon C. Hobby was born in Wake County, N. C., and departed this life from his home at Raleigh, N. C., in the early morning of February 28, 1923, thus lacking six days of completing his seventy-ninth year.

Two sisters survive him—Mrs. Overby, of McCullers, N. C., and Mrs. Woodall, of Durham, N. C. On December 6, 1866, he was married to Miss Bettie Allen, of Wake County, and to this union were born ten children, of whom eight survive—W. B., W. R., J. T., and S. M. Hobby, all of Wake County; Mrs. M. A. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; Mrs. W. L. Wells, Portsmouth, Va.; Mrs. C. E. Boman, Raleigh, N. C., and Mrs. B. W. Setzer, Washington, D. C.

He made a profession of faith and united with the Church about twenty-five years ago, and at the time of his decease was a most loyal, true and devoted member of Wentworth Christian Church, McCullers, N. C. Brother Hobby's was a life of deeds and of devotion rather than of words and emotion. He was a modest, unassuming, but strong, steadfast and stalwart Christian citizen. Successful in business and prosperous in affairs, he never forgot his duty to his fellowman nor wavered in his loyalty and devotion to his Church and to his God. He was a man of many benevolences and charities which the world and his own closest friends knew not of. He was especially fond of the Christian orphanage and loved the saving work for the needy that it was doing. Though living many miles from his Church, every preaching day found him an intense listener and a devout worshiper at the hour of service. A most fond and devoted father of a large family, most thoughtful and considerate husband, an exemplary friend and neighbor, he served well the day and generation in which he lived, made the world richer and better because of his living, and quietly and peacefully fell on sleep with perfect faith in the God to whom he had long since given his heart and pledged a loyalty of his deepest and sincerest devotions. His going was in the quiet of the early morning and without a struggle. From the pillow on which the evening before he had lain himself down to rest and sweet sleep, only to be awakened in the resurrection morn, his soul went back to that God who gave it.

The funeral services were conducted from Wentworth Christian Church at 2:30 P. M., March 1st, by the writer, assisted by Dr. White, of the First Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, N. C. A great concourse of friends and neighbors gathered to pay tribute of respect and bring their flowers and tears to express their sympathy for the bereaved and their devotion to the departed. The interment was in the family burial ground eight miles out from Raleigh at the home of the eldest son, W. B. Hobby. The deceased had made every preparation against his going, had caused his tombstone to be erected, and for the past few years in particular had devoted much of his thought and concern to the better life beyond. He realized that "As truly as the Lord liveth and as the soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death," and had ordered his life accordingly. Of all Scripture, the 1st Psalm was his favorite, and scarcely a day passed that he did not take comfort from the warning, the counsel and the glorious promise contained therein. Truly and surely had he learned that that man is blest indeed "who walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, but whose delight is in the law of the Lord"; for he realized in his own heart and expressed the truth that "such a man is like a tree planted by the rivers of water, whose fruit cometh in season, whose leaf shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, and to walk therein is the way of joy and salvation in this life and in the life to come. The heart-broken wife, the loving, affectionate sons and daughters know well the rewards that awaited him and where they shall find him when their summons shall come to go home. J. O. ATKINSON.

It looks a little like Bethlehem College may go to Virginia for its first president. That enterprise is stirring our Georgia and Alabama brethren mightily. The yare awake and at work perhaps as never before. It is the undertaking of a great task that is bringing them to their best, and we wish them great success. It will be the beginning of a new day to them when they get the college once started.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—I see it is now announced that radio photography is an accomplished fact. Do you believe it is true?—A. C.

Yes, it seems to be true. They say now that without a wire to aid in the work it is not only possible to receive a message, but also to see the faces of the senders. This achievement has been predicted for some time, but it really did not seem possible, and yet it is now an accomplished fact—at least, the papers so announce it. The achievements of science command the admiration of the world in this day. Bear in mind, however, that the claims of science and the achievements of science are two things. When this radio photography was predicted, that put us under no obligation to believe it, but when it was an accomplished fact, then we must believe it. Much of what is called science is simply the speculation of a wild brain. That we are not called on to believe, but when science accomplishes a great victory in real achievement, then we have something we can count on. So it seems that radio photography is an accomplished fact. It may be possible at no distant day to get messages from your friends and loved ones, and at the same time be permitted to see the faces of the senders. That is nothing short of marvelous!

Question.—What is all this we see so much in the papers of King Tut-Ankh-Amen?—R. A. R.

Well, Tut-Ankh-Amen was one of the ancient kings of Messopotamia. He died, it is believed, perhaps as early as the birth of Abraham. Representatives of the University of Pennsylvania, in digging, discovered the tomb of this king. They also discovered a temple which some claim to be twice as old as the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen. These two recent discoveries have awakened a world-wide interest. The work of the Archaeologists is now counted upon more than ever by the people because they have really done some rare things. The temple discovered is perhaps the oldest piece of human architecture in the world. It seems that excavations in Mesopotamia have been very fruitful in revealing perhaps the earliest civilization now known to the human family. It is said that the temple they have discovered was not a temple for the worship of the true God, but built and dedicated to the worship of the Moon, and it is believed to be the oldest thing yet discovered among the buried treasures of the long ago.

Question.—Are none of the European governments making any more progress toward recovery from the disaster of the world war than Germany seems to be making?—C. B.

Yes, Austria's work of reconstruction seems to be doing remarkably well, under the guidance of the League of Nations. Dr. Elford Zimmerman, a Dutch banker, was appointed high commissioner at Vienna. He began his work in October, after the plan of putting Austria on its feet was sanctioned by the council of the league. Dr. Zimmerman's latest report shows that the inflation of the currency was stopped last November by the printing of paper crowns, and that the cost of living in Austria has fallen each month since, and that the deposits in the savings banks are steadily increasing. They have also begun to cut expenses in the affairs of the government. The government has dismissed twenty-five thousand officials. That in itself will mean a great savings, but of course it increases the burden of unemployment—it leaves a great many people one hundred and twenty-five thousand men out of employment. The new Austrian bank began operations January 2, with a capital of thirty million gold crowns. The entire sum being taken by the people and government of Austria. This bank is to finance the loans authorized by the council of the League of Nations last October. The loans will ultimately run to six hundred and fifty million gold crowns. That is equal to $150,000,000 in our money. Eighty-four per cent of this has been already guaranteed by England, France, Italy and Czecho-Slovakia. So it would seem that Austria is taking the lead in getting her work of reconstruction well under way, and the people are encouraged.

Question.—I hear it hinted that the Baptist people are making the greatest advance as a people. Can you tell me if this is true?—Teacher.

To say that our Baptist brethren are making the greatest advance of all the denominations is perhaps going a bit too far, but they are undoubtedly making great advances along lines of their own peculiar world. The Baptist Year-Book for 1922 tells us that in America they have 2,188 associations, 61,936 churches, 43,486 ministers, 384,197 baptisms last year. They have 8,107,371 members, 48,572 Bible schools; they have enrolled in these Bible schools 4,489,221 pupils; they gave in all their givings in 1922 $70,799,908, of which $23,093,732 went for missions, education and other forms of benevolence. In the United States the Methodists have forged ahead of the Baptists, but by less than 100,000. This item will give our readers, and Teacher especially, some conception of what these two denominations are doing.

Question.—What is meant by the Pan-American Conference which we are told is soon to meet in Santiago, Chile?

Pan-American simply means all-American. So we are to understand that the conference in Santiago, Chile, now soon to assemble, will be a conference of all of the Americans, to consider what may be mutually good for all. This is not the first conference of this kind. In 1889 the first Pan-American Conference was held, with Hon. James G. Blaine as leader. It was in session about eight months in discussions. It adopted one treaty on arbitration, but it was never approved by any government. The one thing it accomplished was the establishment of what is known as the Pan-American Union. The second Pan-American Conference was held in Mexico City in 1901. It approved about seven different conventions, but the governments there represented did not approve but very few, if any, of these acts. The third Pan-American Conference was held in Rio de Janeiro in 1908. Hon. Elihu Root was the leading representative of our government. That conference made an agreement to arbitrate pecuniary claims and other commercial treaties. The fourth conference was held in Buenos Aires in 1910, but did not accomplish any great things. Let us hope that the conference soon to assemble in Santiago, Chile, may be more fortunate in doing some great things for good.

Question.—Much is being said of the extravagance of North Carolina's last Legislature. Can you tell us briefly just what was done and how much is the debt now on the State of North Carolina?—Tarheel.

Some one has made a brief resume of the financial side of the late session of the North Carolina Legislature. Perhaps I can do no better than give you, in answer to your question, this brief resume, which follows: "Important things done.—The total number of bills introduced was 1,896. Of these, 1,195 were enacted into law, and 701 were killed. A bond issue of $15,000,000 was authorized for the continuation of the work on the roads, with a two-cent additional gasoline tax to pay interest on the bonds. There was a bond issue of $10,667,500 for permanent improvement at the several institutions of the State. Appropriations of $15,000,000 was made for the maintenance of the institutions of the State and the departments of the State government. The mothers' aid bill was passed, appropriating $50,000 to any county, provided the county will raise a similar amount, to aid widowed mothers in the care of their children. A bill was passed submitting to popular vote the question of issuing bonds to the amount of $2,500,000 to be lent to veterans of the late war for purchasing homes. To build a railroad in the west, a $10,000,000 bond issue was authorized. A $500,000 bond issue was provided for fisheries. It will be seen that the late General Assembly was lavish in its appropriations. When it met the bonded indebtedness of the State was, as before stated, $74,631,598. This Legislature added to this enormous sum $36,167,000, making our bonded indebtedness now $110,798,598."

That $110,798,598 is a frightful thing to look upon, especially is it so to the taxpayers—there is no one else to pay this enormous debt but the taxpayers of North Carolina. Our law-makers seem to be handling the money of the people with a lavish hand, but woe be to North Carolina law-makers when the taxpayers once get fully aroused on this matter!—Editor.

SHALL WE HAVE A LEAGUE OF NATIONS?

The League of Nations Non-Partisan Association, of which former Justice John H. Clarke of the United States Supreme Court and former Attorney General George W. Wickersham are presiding officers, has organized a committee on churches, of which Dr. Charles S. Macfarland is chairman.

The committee plans to submit to the entire clergy of the United States, in printed form, a statement of the basis, aims and achievements of the League of Nations in an effort to enlist the aid of the Church forces in developing an independent, non-partisan cultivation of public opinion on that very important subject—a public opinion which will "induce the present administration, or if not this, the next one, to enter the League of Nations on such terms as to such administration may seem wise, provided only that they be consistent with our Constitution and consonant with the dignity and honor, the moral responsibility and power of our republic."

The statement just issued by the League of Nations Non-Partisan Association points out that, in view of the advance of the means of destruction of life and property in war, the preservation of liberty and civilization requires that corresponding advance be made in governmental co-operation designed to make an end of war, and that some league, or union, or association of nations is the only form of international organization yet proposed that is adequate to accomplish this end.

The committee consists of prominent churchmen throughout the country, among them being Rev. James L. Barton, Rabbi Edward N. Calisch, Rev. Charles F. Carter, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, Rev. Frank Oliver Hall, Rev. William Pierson Merrill, Rev. Lewis S. Mudge, Rev. R. C. Reed, Rev. J. Rose Stevenson, Bishop Luther B. Wilson, and about seventy-five other representative Church officials and pastors.

THE LAITY.

In a recent issue of the SUN, Brother Bradshaw had some very complimentary words for one of my parishioners, Dr. Job G. Holland. In passing, it is worthy of note that he is one of the bad boys—his father was a preacher. Rev. Robert H. Holland preached in many of our Eastern Virginia Christian Churches and assisted in the organization of several, among them Hebron, at Carrsville. In 1890-91 he was a member of the committee which proposed to accomplish the removal of the Church from Carrsville and its location in Holland as the Holland Christian Church. He then became its first pastor. But it is of the son I wish to write, and really not of him so much as what he represents.

Dr. Holland is not only an ideal layman, but he is an excellent one. Not only does he quickly and generously respond to the call for help from Bro. Bradshaw, but he also quickly and generously responds to every appeal from his pastor and his local Church. I am quite sure, too, that his name is on the roll of donors to every cause our Convention has presented to its constituency. But, more, Dr. Holland is regular in his attendance at prayer meeting, at Sunday School, at Christian Endeavor, and at the services of worship. He comes frequently when perhaps he ought not to come, for a physician often taxes his strength to the limit in his service of healing.

A generous act prompted this tribute, but it is not a tribute to Dr. Holland alone. In our Holland Church we have many, and quite a group of young men and women, who are both loyal and generous to their Church and its interests, and deeply consecrated to the service of the Master. They are not saints of the old order, but of the new, and they are a great inspiration to their pastor. I am quite sure they do me more good than I do them.

I sometimes feel we preachers do not appreciate as we should the splendid men and women of our Churches. We frequently throw up our hands in despair and leave for greener fields, but they stay on, holding on, believing on, and praying on. I will never forget a little band of men and women, chiefly women, at the Callainer Church, Indiana. Sunday after Sunday they would gather at the Church. Preacher after preacher would leave. But they sang and prayed and taught—a pilgrim band. I weathered one year. The next year we had a revival, and it was the victory of that little band. I will never forget, either, the official members of the Memorial Christian Temple. I will never serve with a finer group. My! how they endeavored to hold up my arms. Frequently I hear rumors of doubt as to the necessity or the wisdom of the merger of the Temple and the Third Church, but if these doubters had fellowshipped for over a year, as I did with that small group of loyal and royal men, they would have no such doubts today. When with them, I always felt the humblest had something I lacked—a very fine thing, for I am not sure I could have been loyal as they had been through these years of discouragement.

And the women! What would our churches do without them and their utter loyalty? Oh, yes, they sometimes stir up a whirlwind, but it soon evolves into a south wind. Their difficulties usually arises from trying to do too much. And then some man who never tries to do anything for his Church pipes up with, "Oh, the women"!

One night at my Booneville Church, another of our Indiana churches, I simply could not go on with my sermon. I had absolutely nothing more to say. I stopped abruptly, and after stating I could not go on with my sermon, I pronounced the benediction. Before leaving the Church, a dear old lady came to me and said: "James, I want to hear you finish that sermon some time." I guess the Lord sent her, for I had determined on my way from the pulpit to where she met me to never preach again.

And so it has always been. Some sainted woman with deep insight and the tender voice. Some consecrated woman unafraid.

But, alas! there are the others, too. We have them in the Holland Church. Men and women who never go to Church and who act, if they have been finally persuaded into giving ten cents, as if they had eaten green apples and drank wormwood. But I love them, too; and oh, if I could only love them into the kingdom, into the presence of the Christ, into the vision of service.

Holland, Va. J. H. LIGHTBOURNE.

THE CONTINUITY OF LIFE.

The one supreme, dominant, compelling purpose of life is to live; in a thousand forms, ages and peoples. The great passion in life should not be to produce a great work, but a great life. The exaltation of life is the remedy for all the evils that threaten the race. All our reformations have been attempts to change the flavor and quality of the fruit after it is ripening on the tree. We should change the tree. Man only has a right to a place and part in life here and hereafter, when he seeks to perfect that life.

The soul demands the continuity of life. There is a universal desire, belief and hope in a future life. How did all human beings from time immemorial get this opinion? Surely not by revelation or reason, but by intuition—an intuitive consciousness placed in the inner nature by the supreme Lawgiver, felt as a desire and a fact. I am not to die, no never; nothing makes me more sure. It is more probable that our life should continue forever than once to begin and then suddenly end; that there exists beings superior to man; that we do not exhaust the possibilities of the universe, and that these are recruited from the rank and file of human beings. Since the race cannot divorce itself from this innate desire for immortality, there must be a corresponding gratification.

This life is incomplete where we assume ultimate completeness and maturity to be the goal. There are stupendous possibilities unfilled. Incompleteness is stamped upon every human enterprise; none but the faultless Redeemer could ever dare to say, at the close of life's labors: "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." The lines, structures and arches of our hopes—the whole direction of our aims—seem to indicate completion elsewhere. We dream of eternity, crave for higher than we reach and gaze beyond the utmost limit of our powers to attain.

There is a supreme passion among all men for infinite justice. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right"? Not if what we see is all there is. We need an after-life to vindicate the cause of the many. How incredible that the properties of the soul should perish! We resent the destruction of the material which may be again reorganized into the lily or the rose, but how much more should we resent the annihilation of the imagination, conscience, affections and will if this could ever be true. How intolerable that the work, sacrifice, endurance and influence of all the world's divinest men! Why all this striving, painful, pitiful sacrifices on crosses, in fire, to wild beasts, in dungeons, exiled, hated, vilified, cast out, if its merits and rewards did not reach beyond this material world? We love to think that the downtrodden millions who trusted in God did not call upon Him in vain; that those who struggled to plant the standard of truth a few furlongs further into chaos should see that it paid and, oh! how well.

We live in the minds and estimation of others. The sainted dead who have lived among us, have inspired us to new life and activities, making the moral atmosphere better. Their work and influence will live on through the coming ages. They speak to us in a thousand remembrances, incidents, events and associations. How can we change time into a life which shall never end, is the deepest question of the ages. Jesus said: "This is life eternal, to know Thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." To be in perfect correspondence with a perfect environment is eternal life. To know God and to be in communion with Him through Christ is eternal life. Christ is in all lovers of good; a living force of example, stirring their feelings, directing their efforts and molding their characters—a well of water springing up into everlasting life. S. L. BEOUGHER.

BROTHER WHITE AGAIN HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PARISHIONER.

MY DEAR BROTHER WHITE:

I take great pleasure in answering your last letter, although I have kept you in suspense for some time; but as you know this is one of my failings. When I wrote your last letter I was suffering severely with an abscess in my ear, so this likely accounts partly for the miserable way I talked. However, I am not making any apology, as this is against my nature to do so, and yours too, for you never took anything back you ever said to us. "There is a Divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them as you may," and there is a mission in suffering, whether we are able to see it or not. Paul said: "Those light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work for us an eternal weight of glory."

Now, get ready for the shock, for you will be amazingly, and at the same time agreeably, surprised to hear that since my last letter to you I have become a whole (-hearted) subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the two best papers for the membership of the Christian Church in the religious world, with Dr. J. P. Barrett, editor of THE SUN, and Dr. Alva Martin Kerr, editor of the Herald, who measure up to the highest standard of Christian character and who are fully equipped for their work, as you will find any in the Christian denomination, or in any religious denomination for that matter. This is what makes these papers worth reading and worthy of a place in every home. Of course, when I say this I am not underrating the work of Prof. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of THE SUN, and John H. Stewart, manager of Herald, and the host of contributors to both papers, who are showing a high degree of efficiency in their respective line of work. I am pleading that our ministers have a larger hearing for their sermons, but I want to make a more urgent entreaty for a larger reading of our Church papers. Brother White, I must be just getting awake, for I see now that we are circumscribing the power of our editors and contributors by such a limited subscription, but what can I do, since you have put THE SUN in almost every home on this charge, "I am resolved what to do, I will arise" and put the Herald of Gospel Liberty in those homes also, for what could I do more to benefit this community?

In replying more fully to your letter I would state that you might be mistaken in thinking that you had arrived at "a very satisfactory answer to one of my very puzzling questions: Why the pastor did not report anything to the Church paper"? Your answer might be satisfactory to you, but it does not gratify my conviction that the reason might be elsewhere. I am aware of the fact that modesty prevents a pastor from writing about himself and the work he is doing, and have it appear in the paper with his name signed to it, and the reasons why we are reluctant to do so are: First, it would fill him with pride and make him less qualified for his work; second, he would ask a larger salary next year if he conceived the idea that we thought he was above the average pastor; third, it would hurt the feelings of our former pastor to state in THE SUN that the work was succeeding so much better, since we had secured a new pastor.

I deplore the fact as much as you do that our people have not any more sense, and no more religion and no more regard for the pastor's feelings and ability, and no more thought for the standing of the Church in the community than to send away for a preacher to conduct the funerals of their friends and perform the marriage ceremony of their sons and daughters; but what did you do to prevent it? You never said a word; of course, you did not dare to and hold your job. You preached about the sins of the Jews and the sins of Americans, such as drunkenness, lawlessness, sorcery, fornication, murder, idolatry, lying and such like; but you were brought face to face with one of the most contemptiable, disgracing and at the same time humiliating sins of the Church and community, and yet you said nothing about it. Why did you not thunder out against it, job or no job. Like the man who was offered a pair of boots if he did not shout in Church next Sunday, but when the preacher got to soaring in the clouds he said: "Here goes it, boots or no boots, glory to God." We knew our Church needed painting as well as you did, and yet you never insisted on us getting it done, possibly because you knew we were poor and had a hard time to raise your salary, and to take on this extra expense might mean that you would be behind on your salary that much at the end of the year.

You were always talking revivals, but you never felt competent to conduct one yourself; you always advocated an evangelist, which incurred an extra expense on the Church, and when he had gone you could not find half of "his converts." While I was converted in a meeting of this kind, I am not quite sure that it is the best method of winning souls to Christ and the Church. I am more in favor of that sort of a revival which holds the Church at a white heat 365 days in the year—a personal evangelistic effort put forth to the end that we have accessions to the Church every service. While it required quite an effort on your part to line us up for a special revival and to decide on the time, a personal evangelistic campaign rightly planned to extend throughout the entire year, would have been taken by common consent.

Your common expression from the pulpit was, "Go to work! why don't you go to work"? But you never told us what to do. I believe in having a program and working to it. Since I have been taking the Herald of Gospel Liberty I see that we have an evangelistic department in the Christian Church, which furnishes free helps for just the kind of work I am now advocating, and they may be procured from Rev. McD. Howsare, Dayton, Ohio. If I were a pastor I would plan my work and organize my Church so as to realize the greatest power of religious efficiency. I would have commissions to take care of every phase of the work, such as evangelistic, visitation and membership, publicity, social reception, spiritual, financial, decoration, pastoral, Men and Millions, Christian education, music, organization and on the state of the Church.

I would like to sit down right now and dictate a letter to be sent to each member of our Church, something like this: "We are planning to conduct a personal evangelistic campaign, to continue throughout the year. We want first to interest our own members, for we know how hard it is to invite others to hear the Gospel message, when we are conscious of the fact that half of our own members are not coming. If we had the attendance of our own membership at the services we could say with good grace, "Come thou with us and we will do you good, for God has spoken good concerning Israel." If you believe that the world needs the Church, you have but one clear, unmistakable and unanswerable way of stating it, that is by regular Church attendance. The person who goes to Church stands for one indispensable institution, even as a good citizen stands by the State by voting. Let us work for better Christian living, for there is no greater hindrance to the progress of the Gospel than inconsistent and half-hearted Christian living. So the prime requisite to the success of this campaign is the revival of the Church itself. If you would make your life count you must be among those upon whom the Church can count. Be at Church next Sunday. "Undertake great things for God and expect great things from Him"—pray, trust and work. Don't think that I am trying to advise you ministers what to do, but I will say this, that the Church, with all of its auxiliaries, is where it is today for lack of leadership, with consecration, vision and a program.

Your suggestions are worth while. I would not censure any of them, but I want to make a little comment upon them. I have headed several pound parties, but I never approved of them. I have always wanted to give the pastor the cash and let him buy what he needed most. If the pastor's family does not drink coffee, he gets more of that than anything else. Of course, this never happened at our Church, but I have heard of folks giving rotten apples, frozen potatoes, soured canned fruit, hollow pumpkins, old hens —or, in other words, just the things they don't want themselves. Let them give money and they will give something they do want and want bad, and something the pastor will appreciate and be more than pleased to report.

When I mentioned reporting the activities of the Church to THE SUN, I did not mean for my name to appear in the reports. I am not seeking popularity, if I can through my meagre efforts develop a character that shall be of any value to the Church, community and my present and eternal welfare, I shall be satisfied. Horace Greeley said: "Fame is vapor, popularity an accident, riches take wings, those who cheer today will curse tomorrow, only one thing endures—character." It is at the foundation of civil security, the progress and civilization of nations depend upon individual character. Character is everything to a man. If lost, he may weigh as much and know as much, may be as wise and as zealous, may have as much property and as prominent a station as before; but his influence for good is gone forever—there is no real place for him in the universe.

Now, Brother White, I have never coveted riches for their own sake, but, believe me, since I am getting my eyes open, I would like to have quite a "wad" of the "filthy lucre," to see what I could do with it. As it is, there are so many calls upon my purse, that I have to spread it out pretty thin in places. I pay Federal tax, State tax, county tax, city tax, income tax, war tax, pole tax, dog tax and flivver tax. I am called upon for money for the pastor's salary, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and all the incidentals of the Church. I contribute to the Men and Millions, our colleges, missions, the children's home, the old soldiers of South Carolina, woman's relief, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Boy Scouts, the Near East Relief, the Salvation Army and to every hospital in town. I sometimes feel about like the man who was called upon for his income tax during the war; he said: "The government had governed his property, so he did not know who owned it; he was aspected, expected, suspected, examined, re-examined, informed, required and commanded so he did not know who he was, where he was, or what he was. All he knew was that he was supposed to be an inexhaustible supply of money for every known need of the human race, and because he would not sell all he had, go out and beg, borrow and steal money to give away, he was cussed, discussed, boycotted, talked to, talked about, held up, hung up, robbed and ruined; and the only reason he was hanging on to life was to see what was coming next." This man did not realize what money is for. If it cannot be transformed into character by helping humanity, it has no eternal value at all; we can only take with us what we have put into soul-life, which will live through the ages. Since I have been reading Dr. J. O. Atkinson's and Dr. W. W. Staley's articles in THE SUN on Men and Millions, I now see where the money is going to—education, missions, publications, orphanage, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and the Convention. Now, I am highly in favor of the existence and continuation of all of these departments and I see clearly that they cannot exist unless we do our part, and the man who does not pay his pledge, if he can, is robbing God and the Church, and in turn robbing himself of the power received through cheerful giving. Oh, I wish I had a million dollars to give to the Men and Millions! but I have not, so I will give what God expects of me out of what I have. And, in conclusion, I want to say, I would not belittle my good name by neglecting or refusing to pay my pledge to the Men and Millions.

Yours truly,

SIMON ABE.

We have received a copy of a new book by Rev. J. T. Whitley, D. D., the title of which is "Filled With Messages From Thee." The book contains 138 pages, is neatly bound in cloth. We are reading this book with real interest and for several reasons. In the first place, Dr. Whitley is an able writer, and withal he is interesting, and has been from his young manhood. The book is beautifully dedicated, as follows: "To the wife of my youth, who still walks with me toward the eternal sunrise." Most of us are apt to think of the latter days of life as walking toward the sunset of life, but Dr. Whitley has it in better shape, when he says we are walking toward the eternal sunrise. The book contains thirty-eight messages, well calculated to stimulate the Christian to press on toward the eternal sunrise. Dr. Whitley is well known to many of our people, especially of the long ago. When he was a boy he served as what was then known as the "printer's devil" in THE CHRISTIAN SUN office in Suffolk, Va., but the garments of that functionary were soon too small for him, and as he walked out of them he went off to college, and on his return he put on the garments of a full-fledged preacher and editor, and to this day he cannot get away from the pen and the ink bottle, and the beauty of it is he handles them so well. Send and get a copy of his book. Send to Rev. J. T. Whitley, D. D., 228 Thirty-sixth Street, Norfolk, Va. The price is $1.00 per copy.

News reaches us that our friend and brother, Rev. I. M. Hoel, Tuscola, Ill., has been quite sick for several weeks. The last report indicated that he is now well on the way to recovery. We sincerely wish him well.

With this issue of THE SUN, the contest for prizes begins.

The Inspiring Example of Joseph.

The story of the life of Joseph is one of the favorite stories of the Bible. He appeals as a strong, clean character. Every obstacle, he overcomes through the force of his personality and the strength of his character. He believed in God, and through His power He saved his own people. The story in Genesis should be read as a whole to feel its appeal. Joseph appears in four distinct roles, which, taken together, make a story that is both interesting and inspiring.

1. Joseph, the Dutiful Son.

Joseph was the son of Rachel, the bride for whom Jacob served fourteen years, and the favorite of his father. This preference was shown so plainly that it aroused jealousy in the minds and hearts of his ten half-brothers. As a lad of seventeen, Joseph helped in the fields. That he was trustworthy is shown when his father sent him to far distant pastures to see his brothers, and report how they were faring. From Sechem he went on to Dothan, and from there was sold to the traders from Gilead. After years of absence, his first question after making himself known to his brothers was "Doth my father yet live"? And when he met him, Joseph wept. His affection for the father was very strong. In his whole life he had honored him, and when Jacob came to his death bed, he called upon God to bless mightily this one whom he called "a prince among his brethren" or "one separate from his brethren." The blessing promised to one who honored father and mother came to Joseph.—Ex. 20:12; Eph. 6:2.

2. Joseph, the Faithful Slave and Prisoner.

When the jealous brothers had sold Joseph to the men of the caravan, no doubt they thought that they had seen the last of him. No more would they be taunted by the dreams which he had told them so innocently. A slave in the luxury of the Egyptian palace, he did not seem destined to any high place in the world. Still less, after being unjustly thrown into prison, did his career seem promising. But wherever Joseph found himself he was faithful to his duty. Trusting in God, he found somebody to help. Here lay the secret of his promotion each time. Jesus taught: "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much." Training for larger service is obtained in the faithful performance of duties right at hand. In prison, where many a man would have been discouraged completely, Joseph found the baker and the butler and interpreted their dreams, with God's help. It was two years after that when Pharaoh dreamed the dream, which the prisoner was called to reveal the meaning of. In his little booklet, "The God-Planned Life," that Christian layman, James McConkey, advises: "Stay where you are and do the next thing. God's plan for a man's life does not of necessity lift him out from his present realm of life and surroundings. It is not a new sphere God is seeking. It is a new man in the present sphere! God may take you out of your business or profession, and send you to the uttermost parts of the earth as a chosen messenger of His. But how will this come about? As you do the next thing." So Joseph was promoted—just by being faithful to God, in doing the next thing.

Joseph, the Wise Ruler.

"It is naot in me, God will give Pharoah an answer." That was the spirit in which Joseph told Pharoah of the coming famine, and with which he assumed the position next to that of the king. His plans for food conservation saved not only Egypt, but neighboring countries. The palace was the last place where his brothers would have thought of looking for him. There are boys and girls in surroundings today which look as unpromising as the prison walls which held Joesph. There are future rulers in humble homes. The boys and girls who learn to trust God have a power in their own lives which will help to lift their lives to places of influence and service and honor. A Christian character can help them more than any other possession. Is your Church school aiming to give them this safeguard and help in life?

Joseph, the Forgiving Brother.

The ones who had cast him into the pit and sold him as a slave in a foreign land were forced to come to Joseph for bread to keep them alive. So positions are reversed. The grain was given, and on the second journey, by the ruler's strange command, Benjamin was brought to the palace. After testing them, by the arrest, the brothers were brought back to the presence of Joseph, and Judah, the same brother who had suggested selling him to the traders, made such a passionate plea for the life of Benjamin that Joseph revealed his identity in the simple words: "I am Joseph." He did not want them to grieve nor sorrow for their act regarding him. He regarded it in the light that God had sent him to Egypt in order to save their lives in the great famine.

"He sent a man before them; Joseph was sold for a servant."—Ps. 105:17.

A home in Egypt was offered to them, and Jacob gladly came down to spend his last days near his beloved son. They came with the approval and favor of Pharaoh, the ruler of Egypt. A family was reunited. After Jacob's death, Joseph showed his forgiving spirit when his brothers feared that he would take vengeance upon them for their sin. "Fear not; for am I in the place of God? . . . ye meant evil, but God meant it for good * * * therefore fear ye not." The spirit of Christian forgiveness is one of the most appealing characteristics of this hero of Israel.

As a Son, faithful and loving to his father; as a brother, ready to forgive and to minister; as a slave and prisoner, faithful to God and man; and as a ruler, wise in policy and kind in his dealings—the life story of Joseph presents a story to be known and loved, and lived in the twentieth century.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

April 15, 1923.

How Can we Become Truly Educated?—Prov. 4:1-9.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Father and mother are our first teachers. Their instruction has the first opportunity to impress the childish mind. The greatest blessing that can be given to a child is a godly home.—Verse 1.

Forsake not the teaching of a Christian father. Neglect not the lessons which come from the Heavenly Father, whose teaching is always for your good.—Verse 2.

Mother-love helps us to become truly educated, or to develop into our best. Mr. Cheley tells of a Bible class discussion of the various translations of the Bible in which their relative merits were presented. One young man declared: "I prefer my mother's translation of the Bible myself to any other version. I mean that my mother translated the Bible into the language of daily life for me ever since I was old enough to understand it. She translates it straight, too, and gives its full meaning. Whatever printed version of the Bible I may study, my mother's is always the one that clears up my difficulties."—Verse 3.

God's commandments are a vital part of true education. A man's mind may be highly developed, but unless guided and motivated by Christian impulses, the education may harm and cause harm to others. Education without religious motive is a dangerous power. "Keep my commandments" is the command necessary to be heeded if a man is to live at his best.—Verse 4.

Knowledge of facts in books does not constitute all of education. Wisdom is more than knowledge. An understanding use of knowledge is true education.—Verse 5.

Ruskin defined education thus: "Education is the leading human souls to what is best, and the making what is best out of them." Such education brings honor, for such education must be based on the "beginning of wisdom," which is the "fear of the Lord." Education to be vital cannot be separated from faith in God. Christian education links together the two greatest forces in the molding of character—religion and education. True Christian education brings honor and happiness and all that is worth while and best in life.

"Education is the knowledge of how to use the whole of one-self."—Henry Ward Beecher.

All education is not received in schools, but schooling is a tremendous help. The United States Commissioner of Education is authority for the statement that the chances of success, in respect to securing and holding the most influential positions in a highly civilized community, are, for properly educated persons, as 250 to 1 over the uneducated. Every boy and girl should secure all the schooling that he possibly can, as a valuable aid toward a fruitful life.

"Education is not a question alone of preparing great men for great things, but of preparing even little men for greater things than would otherwise be possible."—Lucy E. Keeler.

"What sculpture is to a block of marble, education is to a human soul."—Joseph Addison.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Six members may discuss the topics, given under the daily readings by the United Society of Christian Endeavor:

1. Study Nature.—Job 26:1-14.
2. Study the Bible.—Acts 17:10-15.
3. Study Yourself.—Heb. 3:12-19.
4. Practice What You Know.—Luke 11:46-54.
5. Read.—Eph. 3:1-7.
6. Meditate.—Ps. 77:10-20.

Ask a Sunday School leader to speak on "How the Sunday School Helps one to be Truly Educated."

Emphasize the part played by our Christian colleges in providing an opportunity for education, under Christian surroundings, and with the inculcating of Christian ideals. Tell of the part which Elon and Bethlehem Colleges must plan in the South. Invite all former Elon students to take part in the meeting, and have a high school boy or girl speak on "Why I Want to Go to One of Our Colleges." The Elon song sheet furnishes songs which might be used in connection with this topic, especially, "Praises, Elon, Unto Thee," written by Rev. A. B. Kendall, and sung to the tune of America:

"Loud praises ever be,
Dear Elon, unto thee,
Our dear E. C.
Fair daughters, ev'ry one,
Thy stalwart, noble sons,
Praise for thy vict'ries won,
Praise, praise to thee!

"Mother of mighty souls,
Thee would our tongues extol,
Our hearts are thine.
We love thy time-worn walls;
We love thy sacred halls;
On us thy spirit falls
With touch divine.

"Father of spirits free,
Bless thou our dear E. C.
With Thy rich grace.
Keep all her children true,
Make strong to dare and do,
Bring them life's battles thro
To see Thy face."

Suggested Hymns.—"More About Jesus I Would Know," "Worship the King," "Break Thou the Bread," "Take Time to be Holy," "Jesus Saves," "Something for Jesus."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

Old Zion is planning to start a teacher training class, using the standard three-year course.

Rev. E. B. Flory has been teaching a class in story-telling in his Church for the past two months.

Mr. R. W. Spruill is the leader of thirty-two Boy Scouts at South Norfolk. The work is closely linked with that of the Church and every one of the boys will pray in public.

Miss Beatrice George is the superintendent of an active bunch of Junior Endeavorers at South Norfolk.

Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will be held at Rock Stand, April 21-22. A missionary rally will be held at Pleasant Grove, April 28-29.

Ocean View has a Sunday School and two Christian Endeavor Societies doing good work. A Junior Choir of twenty-three sang at evening service March 18th, when the field secretary spoke.

The series of institutes in the Eastern Virginia Conference opened at Old Zion Church, Lambert's Point, Saturday, March 17th. The meetings continue daily in different sections for two weeks.

Richmond Sunday School classes recently set a goal for 50 per cent increase in the enrollment of each class. Two classes have reached the goal —the Girls' Intermediate Class, taught by Mrs. W. F. Holmes, and the Beginners, taught by Miss Janie Pierce.

First Christian Church, Berkley, has a well-organized Primary-Beginners' Department, with Miss Elizabeth Brothers as Superintendent and Mrs. Allen as assistant. First Church is also proud of its junior choir, which leads the Sunday School music.

Newport News is a "Christian Endeavor Church." The membership of the new Intermediate Society has increased from ten to twenty-three. The Junior Society has won the banner of the Union on the Peninsula. Mrs. Hyatt is superintendent of both societies, and the pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp, is teaching two Junior Endeavor expert classes at the present time.

COMMITTEE.

AGAIN FROM CARROL COUNTY.

We left Portsmouth September 26th. Turning our property over to the storage man, we left all behind except clothing, some books and a few necessary articles. My people making mother's as their home for the time being. I waiting over for my ordination, and a few other necessary preparations. Preaching once at Antioch, Mt. Carmel, and Line Pine. On Tuesday, October 10th, I said good by to wife, children, mother, sister and many loved ones and friends that are near and dear to me. (Only those that have taken such departures known what it really is—they speak about it, but know very little.) I left from Franklin by the way of Henderson and Durham, reached Elon College that night and stayed over with my sister, Mrs. Flora Joyner, for the night. I left there on the early morning bus for Greensboro, where I caught the 8 o'clock train for Mt. Airy, reaching there about noon. Here I knew no one, but after some little waiting I bargained with a man to take me out to Fancy Gap for the price of $8.00. Then we were soon off and on our journey to scenes strange and unknown to me. For about nine or ten miles the road was fairly level; then we began to climb the mountain, up what is known as the Fancy Gap Road. Many things pointed out to me by the sturdy driver that handled the steering wheel of the car were very strange then, but are becoming more and more familiar at this time.

We finally reached the top and also our new building of Church and school combined, which is a very nice building. Here I found Mrs. Iola Meredith and Miss Midyett, earnestly at their task of teaching the children of the community. And as I knew no one or nothing of the people, I asked Mrs. Meredith if she could direct me to a place where I might be able to find board and lodging. She mentioned a few places, but said that we would try first a Mr. Edwards, which we did. And after some hesitating they decided to try me for a little while, and I have stayed until this time, and haven't packed my trunk to leave yet.

Those of this family that remain at home are Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, age around sixty, but they are hale and active; Miss Ellen, around thirty; Victoria, now in her twentieth year; Oscar, in his sixteenth year, and several away from home, two of them being officers of the law, all of these you will hear more about later.

Thursday night some of the young people and myself went about five miles down the mountain to Rocky Ford to a song and prayer service. Here I began to get acquainted with the people. I stayed up here until October 23rd; preached six times, made twenty-six visits, attended one prayer service, had two professions, and baptized two.

I find my letter again becoming too long and must close, but there will be more to follow. Remember this work in your prayers, will you please.

With much prayer for the work everywhere, I remain, Yours in the Master's service,

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

NOW THAT SPRING HAS OPENED.

Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, our hustling and wide-awake pastor at Reidsville, writing under date of March 26th, says:

"Our increased attendance at Sunday School continues. Our goal was 300 members by Easter, but we had that number last Sunday, and we are now hoping for 350 or 400 for Easter. This is an increase from a total of eighty-eight three months ago."

We are wondering if others of our schools cannot, by a little co-operative activity, put on a program of progress and increase attendance. Brother Ledbetter, or Brother T. J. Mitchell, our wide-awake superintendent, Reidsville, N. C., might with pleasure and profit to others tell CHRISTIAN SUN readers how Reidsville did this great and good thing.

We have a total Church membership of 128 at Reidsville, and the average attendance at Church service is 125. That is by no means a poor showing and speaks well for the Church and pastor. Our Reidsville Sunday school, of course, gives an offering once a month to missions, and this offering is increasing, of course, with the increased attendance. All Church interests flourish when Sunday School and Church attendance are on the increase.

Those interested in the premiums to be offered for subscriptions to THE SUN will get busy. Line up your prospective subscribers. There will be no time to lose. Prizes will vary in price from that of a Bible, dictionary, typewriter, etc., to that of an automobile.

ELM AVENUE CHURCH.

Portsmouth, Va., March 21, 1923.

DEAR EDITOR:

We wish again to tell you something about our meetings. Praise the dear Lord, He gave us a glorious prayer service tonight. God surely has blessed our souls, and His spirit was certainly with us.

Since last I wrote there has been right much sickness amongst our members, but, thank the dear Lord, they are improving now and there are only a few sick ones. Pray for us that God will continue to lay His healing hand if it be His will.

We surely have had some wonderful times in the Lord since I wrote my last letter. I feel that God is working upon the hearts of the people. On Sunday night, March 11th, we had a gracious time. God wonderfully met with us. It was very rainy indeed, and the crowd was small, but, praise His dear name, He was with us and blessed us. Four confessed the Lord and two of them united with the Church.

Oh! how we thank the dear Lord for sending Brother Harward and his dear wife this way. Surely God is blessing them. We do ask that you pray often for our Church here and the work. Truly it is a field where much can be done, if each one will let the Lord have His way. I'm praying that each one may be wholly given to God and that workers may be trained in our Church to spread the Gospel for the Master.

We are looking forward for a glorious revival on the Second Sunday of April, and expecting for it to last at least two weeks. Pray much for us during these meetings especially. Last Sunday night, which was March 18th, we had another glorious service; it was a real, old-time service, and many consecrated their lives anew to the Lord. We trust that God is blessing the work where you are and that precious souls are being born into the kingdom.

I am glad to report we are having pretty good crowds at services, especially at the Sunday evening services. We trust as the weather becomes warmer and not so much rain, that we may have a much larger attendance.

I remain as ever, a worker for the Master,

ELIZABETH P. ELEY.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

WHEN JESUS HUNG ON THE CROSS.

For the most part, those nearest Him were His enemies. A preternatural madness seemed to seize them as they viewed Him in His anguish; an episode of rage swept the throng of His accusers until its intoxicating effect was felt by the thieves who were being crucified at His side. One of them, however, had a reaction from the madness of the hour, repented of his sins, and was saved. The Holy Spirit, whenever it is possible, takes advantage of these dark scenes of Satan's rage to awaken some heart that is open to conviction and bring it to salvation. The leading Jews uttered here that historic remark: "He saved others; Himself He cannot save." There was more truth in this than they knew. The plan of salvation is so marvelously constructed that when the hour for supreme sacrifice came, Christ could not accomplish both of these—save others and save Himself—and He preferred to do the former, which He had deliberately come to do. The sixth hour of the day was noon. The darkness which veiled the scene of crucifixion when Christ had been hanging for three hours on the cross, came exactly at high noon. This is significant. It is as if nature had uttered her protest against the sins of men which had exacted the death of the Son of God as the price of their redemption. To show the complexity of the motly crowd that surrounded the cross, it is observed that many did not understand His speech when He cried out in that awful note of atoning despair, and thought He was crying for Elijah. Their superstitious fear is illustrated in the fact that they half-way expected Elijah to come and see about Him. He had already said, not only that Elijah, but that legions of angels could be summoned to help Him if that had been God's way; but it was not God's way.—The Way of Faith.

MANY TABLETS FOUND AT UR

The British and American archeologists who are digging up Ur of the Chaldees in Mesopotamia, have found in the ruins of the great temple recently uncovered many inscribed tablets, most of them dating from the third millennium before Christ. Some of the tablets, which are of unbaked clay and very easily destroyed, contain temple accounts, while others are religious texts. Valuable hoards of jewelry and art objects also have been discovered, and study of the finds is expected to add greatly to the world's knowledge of that ancient period.

POLAND'S BOUNDARIES FIXED.

The Council of Ambassadors in Paris at last has given the official sanction of the allies to the eastern and northern frontiers of Poland, which had been in adjudication since the war. The boundaries are those now in effect, and while Lithuania still protests against the granting of Vilna to Poland, the danger of an outbreak of hostilities there appears to be lessening.

Love, such as Christ's law speaks of, never asks the question, "Who is my neighbor"? Love's question, if love asks questions at all, is "How can I show myself Neighborly"? Love does not inquire, "Whom ought I to help"?—it inquires, "How can I best be a helper"? It does not look narrowly and grudgingly and fearfully round, trying to find out who are the others who may have claims on it. Its eyes are turned inward upon itself, saying, "What will make me more fit to serve"?—R. W. Barbour.

MANSFIELD-SMITH

A beautiful marriage was solemnized at the home of Mrs. Daisy Mansfield, Columbus, Ga., when her daughter, Miss Roselle became the bride of Prof. Ben Hill Smith, of Atlanta, Ga. Mrs. Smith is a talented young lady, being an accomplished teacher of music and art. Prof. Smith is a teacher in the Columbus Industrial High School. The writer performed the ceremony which united the happy couple in holy wedlock. The beautiful ring ceremony of the Christian Church was used. A host of the friends of the contracting parties witnessed the ceremony.

They have the best wishes of their many friends for a happy prosperous life together.

BARNES

William Henry Barnes was born in North Carolina, August 22, 1843, and died in Suffolk, March 21, 1923, in his eightieth year. He joined the Suffolk Christian Church July 7, 1867; removed to Ivor and was made a Deacon; returned to Suffolk and re-united with the Suffolk church as a Deacon, May 10, 1888. He was a faithful member and Deacon here for nearly thirty-five years. His first wife died September 21, 1915. He married a second time, Mrs. Kate Walters, June 22, 1916. He is survived by one son, Hersey Barnes, and a daughter, Mrs. A. A. Turner, nine grandchildren and four great grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted from the residence by Revs. W. W. Staley, H. H. Butler, and I. W. Johnson, and a quartet. Members of his family were active pallbearers and the Deacons of the church as honorary pallbearers.

He served through the Civil War and fought the "Good fight of faith" to the end. He was a foursquare man and Christian.

ROLLINS

Everett Rollins was born May 16, 1859. He departed this life on February 2, 1923, aged 63 years, 8 months and 17 days. He had been in ill health for several years but bore his suffering with an admirable patience, never complaining, but reconciled to God's will. He lived such a pure, good life, that his Christian character was unquestionable. He gave his heart to God in early life and remained loyal and true. He was a member of Barrett's Christian Church and was ever ready to do his part for God's cause. He was never married. He and his sister living together as dearest companions, being perfectly devoted to each other.

He leaves to mourn their loss one brother, Richard Rollins and one sister, Miss Adelaide Rollins. Services were conducted at the home by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. M. Roberts, and Rev. Nathan Pickett, of the Friends Church.

The body was laid to rest in the family cemetery.

W. B. Fuller.

GOOD

Mrs. Mary J. Good was born March 10, 1837, and departed this life February 25, 1923, having reached the ripe old age of 85 years, 11 months and 15 days. Sister Good united with the Mt. Lebanon Christian Church more than forty years ago, and remained a consistent member until death. It was my happy privilege to enjoy the hospitality of her home occasionally while I was pastor at Mt. Lebanon some years ago. It was by her special request that I was called upon to conduct her funeral service, which event took place at her late home near Shenandoah City, February 27, 1923. She is survived by her husband, Henry Good, who is also a faithful member at Mt. Lebanon, and by one son, Ernest. May the Lord comfort and sustain the bereaved.

A. W. Andes.

DIED

Mrs. Emma Ronlis Little was born May 26, 1856, and died December 27, 1922, age 66 years, 7 months and 1 day. She was a member of the Waverly Christian Church, having united with the church in 1872.

She was married to Mr. B. F. Little December 17, 1874. Their married life exceeded 48 years by 10 days.

To this union were born 7 children: James Benjamin, William Walter, Junius Jasper, Carson Floyd, and Mrs. Emma Grace Eppes. Two infants preceded their mother in death. She leaves to mourn their loss a devoted husband, five children, six grandchildren, and a very large circle of relatives, and a host of friends. She had been a great sufferer, and the best medical skill and nursing at home and at the hospital had been given her. The very handsome flowers and the abundance of them testified, and the large number of people attending the burial services all testified of the esteem in which she was held. She was buried at Waverly Cemetery. Services by her pastor and writer.

A remarkable fact about this family is the deceased and husband and all their children and grandchildren were raised in the community of Waverly and still abide here. And all who are old enough and have decided for Christ are members of the Waverly Christian Church. She was a good woman and her influence will follow her.

Jas. L. Foster.

GORDON

Mrs. Martha Ann Gordon, wife of W. A. Gordon, died at her home, Columbus, Ga., December 17, 1922. She was born July 2, 1855, aged 67 years, 5 months and 15 days. She was a member of the Antioch Baptist Church, having united with this church when she was only 14 years old. This was the only church to which she ever belonged. She loved her church and was true and faithful to it. Her maiden name was Wilson. On February 14, 1885, she was united in marriage to W. A. Gordon. To this happy union were born the following children: Mrs. W. H. Bishop, Omaha, Ga.; Miss Lillis Gordon, Miss Jessie Gordon, Miss Crocket Gordon, Miss Etta Forest Gordon, Leonard Gordon and Vollie Gordon. They are all living at Columbus, Ga. except Mrs. Bishop.

The funeral was conducted from the home by the writer, assisted by Rev. R. A. Whitten and the interment was made in the Riverdale cemetery. May the Holy Spirit comfort those who mourn their great loss. R. F. Brown.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Mrs. N. T. Farmer

Taxation—

The question of taxation is now getting to be one of the great issues of the day. In many sections of the country the tax is already getting so heavy that the common people are saying they shall be compelled to give up their homes or make some other sacrifice almost as great. Of course, there is a division of opinion. Some are saying that taxation will not hardly be felt at all—it will be so light. Others are saying this cannot be. For instance, in North Carolina, when our public debt was only between five and ten million dollars, the people, or many of them, complained of heavy taxes; but now that the public debt is raised to $110,000,000 what will it be?

Germany's Trick—

One of the sharpest tricks that Germany has played on the financial world is brought to light in the fact that she has sold to the English, the Americans, and about every one else to whom she could sell at a good price, German marks till she has brought into her treasury the vast sum of six hundred thousand pounds, or to put the terms in our money, it would be $3,000,000,000, and yet now that she has the money, the German mark is practically worthless. Germany's scheming seems to be without end. But Germany has paid a high price for these $3,000,000,000—she has paid her honor and she will find it hard to get it back, as we believe. She is feeling the pinch even now, and the public will make her feel it more and more before she ever gets herself back into the financial confidence of the world. Even now it is said there are no buyers for the German mark, and no wonder—who would think of turning their good money into worthless "scraps of paper"?

Shameful Doings—

Near Mer Rouge, La., last summer there was a picnic. When the picnic people were on their way home, five men were kidnaped and taken away by masked men. Later three came back, but the other two were not heard of any more for months. They simply could not be found. Meantime, Governor Parker sent a company of infantry to the lakes to drag them in search of the two missing men, but they were not found. In December some one exploded a heavy charge of dynamite in one of the lakes, and in a few hours the bodies of two men, bound with telephone wires and badly mutilated, were found floating on the surface of the lake. The bodies of these two persons were identified as the bodies of Daniel and Richards, the two men who were kidnaped and did not return on the day of the picnic. The strange part of it followed, viz: The grand jury made no indictments because of the death of these two men, and now it is announced that the men who were responsible for the death of the two men will not be punished—and we are wondering why. Some one has failed to do his duty. This incident is making a big stir, and it ought to do so.

Germany's Ability—

The question as to Germany's ability to pay what she owes to the allies on account of war is much discussed. There are many who believe, as we do, that Germany is simply determined not to pay if she can help it, able or not able. She simply means that she will not try, if she can avoid trying. If ever one nation owed another on account of war against another people, it is Germany owing France. As we understand it, France was not disturbing Germany when Germany simply made her go to war, and in the conflict, while France suffered terribly, Germany was defeated, and now Germany does not wish to pay for her work of destruction of the property of the French. When Germany conquered France in 1870, France was given no choice in the matter of paying an indemnity to Germany except to pay the money right down at once—and she did it—and we believe Germany ought to show a willingness to do by France as she made France do by her under similar circumstances. But the end is not yet—none of us can tell at this time what turn affairs may take in the greatly disturbed European situation. War may come again in the near future, or it may be averted.

Germany's Joke—

It is a joke on the world, and Germany has played it. She has again and again declared her inability to pay France and others what she so justly owes them, because of her destructive work in the war, and now it comes out that during the last year, as we are told by a special contributor to the Daily Mail of London, that there is practically no unemployment in Germany, and he further declares that the ship tonage produced in Germany last year is second only to that of Great Britain, and is actually greater than the ship tonage of the United States, or France, or Italy, or Japan. She is unable to pay the war indemnities due to France, Belgium and all the rest, but while she is unable to pay this money so justly due, she is able in a single year to build ships till she stands next to the greatest sea power in the world, and already greater than the United States, which is now considered the richest country, financially, in the world. Such dishonesty is a disgrace to Germany and will be till the better element asserts itself and goes to work and pays off all this war debt which the Germany of today is declaring she is not able to pay. The truth of the business is, as we believe, she is getting ready for another war just as fast as she can, and if we (the allies) are not careful, we will wake up some morning to find that Germany is in another great struggle to be the mistress of the world. We cannot blame France and Belgium for the course they are taking to make Germany pay them what they so justly owe them.

A Mine of Medicine—

Did you ever hear of such a thing? A writer in the Engineering and Mining Journal-Press tells a wonderful story as follows:

"The first white settlers in the northern part of Brazoria County, Texas, were attracted to a big mound rising eighty feet above the surrounding plain, which later became known as Damon Mound. On the side of this hill was a hole where the Indians scraped up a certain mineralized earth, leached it, and made medicine. 'Sour earth' they called the raw material. These same settlers, being far from the centers of population and medical aid, were forced to rely largely on simple home remedies, and, naturally, followed the practice of the red men in the use of this substance. In later years a company was formed, which, taking advantage of the modern habit of consuming patent medicines, proceeded to dig this dirt on a larger scale and to manufacture a patent medicine which it sells under a trade name.

"The mine is simply a shallow hole from which probably 200 or 300 tons have been removed by hand; it is covered by a 'shaft house.' The 'ore' is a sandy material, containing salts of calcium, magnesium, sodium and iron, and free acid. The mineralization was undoubtedly produced by circulating waters, and possibly gases, from the cap rock of the dome. This cap rock consists mainly of limestone and anhydrite, with considerable native sulfur. A large body of rock salt lies below the cap rock, and unconsolidated sediments, containing pyrite, overlie it. The source of the minerals accordingly is readily apparent.

"After mining, the earth is allowed to stand in shallow bins in sheds so constructed that air circulates freely, where it 'cures'—a process of oxidation, no doubt. It is then shipped to Houston, where it is given a treatment, briefly described as boiling, to dissolve the salts, and filtering to remove the solids. The liquor is then bottled, after being brought to the proper degree of concentration, labeled, and put on the market.

"The manufacturers assert that this medicine is a remedy for rheumatism, indigestion, stomach disorders, impoverished blood, general debility, eczema, constipation, and other internal disorders, and that it may be used locally as an antiseptic and astringent, with great benefit. It certainly is versatile"!

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Christian Annual is being distributed this week.

Read again the announcement of the Southern Christian Convention, to be held at Henderson, N. C.

We have an article in this issue from the People's Church of Dover, Del., which speaks well of the work there.

In one city down South eleven new churches are in process of construction or are completed. Leadership in affairs religious in that city is commendable.

When you have determined to enter the contest for one of the prizes to be offered for new subscriptions to THE SUN, send in your name for receipt books and order blanks.

The greatest cry of the soul is for life. No normal man prays to die. The love of life is in us all. God put it there because He intended that we should live forever.

It was expected to have ready for THE SUN'S premium list a complete description of the prizes to be offered, but more time is consumed in preparing the list than was thought at first.

If the minister of your Church cannot visit his parishioners once a month, he can certainly manage to get to door or entrance of the building and shake hands with them after the sermon. Try it.

Word has been received that Rev. H. E. Rountree is leaving Haiti this week and is expected in Virginia by April 25th. Chaplain Rountree has been assigned to service in the Portsmouth Navy-Yard for the coming two years.

Recently the ministers' wives of Norfolk, Va., organized a Ministers' Wives' Association. At a reception held in the Southland Hotel, seventy-two were present. The first effort was to get everybody acquainted.

A bill passed in Indiana provides for imprisonment from one to two years upon conviction of illegally transporting liquor in any automobile, aircraft, buggy or wagon. This will discourage driving by drunken motorists.

Those interested in the premiums to be offered for subscriptions to THE SUN will get busy. Line up your prospective subscribers. There will be no time to lose. Prizes will vary in price from that of a Bible, dictionary, typewriter, etc., to that of an automobile.

The Temple of the Moon, the home of the patriarch Abraham, recently uncovered in the Chaldees, may be 6,000 years old. It is probably the oldest known edifice. The British Museum and the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania have charge of the research work in this section.

Secretary Mellon, of the United States Treasury, said recently: "There are $10,000,000,000 worth of tax-exempt securities now in existence." Tax-exempt securities, taken together with an absence of all inheritance tax, would, beyond any doubt, create in the United States dynasties of wealth which would pay no taxes.

Christian Temple reports good progress on their new Church building. An order has been placed with the Hall Organ Company for the large pipe organ to be installed. An Easter offering for the building fund amounted to $8,600.

At the last North Carolina Conference, the Conference decided to separate into the three former Conferences of which it was composed. What are the presidents and secretaries of these Conferences doing to make the work effective? Up to this time we think only one presiding officer has outlined plans for working.

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, field secretary of Religious Education, is leaving this week to spend two weeks in the Alabama Conference, visiting a number of churches there and attending the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention at Rock Stand on the 21st and 22nd, and the missionary rally at Pleasant Grove on the 28th and 29th.

Rev. J. H. Hughes, of Roanoke, Ala., is the president, and Mr. L. H. Huey, of Wedowee, is the secretary of the Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which is to hold its annual session on April 21st and 22nd at the Rock Stand Church. The program, which appeared in last week's SUN, includes addresses, and conference hours and periods for song and worship. This promises to be a great gathering, and every Alabama Church should be well represented.

If the number of THE SUN'S readers is to be increased it will be necessary to do a great deal of personal solicitation. And in some way this expenditure of effort must be rewarded. Premiums are being arranged for in order to compensate for the work done. One would like to secure a standard unabridged dictionary, another a portable standard typewriter, and still another a radio equipment or an automobile To obtain such a prize will require work, and you can solicit outside of your own Church or denomination.

The Christian Education Committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, chairman, is preparing a questionnaire of fifteen questions on the vital phases of Christian history, philosophy and life for young people in the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of that Conference. This committee is also co-operating in planning for the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention to be held at Mt. Carmel in July. The program is already outlined for this meeting.

The Chautauqua, which for a number of years was held by the seaside, was presented to the last session of the Southern Christian Convention, and a motion prevailed that the Convention endorse and foster this school of methods, and the Board of Religious Education was directed to continue this institution. That the Church may receive the benefits to be derived, arrangements should now be made to have at least two representatives from each congregation, Sunday School or Christian Endeavor to attend.

As a follow-up meeting after the institute conducted at the Richmond, Va., Church by Mr. Hermon Eldredge, field secretary of Young People's Work of the Christian Church, the officers and teachers of the Sunday School met this week to consider plans for future work. Provisions were made for the organization of two new classes to provide for the pupils in the school, one for beginners, with Miss Tama Savedge as teacher, and one for intermediate boys, with Mr. W. L. Beale as teacher. Plans were made for the "Children's Day" program to be given the second Sunday in June, and it was voted that the offering of this day be for the work of the Board of Religious Education. A forward step was taken by those present by voting that the meeting of teachers and officers to plan for the work of the school should be held regularly each month.

Announcement is made from Washington, D. D., that Protestantism in Europe is at a standstill, and will cease to exist entirely unless help is given quickly. The announcement is authorized by Dr. Adolf Keller, secretary of the Federation of Churches of Switzerland. This state of the Protestants applies to Austria, Italy, Belgium, France and Germany, and that Germany is much the worse off of all these countries. It is a real privilege to help the needy, but even giving to the needy must find the end of the stream. The United States has certainly been very generous to European countries in meeting in part their needs, but how can we go on? Can we keep on answering these calls? We believe the United States has surprised the world with the extent of its ability and its almost unlimited generosity in meeting the needs of war-cursed Europe since the close of the world war. No doubt about it, the need was awful, and America has responded nobly, and we are glad she could and did do so. The call now declares that many professional men, clergymen and their families, widows of the clergy and aged pastors are plunged into direct want, and to add to their sufferings, in many places, persecution is added. In Moscow just now the priests are being tried for what the government regards as opposition to its administration. But these in Moscow are Greek Catholics. The world is certainly in turmoil of a most serious character.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION TO MEET IN HENDERSON, N. C.

The First Christian Church, of Henderson, N. C., Dr. J. P. Barrett, pastor, has extended the Convention an invitation to meet in Henderson for the extraordinary session, to be held this spring.

The Executive Committee appreciates this invitation, and hereby gives official notice of this acceptance.

The Convention will open Tuesday, May 1, 1923, at 3 P. M., and will close with the evening service Thursday, May 3rd.

The Henderson Church is a good Church, but not as strong as some, and I, as President, without the Church's consent, am suggesting that if any minister or delegate wants to help them in the entertainment, you can do so by simply writing, requesting them to arrange for you at the hotel, you paying your bills. This is only a suggestion, and I apologize to the Church now for making it.

NOTICE.

All persons expecting to attend the forthcoming session of the Southern Christian Convention to meet with the Christian Church in Henderson, N. C., May 1st, and who desire entertainment at the hands of the Church are requested to notify me, as the pastor of the Church, at your earliest convenience. We will not hold ourselves responsible to provide entertainment for those who do not notify me. If you wish to engage rooms at hotels at your own expense, please let us know and we will do our best for you.

Very sincerely yours,

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

OUR RELATION TO THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

One of the matters that should be considered at the extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention is our relationship to the General Convention of the Christian Church. The Christian Church is one. The General Convention includes all the churches in the United States and Canada and the churches in our mission fields.

We are a part of that Convention. We send our delegates to its meetings; we have our representatives upon its list of officers and on the various boards. We are glad that this is so. Our Church is too small to be divided in policy, purposes or activities.

The recent arrangement between the mission boards shows a splendid spirit of co-operation in the foreign mission budget, but aside from that, our Convention, unfortunately it seems to the writer, does but little in the way of financial co-operation.

It has been embarrassing to our representatives to sit at board meetings and help vote thousands of dollars of appropriations, when the section of the Church which we represent did not make any contributions to these funds. By an agreement made a short time ago, the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention is mailing some contribution to the home mission funds, but our past experience has been that we get back more than we put into this fund, which makes us beneficiaries of the General Convention.

We have not been making any contributions to the educational fund, and yet since the establishment of scholarships by the Board of Education, a number of our Southern men have availed themselves of the one and two hundred dollars per year to pay college expenses, and this was done while the territory that contributed these funds had three colleges struggling for existence and needing every dollar that was raised.

Our contributions to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work of the American Christian Convention have been almost negligible, and yet the Sunday School Board sent Mrs. F. E. Bullock, their field worker, to the South for a month last year, paying her salary and traveling expenses, and the Board of Christian Education has Mr. Hermon Eldredge in the South for two weeks now, paying his salary out of funds to which we contributed almost nothing.

Brethren, "These things ought not so to be." I am sure that we want to do our part and to make whatever contribution is necessary for the advancement of the whole Church. A number of our Southern men held an informal meeting while attending the meeting of the various boards in Dayton last fall, and decided that we must do something to remedy the situation. I trust that feeling will pervade in the forthcoming Convention and that some definite steps will be taken for a closer financial co-operation with the General Board of the Christian Church.

A CENTRAL BUREAU FOR PROTESTANTISM IN EUROPE.

As the result of sympathetic help from the American Churches, through the Federal Council, there was held in Copenhagen last summer the first official gathering of Protestantism in Continental Europe, there being seventy-five delegates present, representing thirty-seven Church bodies and twenty-one European nations.

As the result of this conference there has now been established by the Swiss Protestant Federation, with headquarters in Zurich, a central bureau of Protestantism for Europe, for the immediate purpose of securing and co-ordinating relief for the needy Churches and religious institutions of the Continent.

The director of this organization is Dr. Adolf Keller, secretary of the Swiss Protestant Federation.

The Federal Council, with the assistance of its constituent bodies, has underwritten two-thirds of the budget for the bureau.

The executive committee is made up of representatives from the Swiss Federation, Churches in the Scandinavian countries, Holland, and Great Britain, with Dr. Macfarland as advisory member for the American Churches.

This is an indication of the extent of the world co-operative movement of the churches.

ELON'S GOOD FORTUNE.

We called that fire at Elon on January 18, 1923, Elon's disaster, and so it was in some very important particulars, but the event seems to be developing into Elon's good fortune, for the subscriptions are rolling in in a most encouraging way. The Virginian-Pilot, Norfolk, Va., brings us the good news through its suffolk correspondent that Bro. J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, has just given to Elon the sum of $50,000 for the erection of one of the new buildings in honor of Mr. Darden's father-in-law, the late L. H. Whitley, of Isle of Wight County, Va. The building is to be known as the L. H. Whitley Memorial Hall. It will serve as the college auditorium in which its public meetings will be held. It will seat about 1,000 people when it is completed. This is the largest single gift by one person ever made to any enterprise of the Southern Christian Convention, and of course it makes our people glad, for we have undertaken a great task in the raising of a fund of $600,000 for Elon. If Dr. Harper can find a few more such liberal givers, the $600,000 will soon be raised, and so it would come to pass that Elon's calamity proved a good thing, indirectly. Thus far, two of the new buildings are assured, and the work goes on in a most hopeful way. Alamance County, at least the citizens of that county, have given one hundren thousand to erect Alamance Hall, which is to be the new administration building. That is a fine piece of work, and coming, as it does, from the county in which the college is located, is a fine tribute to the character and work of the institution. We trust a new day is dawning for Elon, and while its past has been one to give joy to its friends and patrons, we are hoping that its future may be far richer in good fruitage than even the past. Greater Elon seems to be in sight. We are now even expecting the full $600,000 fund will be raised. Let Elon have the full support of this effort of all its friends, and may its future be one of far greater service to both God and humanity because of the sacrifices and hard work of its president and its many friends.

A SHAMEFUL SITUATION.

It is said that there is no end to the making of books, and while that may be true, it is also true that a vast proportion of the books published today seem to be in many respects of an unhealthy character, morally and religiously. There are tens of thousands of people who are, in a way, good people and wish to do right, but not having been taught, they do not know what a good book is when they see it. By that we mean they do not know what books are good for their own children, and therefore they are easily taken in by unscrupulous men who want to sell, or else they wish to indoctrinate the people with their own false notions of what truth is, and this is the pity of much of the book-making of this day.

The Literary Digest of March 31, 1923, tells us that there is now rising a crusade against unclean books. We may say let it rise, and let it do its work well, for it is much needed. The unclean world is busy putting out unclean books to serve their own unholy purposes. Why cannot the Christian world be up and busy filling the world with good books that the children of this day may never want for a good book? It is a shame that children in many instances do not have a chance to get a book that is clean and good, but bad books, why they grow up almost spontaneously and seem to fall into the hands of children and grown-up young people without any trouble. That is the strange part of the proceedings. A child ten years old can get an unclean book and the parents not only do not know it, but if they did know it they would not know where it came from, not even know the person who put it into the hands of their ten-year-old girl or boy. That tells the part of the story that is so far from what it ought to be. The parents ought to see that good and wholesome books are in easy reach of their children, that they may have the pleasure and the profit of reading good books, just whenever they wish. Instead of that, many a poor child, having a strong desire to read, has to catch up just anything that comes within his or her reach, and of course it makes no difference to them, at the time, whether it is good, bad or indifferent, they will read it, and for the very good reason that they have nothing to read from the hands of father and mother, and then it is natural that the inquiring mind of a child should lay hold on the first book that comes to its reach. It may be a dime novel of the commonest kind, or some other book that is filled with moral poison, but the father and the mother are busy with other things and they do not take the time to see what the child is reading, and the result is, before the parents know it, the child's mind is thoroughly poisoned with the literary trash which the carelessness of the father and mother has permitted to come into their home to the moral downfall of the child. It is too bad that no one seems to feel it encumbent upon himself or herself to look after the wellfare of the child. In many cases, even the Church and Sunday School, seem to have little interest in the work of training their own children. They leave that to others and often others are bad guides for children in the matter of literature the child should read.

There is no surer road downward than the putting of bad and unclean books into the hands of children and young people. The opposite is true also—there is not much surer road for the children leading upward to a noble Christian life than to have their hearts and minds filled regularly with good and wholesome Christian literature. This being true, as we think it is, why do not parents who love their children and desire their highest good, be on the look out to see that their children are supplied with the best books for children and young people? They are understood to be their guides in everything, and that certainly includes good literature. Why can not Christian parents at least be careful to see that their children are supplied regularly with good books that their young and childish natures may be suitably fed and so given a chance to develop in the kind of a life which shall be most helpful to the child? Here rests a great responsibility upon some one, and it ought to be looked after, not merely one time, but many times during the year. When one supply is out, another should be given, so that all the time the child should be supplied with good reading matter—the kind that will lift him up and not pull him down.

"BUSINESS BACKING THE BIBLE."

The Church has much to do in keeping itself right in its relation to men and to God. As a body, we are by no means living up to the standards, but we are in the way and hope to reach the end of the journey in His will. While all this is true, it is also true that the business world needs to put itself in line with the teachings of the Word of God. Because the Bible is right, it should be the standard of all men in their relations one with another and with God. Some one has recently made the statement that it is Christ or chaos. If that is true, as we believe it is, then not only the Church needs to keep within the line of Bible standards, but the business world also. The fact that a man is not a Christian is no excuse whatever for him to do wrong in dealing with his fellow-men or in serving God. It is true, he professes not to be a Christian, but that does not take the responsibility of obeying God from his shoulders. We do need a revival of the fear of God among men, and in order to get such a revival, we must have another revival, preceding it just a little, and that is we need a revival of the study of the Scriptures—that as nothing else on the human side will bring the revival of real religion and of common honesty among the people.

We find the following article in the Literary Digest of March 31, which we wish to commend to our readers, and if they would like to do a little real missionary work, then let them take this article to business men, who are not directly connected with the Church, and ask them to read it and then take it to another, and so on, as far as you can. The following is from a business and not a Church paper:

The only sure foundation for business and national safety is not great and plentiful markets, ships on the seas and trained forces to protect and maintain our interests at home and abroad, but religion, and it is not a denominational journal which tells us this, but a business publication. Recently the attention of the Manufacturers' Record (Baltimore) was called to a revival which is reported to be sweeping over Mississippi, and, in the words of Howard S. Williams, editor of the Hattiesburg American, to be creating "a better feeling in Mississippi today between men of all classes than ever before." The Record feels, therefore, a moral compulsion to note the phenomenon as of more than local or passing interest. The very foundation of individual national and world prosperity, says the Baltimore periodical, is religion. "Without the guiding influence of religion and the power which it has over mankind, this nation would soon sink back into barbarism, and no business in it would be safe. Eliminate from any community the churches that are in it and property of all kinds would become practically worthless, and the bats and the owls would soon take possession of the city." This, we are told frankly, is the lowest possible point of view from which to study the influence of religion on the individual or on the world, "but it is a view which a business paper can stress even from the strictly business standpoint." And The Record emphasizes its view by asserting:

"This country needs, more than anything else, a genuine nation-wide revival of old-time religion—the religion that accepts the teachings of the Bible as divine; a religion that makes the employer honest in dealing with his employees and the employee equally as honest in dealing with his employer; a religion that makes every adherent of it through and through honest and honorable in every transaction and in every relation of life; a religion which uplifts, which makes men realize that in the literal fulfilling of the teaching of the Golden Rule there is safety, and nowhere else is there safety for business or for society. We need a religion which will give men the moral backbone to stand out in the open and fight wrong wherever intrenched, regardless of their personal safety or their business. Every man who seeks to fight wrong under the guise of some secret organization hasn't the moral courage to fight in the open and lacks the inspiring power of true religion.

"Looked at in the larger sense, the spirit of the Golden Rule must dominate every office and every factory and every farm, if there is to be honesty and honor among them.

"The man who tries to cheat his employee or his employer, the man who tries to sell bad goods for good goods, the man who tries to take an advantage of his customer or any man with whom he is dealing, is by that fact sapping his own moral fiber. Only through a nation-wide and world-wide revival of the religion of the Cross can the world be saved from chaos.

"The world is in turmoil, partly economic, but largely through the failure of religion to function fully in the hearts and lives of those who profess it."

And if Mississippi, stirred by the State-wide revival, will prove to the country that the Golden Rule can be applied to every transaction of life, says The Record, "it will render an immeasurable service to mankind." It will teach us that—

"Every man who with or without disguise joins in beating or maltreating, or shooting (or even threatening to do so), other men because of alleged criminality, is himself a criminal, and the spirit of religion does not exist in him, regardless of how loud may be his professions, or how saintly may sound his psalm-singing. No man who commits such acts can honestly kneel before the throne of Almighty God and ask God's blessing upon his criminality; for the man who undertakes to enforce by illegal means even the things which might deserve legal punishment can not escape the condemnation of Almighty God, for in committing these acts he is breaking down the morality, the honor, and the sovereignty of the State. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself,' is the divine command, and no man who loves his neighbor in this way can by any possibility commit the crime of lynching or maltreating, or murdering his neighbor, even though his neighbor may deserve legally the utmost punishment that can be inflicted. But this punishment must be by the law. * * *

"Until American people come back to a recognition of the divine command 'Thou shalt not kill' and that further statement 'Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him,' we shall fail as a nation to do our duty to God and man. Any man or woman professing to be a Christian, who willfully commits these crimes of murder, or of murdering, by lynching the murderer, or outrager, must inevitably merit the condemnation of a righteous God. There are some who stand in the pulpits professing to proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ, who preach hatred; there are some who sit in the pews and profess to be followers of Christ, who are deliberately, premeditatedly violating the commands of God. They who knowingly live in sin cannot plead the redeeming sacrifice of Christ until in spirit and in truth they have sought to follow His teachings.

"Every member of a mob, hooded or not, who joins illegally in punishing others has no right to ask the blessing of God upon his criminality. It would be a mockery of God Himself."

WHAT IS THE CHURCH WORTH TO A COMMUNITY?

A good many people like to find fault with the Church. It is not what they think it ought to be, and so they find occasion to say a good many things against the Church. If a man were level-headed, or was even competent to do some good and clear thinking, we believe he would be ashamed to talk against the Church, and for the reason that the Church is ordinarily one of the most valuable assets a community has. How many of the decent people of any given community would continue to reside in the community if all the churches were taken away? How much would the value of property in a given community decrease if all the churches were taken away? The Church is not only the salt of the community in a general way, but it is the preserver of decency. Were there no churches in any given community, in the course of a few years, after the removal of the churches, it would not be safe for a woman to walk down the street alone at the twilight hour. Not only so: were all the churches taken out of the community, in less than ten years, we believe, it would not be safe for a man to walk down the street at ten o'clock at night. The estimate of the thoughtless person for the Church is indeed small, very small, but take a thinking man, whether he belongs to the Church or not, and his estimate of the value of the Church is practically always high, and for the reason that he knows what the presence and influence of the Church are worth to the people who live around them, to say nothing of those who are its members. This much is not said of the spiritual influence of the Church, but of its moral and financial values. Of course, the spiritual value of the Church is uppermost and far beyond even its moral and financial values, and yet there are many who do not visit the Church, only possibly occasionally, and they seem to think it is a sign of one's importance to show no regard for the Church and its work. Poor things, do not say any hard thing of them, for they do not know any better. Pity them.

The Methodist Protestant has some good words along this line, and we herewith append them for the consideration of our readers, as follows:

"A minister, who did not wear a ministerial garb, was riding on the train one day next to a commercial traveler. It was on the Sabbath. The man, pointing to a cool patch of woodland, said to his ministerial neighbor, whom he did not know as a minister: 'That's where I like to spend my Sundays, to take lunch, and my old pipe, and some newspapers and books and go out into God's open and spend Sunday.' The preacher replied: 'I suppose you mean after you attend Church.' 'No,' he said, 'I never attend Church. I can worship God in the woods better than I can in the house.' The preacher rejoined, 'Yes, I reckon you are right; we really ought to tear the churches down; they are in the way, and build something that is of value in their place.' The commercial traveler said, 'I do not think that; I would not live in a town where there is no Church. It adds to a town's respectability.'" It does a great deal more than that. It adds to the value of property. It makes men thrifty and industrious. It adds to the safety of life and property. It makes men honest and law-abiding. It adds to the intelligence of the community. It elevates the character of the people. It helps to forward everything that is good and to overcome all that is evil. No respectable man would willingly live permanently or have his family live in a community that is without a Church and without the influence of the Church. This being the case, it is the duty of every man to do all that he can to support the Church. Some men, even some who are members of the Church, seem to feel that all they need to do is to aid in the financial support of the Church. But far more than this is needed. They should attend upon all of the services of the Church. They should take an active part in the work of the Church. They should use their best efforts to bring others to the services and into the membership of the Church. It would be well for every man to ask himself, "What kind of a Church would my Church be if every man in it were just like me?"

AMEN! BROTHER.

If an amen from us can give a brother any help, when he is standing for truth and righteousness, we wish to give it. The Presbyterian of the South has an important word to travelers going from a Christian country into a heathen country, and we wish to say amen to his suggestion, which is as follows:

Travelers in heathen countries ought to be very careful about what impression they make upon the people of those lands. This should especially be true of Christian people from this country who visit the Orient. The people of that part of the world hold the United States in high esteem, but most of their definite opinions in regard to us must, necessarily, be largely formed from the people who visit those lands. The missionaries set before those people very high standards of Christian living, and the result is that the Christians who have been won under their leadership have set up for themselves a very high standard. It is a great pity that some visitors to those lands do not always live up to the same standard. This is particularly to be regretted when the visitor is a representative of the Church of this country. Such visitors have often given the missionaries no little trouble by not being careful about what they do. Rev. Dr. Sidney Gulick was a missionary for thirty years in Japan, but returned to this country some years ago, and has been devoting his time to awakening and cultivating good will between that country and ours. He is very closely connected with the Federal Council of Churches. Recently, as a representative of the Council, he visited Japan, and made a number of addresses on his itinerary through that country. The Japan Times, published in Tokyo, gives an account with a picture of a farewell banquet that was given to Dr. Gulick, and at which he made an address. This was held Sunday evening and was attended by both natives and foreigners. We cannot help feeling that Dr. Gulick did not set the Japanese a very good example as to the proper observance of the Sabbath, or teach them the proper idea of its holiness. The Federal Council, in sending out its representatives, should be very careful that only men are sent who will, in their own lives, exemplify the real teachings of the religion of Jesus Christ.

NOTICE.

There will be a missionary rally at Shiloh Christian Church, Randolph County, N. C., the fifth Sunday in April, beginning at 10 A. M. All the churches in the Western North Carolina Conference are asked to send delegates. Of course all the preachers in the Conference will be present. We want this to be a real get-together meeting to discuss missions in the home, in the Sunday School, in the Church and in the world.

Brethren and sisters, come prepared to say something on the different phases of missions. It is necessary that every one should have something to say on this great question. There will also be a meeting of the executive committee.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." This is true with reference to individual relationship to men as well as to God. The central group in human society is the family. Jesus was a member of a human family. The Jewish nation was built on the family. The most powerful government in the world is family government. The family contains all the essential elements of the Church and the State. Paul says: "I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." The Church is a family in earth and heaven.

It is a question whether modern education is not overdoing the matter of classification and grading of members of the human family. It is true that as wise a man as Paul wrote: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things." But Jesus said: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." There is a child-period, it is true, but it is the greatest period in human life. The fundamentals of education are learned in childhood, because they are based on faith. The time to learn the Ten Commandments is in childhood, and that lesson is learned best in childhood. Obedience is learned in earliest childhood, and that is fundamental in the family, in religion, and in the State. How many learn the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the books of the Bible, geography and history after they are grown-ups? Even to count a hundred, to learn the multiplication table, spelling, the parts of speech, all the fundamentals of education are learned in childhood. Children can learn the biggest and hardest things easier than grown people. It is a false philosophy that thinks things must be made easy for children. They must be made plain. The nursery has often broken up the family. Grown people need contact with children and children need contact with grown people. Palatial homes, matrons and servants are often separating agents in what should be family life. This effort at grading and adaptation has robbed the family and the Church of that soul contact that parents and children used to enjoy. Parents feel it, children suffer by it, and the family pew is almost gone. All this complaint about the young people in this age grows out of this disintegration of the family, breaking up the cohesion of the family spirit and love. Life is at its best when young and old love, believe and think together and work toward a common goal. This does not condemn grades, groups, adaptations, classifications, but keeps them all within the radius of God's plan for the family in earth and heaven.

ELON LETTER.

It has been said that the human race makes progress on the feet of little children. This is no doubt the aphorism of wisdom. Judgment and experience certainly warrant in the assertion that this is especially true of Christian institutions. The Elon of the future is in swaddling clothes today, and from that state of infancy on up to the early teens.

Last summer I wrote about a good man who told me his daughter would be at Elon, that she had been born to come here. That is the way. Children should be taught from their tenderest years that Elon is their destiny. As the children feel toward Elon, so will her future be.

Recently I have been telling of the great sacrifice of some of our great-souled laymen and laywomen. We have all rejoiced that God has been so good to us as to provide these friends in this critical hour. Others are needed, and God will provide them, too. Of that, I have no doubt. This Christian College will never be deserted in an hour like this. God is too good for that, and men and women are too like Him to allow it. Let each heart seek its privilege and grasp it as such. Do not wait to be asked, kind friends—do it voluntarily.

Do it as the children are doing. God bless the children. A dear little girl, the other day, came to me and, smiling as only a child can, handed me a well-worn dollar. "It is mine," she said; "I saved it. But I want to give it to our college. I expect some day to go to school there. Use it to buy some brick for me." I will. I wonder if there are any more children who will want some brick in Elon's new buildings. If so, dear boys and girls, write me and send your gift. It will be used just like you say.

And here is a Sunday School class of seven boys of the Suffolk Sunday School—the Class of Twenty-two, Mrs. J. D. Luke, teacher. These boys worked and saved six dollars and sent it for books for the library. And besides they wrote me a splendid letter, from which I quote: "On Sunday, February 11th, Dr. L. E. Smith preached for us at the morning service. He chose as his test a part of the 12th verse and 1st chapter of Lamentations, 'Is it Nothing to You'? It was a fine sermon. Seven of our class stayed for the service. Two of us boys, namely: Edwin Berkley and Lynwood Rieder, rode home with our teacher.

"When we were leaving her she said, 'Boys, how was the sermon'? One said, 'Fine'; the other, 'All right.' She asked what did he mean by saying, 'Is it nothing to you'? They said he meant the man crying over the city. She said, 'Yes, but he meant something else that is dear to us.' Then she told of Elon's loss and said the young preachers had no books to study until some new ones were bought. We had not heard about the fire before this. She said it was our own Christian College that we all love. The following Tuesday Edwin and Lynwood went and asked what could we do to help buy a book or two. She said we could make a sacrifice by staying from the movies and doing without candy for a few days, or working in some way to make the money ourselves.

"The next Sunday we told the other boys what she said, and they all were glad to have a part in giving. And here we are! Doctor, we feel that it is something to us that the library was burned. We are boys not over eleven years of age. Yet our teacher tells us each Sunday that she hopes that every boy in her class will some day be a pupil at our dear Elon, for we should go to a Christian college when we finish high school. Dr. Harper, we all did without something to give this little bit. But we are glad to do it. Our class now is known as the 'Boys of Twenty-two.' Our class number is 7. We want you to buy one or two books fitting for our library for a token of love from the 'Boys of Twenty-two.' We wish many may send money for books.

Lovingly,

"'THE BOYS OF TWENTY-TWO'."

Suffolk Christian Sunday School.

And now I wonder if there are not other Sunday School classes which, like the class of "Twenty-two," will want to help their college in her hour of need.

Our cause is safe when the children work and sacrifice for it. We, too, shall advance on the feet of the children.

W. A. HARPER.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

DEAR BELOVED BRETHREN:

The appeal for funds with which to build Bethlehem College should touch every loving heart in the Christian Church. We need money now as never before. The contract has been let for our first building, which is to be completed by next September. Our junior college is to open its first session at that time.

I can almost hear the glad hearts beat in the bosom of a constituency which has long looked for this time to come. The fond hope of our fathers and our mothers are to be realized, and at no distant day. They thought, they planned, they prayed. And now we are to help answer their prayers. I pray that God may arouse every man and woman, every boy and girl in all this dear old Christian Church to a diligence of their solemn duty. None of us are rich, none of us can give large gifts; but, brethren and sisters, all of us can do something. And, thank God, all are willing to do. And they only regret that they cannot do more. Now, dear ones, please don't wait for your financial secretary to come to see you, but just volunteer your pledge or cash and send it in. I am coming to see you just as soon as possible, but the "King's business" requires haste, and we must hurry in this great move in our Church. I sat at home just one day last week and received thirty dollars in cash and fifty dollars in subscriptions. One good old sister who has been sick for some months paid her pledge in cash and gave me her best wishes, and now let the Christians of the South come down on your knees in prayer to God for Bethlehem College, for she is to do great things for our beloved Church.

BACK TO CHRIST.

The watchword of the twentieth century Church is "Onward with Christ"! The progress of the Church depends largely upon the forward look. Too often in the past the Church has yielded to the temptation to look back, and, like Lot's wife, has suffered a terrible fate. Every man who turns his back to the future and his face to the past becomes a statue, making no more progress than a post. No man who lives in the past can ever do his duty in the present. It is no uncommon thing to find persons who imagine that everything is going to the bad because new thoughts and new methods have driven out the old. They have not learned that every age has its own ideas and methods, born of its own conditions, and in their ignorance they would turn the world back upon itself and reinstate the ideas and methods of a former generation that may have served their time well, but may have been outgrown by the world as it goes on toward its majority and the fulfillment of its appointed destiny. To such men the old is orthodox and the new is heretical. If they fail to reverse the wheels of progress, they become grumblers and complainers, and make life a burden to themselves and to all who are unfortunate as to fall within the radius of their influence. No greater calamity can befall an enterprise than for such men to get the reins in their own hands, for they will then turn the chariot around and drive back to the regions long since deserted by all enterprising souls.

Our vision should be larger than those who have gone before us, and we should live in the belief that the "golden age" is yet to come. Live in the belief that greater things await our doing than may have yet been permitted unto man to do, and this will be true even if we do the same things that others have done, provided only we do them in a greater way. There are future astronomers greater than Copernicus, Galileo, Newton or Kepler; future philosophers greater than Plato, Aristotle, Bacon or Mill; future scientists greater than Davy, Miller, Agassiz or Tyndall; future theologians greater than Tertullian, Clement, Jerome, or Chrysostom; future reformers greater than Luther, Calvin, Wesley or Knox; future historians greater than Motley, Hume, Gibbon or Macaulay; future preachers greater than Spurgeon, Beecher, Brooks or Talmage; future physicians greater than Janner, Pasteur, Koch or Harvey; future statesmen greater than Gladstone, Bismark, Jefferson or Lincoln. The greatest incentive to future development lies in the thought that the most worth-while things are yet to be accomplished. All who have achieved any measure of success have had the prophetic outlook, large expectancy and sublime faith.

In our day of stupendous religious activities there is no place for the loiterer or the looker-back. If you wish to take life easy, "go 'way back and sit down," and look back if you choose, for it does not make much difference which way you look. Go to sleep and dream, but remember that one day you will awake to the awful realization that time is gone with all its possibilities, and eternity is upon you with all its terrible realities.

Count me on the side of every forward movement in kingdom work; in every outward expression of its inner power, with a faith unshaken in the fundamental doctrines of Christianity pertaining to Christ as revealed in the Scriptures. "Back to Jesus" is the watchword of a growing school today, whose motive is to get away from the epistles to the supposed simpler teaching of the Sage and Saint of Nazareth. To get rid of Paul, and keep only as much of Matthew and the other evangelists as may yield the image of a humanitarian Christ. They seem to proceed upon the principle that, if we can get back to what Jesus said and thought about Himself and His mission, we have got to absolute truth. This may seem strange, for we do not generally accept a man's estimate of himself, especially if it is a high one, as conclusive.

We usually take the Pharisee's short cut in dealing with such claims, "Thou bearest record of Thyself; Thy record is not true." But the world is ready to take Christ at his own valuation. Why is this true? Because there is an instinctive consciousness in all who have known of him and his teachings that he "spake as one having authority"—that he is authority.

I want to go "back to Christ" and collect what He Himself said about His first coming and His mission to the world; His own estimate of His heavenly origin and world-wide significance. As remarkable as it might seem, He speaks only once of having been "born," and that under peculiar circumstances. All other times it is either "I come," "I am come," "the Son of Man came," or it is "I am sent." The utterance of a few such expressions could be accidental, or a person profoundly conscious of having a great work to do in the world, might drop into such a form of speech without any notion of claiming anything extraordinary beyond the fact of his mission, but the persistent, exclusive use of the term does seem to indicate that Jesus Christ did claim something more than is common to humanity. The terms, "I proceeded forth"; that points to a condition which He voluntarily left before His earthly appearance. "I came from God"; that points to His earthly life as being the permanent result of an initial act, of his own, behind which stretched an indefinite existence. To His sorrowing friends in the upper chamber, He said: "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world," and again, "I leave the world and go to the Father." The "I" here vibrates between His unseen abode with the Father, and his visible manifestation upon earth. To the question, "Art thou a King, then," asked by the Roman governor, He answered, "To this end was I born" (that was all that Pilate could understand), "and for this cause came I into the world," why was that added? To designate something that lay behind the birth. So we see when the Apostle Paul says, "As the children were partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same"; and when John says "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us," they are saying nothing more than Jesus Christ has said about Himself.

"Back to Christ" by all means; and back to the Christ who declared that He was before He was born; that He left the eternal, divine glory by His own act; that by His own volition He entered into the limitations of humanity, "and was not ashamed." Why should a man be, to be called our brother? We have in His sayings, "I am the light of the world"; "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world"; "sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel"; "other sheep which are not of this fold"—the clear consciousness of the world-wide significance He attached to Himself and His work.

Think of "the Carpenter's Son," with no name, with no culture, with no material force, in that little village hidden away amongst the hills in green Galilee, standing up there, in that humble synagogue and saying, "My mission is to humanity." And think how nineteen centuries have vindicated what seemed to be an idle boast. Think of the condition of humanity as conceived by the Sage of Nazareth—dead, in peril, famished, dark and blind, so full of desperate needs, and so utterly incapable of any kind of self-help. This was the problem with which this audacious young rabbi grappled and said He had solved. Christ looked below the surface and regarded man mainly in their relation to God, and God's laws, and He beheld a universal pall spread over all nations, and every man as having come short of the glory of God. In this declaration of purpose there lies the clearest consciousness of non-participation in that universal condition. Think of the consciousness of inexhaustible power, as well as the outgoing motion of a boundless love, which such a notion of His life's work proves Christ to have possessed. What an unfailing fountain of light there must have been in His own consciousness of Himself, that He should venture upon such a stupendous work.

Here is a collection of our Lord's sayings which set forth the manner in which the purpose of His life was to be discharged: "To call sinners to repentance," "to bear witness to the truth," "to send fire on earth," and "to give His life a ransome for many." We see from these texts that the manner of effecting His purpose covers His earthly ministry—His words and manner of life, which declared God to men, and revealed men to themselves. By the side of that ministration of life, and separable from it stands His death as the "ransom for many." Any conception of Christ's manner of saving the world which puts the emphasis on His witnessing of truth, or on His gracious ministrations, or even upon His calling sinners to repentance, are truncated and incomplete; and, on the other hand, all these other forms of His activity are most fully operative in His death as our ransom on the cross. Unless we take the ransom as the chief part of the manner by which He saves the world, we do not go "back to Christ" nor accept His own estimate of Himself, for He said, "I give My flesh for the life of the world," "As Moses lifted up the serpent, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." There is no warrant for accepting some texts and rejecting others, which come to us attested by precisely the same evidence.

"All in all, or not at all," should be our principle in dealing with the words of the incarnate truth. As clear as tongue can speak, He has asserted that He "came forth from God into the world," which is a clear proof of the incarnation. He has asserted that the purpose of His coming is to save the world, which is a proof of our sin and danger. As clear as tongue can speak, He declares the manner of His purpose "to minister," witness to the "truth," "to call sinners to repentance" and to give His life a ransom for many," which is the apostolic doctrine of the atonement. As clear as tongue can utter, He has asserted that after his cross he would flood the world with fire —indwelling spirit. God said: "This is my beloved Son; hear Him."

RESTING-PLACE FOR THE SOUL.

Years ago there came to the late Canon Hoare, of Tunbridge Wells, a rich man, then in his old age, to arrange with him about his burial place, and after they had gone carefully over the church yard, and had chosen the spot where he was to lie, Canon Hoare turned to him and said: "You have chosen a resting-place for your body, but have you yet found a resting-place for your soul"? Turning around and looking him full in the face, the old man answered: "You are the first clergyman who ever asked me that question." He went with Canon Hoare into his study, and, to make a long story short, he gave his heart to Christ, and found his resting-place, and in Canon Hoare's study to the day of his death hung a well-known picture representing the saving of a life from a wreck. It was the gift of the grateful man, who had found a resting-place not only for his body but for his soul. Ask yourself the question now, before you turn to another page, "Have I found a resting-place for my soul"?

TREMBLING SAINTS.

In the early days of emigration to the West, a traveler once came, for the first time in his life, to the banks of the mighty Mississippi. There was no bridge. He must cross. It was early winter, and the surface of the mighty river was sheeted with ice. He knew nothing of its thickness, however, and feared to trust himself to it. He hesitated long, but night was coming on, and he must reach the other shore. At length, with many fears, and infinite caution, he crept out on his hands and knees, thinking thus to distribute his weight as much as possible, and trembling with every sound. When he had gone in this way painfully half way over he heard a sound of singing behind him. There in the dusk was a colored man driving a four-horse load of coal across upon the ice and singing as he went! Many a Christian creeps tremblingly out upon God's promises where another, stronger in faith, goes singing through life upheld by the same word. "Have faith in God." "Whoso putteth his trust in Jehovah shall be saved."—The Expositor.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

PEOPLE'S CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Easter was a great day at People's Church. More than 400 persons took Communion in the observance of the Lord's Supper at the morning service. As a result of the two weeks of pre-Easter evangelistic services conducted by the pastor, a splendid class of forty-four new members was received into the Church at the close of the pastor's Easter message. Thirty-four of the number united on confession of faith in Jesus Christ as the divine Son of God, their Saviour and Lord, and ten united by letter of transfer from churches outside of Dover. This makes a total of 279 new members Dr. Helfenstein has received into People's Church since becoming pastor two years and a half ago, bringing the present membership of the Church up to 530, 506 of the number being resident members.

The entire membership rejoices in the large Easter ingathering of souls, especially in view of the fact that the successful financial campaign conducted for five weeks by the Church in raising funds for the new Sunday School and social center building terminated only a week before the pre-Easter evangelistic services began.

The committee is pushing the work of the new building program with all vigor. The chairman reports that the amount of bona fide pledges and cash is now more than $62,000, and that pledges are still coming in.

The treasurer's quarterly report for the first quarter shows that the average weekly offering for the quarter was $151.97, and that seventy-four per cent of the resident members are regular contributors to the support of the local Church and benevolences through the duplex weekly envelope, besides those who make contributions quarterly or annually. The goal is to have every member use the weekly envelope for local work and benevolences. The benevolence offerings have increased to such an extent that People's Church is to support a native missionary in Japan beginning June 1st of this year.

The pastor took for the subject of his Easter message, "The Joy of Easter," using for his text Matt. 28-8, "They departed quickly from the tomb with fear and great joy." He said in part that the great comforting message of Easter is that Christ liveth, and that human experience verifies the fulfillment of his promise, "Lo, I am with you alway." A new power came into the world on that first Easter morning and a new hope was born in human hearts. As Jesus rose from the grave, so those who believe in him are raised into newness of life by the power of his resurrection.

It is a pity that any one should lose the inspiration of the resurrection of Jesus Christ simply because they cannot understand the exact mode or nature of the resurrection. Life itself is a mystery that no man can explain, but no one refuses to live just because he cannot understand the mystery of life. Even thought cannot be explained, but nobody refuses to think just because he cannot understand the mystery of thought. Men may not be able to explain the mystery of the resurrection, but they can believe the fact and be inspired by its power. For men to quibble over the nature of the resurrection, as to whether it was physical, a revivifying of Christ's material body, or whether it was a spiritual resurrection, is folly, and such controversy is the delight of Christ's enemies. There are statements in the Bible which indicate both views. Some ministers quarrel with their brother ministers over the nature of the resurrection as foolishly as a bunch of little school-boys quarrel over their marbles as to which are genuine agates and which are only "glassies." The nature of the resurrection does not matter. Equally good men of God hold both views. It is the fact that matters. Jesus arose from the grave. Death could not hold him. "This same Jesus did God raise up." Christianity does not rest its case upon any theory of the resurrection, but upon the fact.

Next Sunday morning the pastor and congregation will welcome one of the ministers attending the Methodist Conference, who will give the morning sermon. At the evening service the pastor will speak on the subject, "The Problem of Protestantism." At the evening service a half hour will be devoted to singing the old Gospel songs that warm up the heart. The orchestra will play. In response to special requests, the State song, "Our Delaware," will be sung in the opening exercises with the use of more than twenty beautifully colored illustrated slides. The morning service begins promptly at 10:30 o'clock and the evening service begins at 7:30 o'clock.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

At a meeting of the building committee last Monday three bids were received and considered; that of Mr. E. Zobles, of Roanoke, was accepted, and the committee contracted with him to put up the building and work to begin at once. The building, when complete, will cost $14,000.00. This not to include the equipment for laboratories and other furnishings. The contractor is confident that the building will be ready in due time for school next fall.

Class No. 2 of the Wadley Sunday School rendered a very interesting and helpful program on our last meeting day on Bethlehem College. They considered such subjects as "The value of Christian education," "Its helpfulness to the Church," "The value of co-operation," and "As a community builder." Many compliments were received and every one enjoyed the exercise. It seems that all our churches of these two conferences especially might give such a program. It does not consume so much time, and is a good way to get the cause of the college and Christian education before the people.

Then, it has dawned on the writer that this might be a fine way to begin a library fund. This will be one of the most essential departments of the college. Good books for reading and reference work are very important for a student body. Some one may have a book or set of books which they do not need any more, but would be fine for our work. Even if they are old, sometimes such a book is very helpful. If there should be those who would like to do this, your name and the number of the book will be placed on the inside cover. E. M. CARTER.

ORANGEPORT NOTES.

Easter Sunday, while rather unpleasant in temperature, was pleasantly spent at Orangeport. The week preceding Easter was one of the most unpleasant of the winter. Snow, high winds and near-zero temperature reminded us that winter had not loosed its grip. The temperature was only a few degrees above zero on Sunday morning, but there was a good attendance at our Church service. Our program consisted of music, recitations and a talk by the pastor. The program was well rendered and seemed to be enjoyed by all present.

In the afternoon the pastor and two of the deacons went to a home and received a member into the Church. The candidate was not able to come to the service.

In the evening our Christian Endeavor was well attended and our meeting was interesting. When the work of the day was done we felt that the day had been profitably spent.

Although we have had the most severe winter experienced in this section in some years and there has been a great deal of sickness in our community, our congregations have been good through the winter and our work seems to be moving on well. R. H. PEEL.

BRO. EARP'S WORK.

We like THE SUN fine and very much appreciate our own Church paper. Surely there is nothing so easy attached to the work expected of our editor. I for one want to thank you for the good paper you are giving us.

Now, just a word about our membership campaign, which lasted the month of March, closing with Easter Sunday night. The last week of the campaign we held revival services each night. We just used our local Church material in the services. Miss Ruth Holland presides at the piano, and, with the assistance of Mrs. W. H. Baker, the piano was kept in tune for the revival. Our chorister, Mr. W. H. Baker, was at his best as song-leader and soloist, and truly added much to the interest of the revival. The special services were brought to a close on Easter Sunday night, when twenty members were added to our Church roll, making a total of thirty-one since the new year.

Our Church reached $50.00 in its offering for the Christian Orphanage—this was the amount Brother Johnson asked us for. B. J. EARP.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—What is the income tax used for by the government?—B.

The income tax is used for government expenses as follows: On every one hundred dollars paid to the government, $73.33 of it goes to pay for wars, past or prospective, on the basis of 1921, and will be divided as follows: to maintain Veterans' Bureau, $9.95; for pensions, $6.19; to maintain War Department, $11.08; to maintain the Navy Department, $11.62; interest on the public debt, $24.18; payments on the principal of the public debt, $10.31. We are not able to say what the other $26.67 may be used for, but we suppose it is used to defray the expenses of the income tax office. The figures given above are taken from the government's financial reports and are, therefore, reliable.

Question.—Is there any danger of the oil supply being exhausted in this country?—C.

Experts are somewhat divided. Some think there is danger and some think there is no danger of an oil famine. It seems that there is evidence even now of exhaustion of Mexican oil wells. They find that where the oil is exhausted, salt water from some subterranean source fills the place made vacant by the absence of oil. It seems that the United States has an interest in Mexican oil wells amounting to $500,000,000, and they think that half of that sum is now a total loss. Last year this country took 130,000,000 barrels of oil from the Mexican oil wells. The Standard Oil Company is not figuring on an early exhaustion of oil in this country, as it is said that they are going ahead reinvesting hundreds of millions of dollars in transportation facilities.

Question.—What of the Versailles treaty—is it living or dead?—Hin.

For a time it did seem to be dead, but of late it seems to be coming to life again. Our own country has seemed to repudiate it, but there is a strong and growing sentiment in favor of its life being resurrected, and we believe it will have to be resurrected in some way. From many directions the voice of the people is heard that America must take its place in the great struggle to save the world from going back into barbarism, and the League of Nations seems to be the only thing in sight that will save the world from present deplorable conditions. If Mr. Wilson's plans could have been carried out, as he had them on his return from the Versailles Conference, the world situation today might have been very different from what it is. He was undoubtedly far more long-headed than were the men who defeated him and thereby plunged the world into utter confusion. Mr. Wilson may yet live to see his ideals realized.

Question.—Can you tell me what plastic surgery is—the thing the papers are saying so much about just now?—David.

We know but little of this new branch of surgery, but from what we can gather from the public prints it seems that plastic surgery is used to correct deformities in the human body. For instance, we have recently seen a picture of a child which had a hair lip and a double nose. By means of plastic surgery these deformities have been corrected till the child has a beautiful face and nose. It is a wonder, and yet it seems to be a reality.

Question.—Please explain to me this thing they are now calling radio concerts. What is meant by radio concerts?—George.

It is not very easy for a layman to tell just what is meant, but perhaps I can give you some idea. They have discovered a method for transmitting sound through the air without a wire to carry the sounds, so that now you can sit in your home and hear the concerts in the great cities of the world. Just a few days ago a concert given in Brazil, South America, was plainly heard in Honolulu, eight thousand miles away. It is a common thing now to sit in your parlor and, with the help of a radio, hear the great concerts in New York or Boston, and the end is not yet.

Question.—Will you, please, tell me what this is that they are now talking of making as a substitute for leather? Is there any such thing?—Buoy.

Oh, yes, they are making a substitute for leather, and they are now saying that the substitute is better, more durable, than is the leather itself. I have in my possession now a valise which is made of a substitute for leather, and they claim that it is much better than leather. So far, it is standing well, and it now looks as if it will make good the claim made for it. At Newburgh, N. Y., they have a plant there which is turning out a substitute for leather, known as Du Pont Fabrikoid. After it is made it is coated and given the appearance of leather. It is claimed that such a substitute is a necessity since the demand for leather is so great that all the cows in the world could not furnish enough leather, even if it were split as thin as it can possibly be split it would not be enough to upholster our 12,000,000 of automobiles unless we were willing to do with less shoes, less bookbindings, less leather beltings and many other commodities in which natural leather is used. So you see it seems that we are facing a need that makes a substitute for leather a living necessity.

Question.—Who stands out as the greatest architect of modern times?—San.

Sir Christopher Wrenn enjoys that distinction, if we mistake not, although he has been dead for two hundred years. It is said that when he died, "architecture fell asleep." There was a great and very destructive fire in London in 1666 which practically destroyed a great part of London, but it is said from the ashes there arose a much finer London, and the finer London was largely due to this master architect. Wrenn was born an architect.

Question.—Do you think that the mind of woman is equal to the mind of a man?—Homer.

The answer to your question depends on the men to whom you refer. If you mean just any man, why I think I should say there are some women very much superior to some men in every way. Of course, there are some women, as some men, who are inferior, but there are some women who seem to be equal to the ablest of men. For instance, there is Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, who is the Assistant Attorney General of the United States, and she is reputed to be intellectually equal to her chief, that she prepares briefs which command the admiration of the ablest lawyers of the country. We suspect there are not a great many men who are her equal. She is a very strong woman, intellectually. Her work as a lawyer is considered among the best that either men or women can produce.

Question.—Who was this man Abiram, so named in the Scriptures?—John T.

Abiram was the son of Eliab, a Reubenite, who, with Korah and others, undertook the overthrow of Moses and Aaron in the wilderness. Get your Bible and turn to Numb. 16:1 and you will get a start as to information concerning him. Then from that passage follow out your Bible references and you will get a pretty good idea as to who he was.

Question.—What is meant by Shunammite in the Bible?—Langly.

A Shunammite was a name applied to natives of Shunem. If you will get your Bible and turn to 1 Kings 1:3, 15, and then 1 Kings 2:17, 23, you will find the Shunammite mentioned. She was the beautiful young woman who became David's nurse in his old age, and whom his son, Adonijah, wanted to marry after his father's death. You may recall the fact that when David was aged and weak it was deemed wise that he might have a young nurse who should keep him warm and comfortable. She was present when David authorized the making of Solomon king in place of his father David. It is supposed that Solomon had Adonijah put to death because he wished to marry Abishag.

FIELD NEWS.

The Church at Danville, Va.

This Church seems to be in the finest condition we have ever known it. The congregations continue to grow. The Sunday School is doing well. At our last appointment we think there were seventeen who volunteered to go out and work to increase the number in our Sunday School. We are now having from two to four prayer-meetings a week, preparatory to our series of meetings. We had hoped to begin this meeting the first Sunday in April, but our Brother Rev. J. Lee Johnson, who had promised to be with us in the meeting, has been very sick and didn't think he would be able to be with us that early; hence, we have postponed the meeting till the first week in May. Pray with us that we may have a real pentecost.

The Mebane Church.

Our congregations last Sunday morning and evening were very good. My subject was "How the Devil is Trying to Defeat God in Saving the World." Text: "If thou therefore wilt worship me, all shall be thine."—Luke 4:7. We went from the first temptation to resurrection of our Lord. After which we referred to the modern, almost numberless, means the devil is using today.

Miss Tillie Fowler, who is the life of our Sunday School at this place, with the Sunday School, rendered a splendid Easter program Sunday evening. The town of Mebane is now expecting "Cyclone Mack," the great evangelist, to pitch his tent in Mebane and begin a series of meetings from the second Sunday in April. Come and hear him, and he will declare unto you what the Lord has done for his soul. P. P. Klapp, Pastor.

A few days ago one of my Danville friends sent me, by express, a box of fine winesap apples, and we are enjoying them to the fullest extent. It is said that "an apple a day will keep the doctor away." We are trying the remedy. We are very grateful to our Danville friend, and wish for him the best. His gratefully,

P. T. Klapp.

HEBREW TEXTUAL CRITICISM.

By Rev. John G. Truitt.

1. Introductory Remarks.

The aim of this course is to determine whether or not to all practical purposes we have had handed down to us the Old Testament as it was originally written. It is not the business of the expert in textual criticism to ascertain the theological and doctrinal meaning of the Scriptures, but to answer the question, What is the text that the writers wrote, be it good or bad, or indifferent? If the expert finds that we do have the Scriptures of the Old Testament as they originally were written, then he establishes a reasonable faith in the trustworthiness of the documents as we now have them in our Bible. This is a perfectly legitimate, scientific and, therefore, worthy work. And a work in which every true scholar in Scriptures and servant of God should delight. This is only a brief summary of the work with a few illustrations of what has been done by the writer.

2. Manuscripts.

The average Bible student will be surprised to learn that the oldest Hebrew MS. we have was written in 916 A. D., and is kept in St. Petersburg. It is not a MS. of the whole Old Testament, but of the prophets only. The oldest manuscript of the whole Old Testament in known existence was made in the first half of the same century in which William the Conqueror took possession of England. There is a tradition that when Jerusalem was destroyed only three MSS. were left. The doctors compared the MSS., and if the MSS. agreed they accepted their reading; if two agreed they accepted the reading of the two; and if they differed they made foot-notes accordingly. This and other things have caused quite a great deal of criticism of the Old Testament. Some men claim there are 130,000 (one hundred and thirty thousand) variations in the texts of the different documents, which if really true would make it impossible to so much as make a fair guess as to what the writers of the Old Testament really said. Indeed, there are about 1,200 (twelve hundred) variations, 500 (five hundred) of these amount to nothing whatsoever, none of them affect materially the documents nor injure the faith of those who believe that the texts which we have are reliable. Instead of losing faith, quite the contrary is true—we are surprised that they are so nearly perfect. If one should undertake to copy this thesis—mistakes, dots, points and everything—one would, beyond a doubt, make several variations, even with our present so-called efficiency. When we consider how long these texts have been in transmission, and give a thoroughly scientific scrutinization we come, in a very short while, to realize that it is an outright miracle that they have been preserved for us as they have. Besides other material for such a course as this, we have our present Hebrew Bible—the Septuagint, the Targums, the Syriac Peshito, and the Latin Vulgate.

3. Vowel Pointings, Verses and Paragraphs.

The original MSS. were written in consonant character only, e. g., Gen. 1:1, "NBGNNNGDCRTDGDTHHVNSNDTHRTH." The consonants are all run together, and there are no vowels in it at all. This fact alone sometimes baffles the student of philology, because we cannot always tell to an absolute surety just what vowel should be inserted between these consonants, e. g., Did ravens or Arabs feed Elisha? The consonants in the original texts are 'ARB, which in themselves may mean either 'ravens' or 'Arabs' equally well. Judging from other things, we believe 'ravens' are meant. Five hundred years after Christ, vowel points were invented and placed into the texts. So the vowels were accordingly put in at least a thousand years after most of the writers were dead and gone. This fact is often entirely overlooked by destructive critics of the Bible. The trouble is not with the Bible; it is with our ignorance of the Bible. Whenever we take the pains to investigate thoroughly the errors vanish and we are rewarded with a greater faith in the Word of God and are the better able to defend it against its foes.

The Old Testament was divided into verses in the ninth century by the Masorites, at which time the chapters were inserted also. The American revisers put in our present paragraphing. We believe these are good devices to make the text more accessible to the average reader, but in textual criticism all these things become mere furbelows, and God's Word should be judged only on what it was when He caused it to be written. We should know what we are doing before we censure it, or else keep quiet.

4. Variations.

Facsimile copies of the originals, so far as they are extant, I investigated to familiarize myself with them, and I found no ancient MSS. or documents that showed they had been copied and transmitted with the same degree of care and accuracy as that of the Bible. A comparison of early MSS. of Homer with present-day editions reveal a much larger number of variants; the same is true of Cicero, or even Shakespeare.

The next thing I did was to go through the entire book of 1 Samuel and to note the footnotes. By this I learned something of the care that was exercised by those old scholars in transmitting the text. Throughout their generations a thing was read just as it had been read in previous generations, but when they copied the text they copied it just as they found it, regardless of how they read it in the temple and wherever there was a difference in the way it was written and the way it was read they made a foot-note of how it was read. It is most interesting to see to what minute detail they carried this in order that they might not be guilty of changing the text. If a letter happened to be written larger they wrote it larger when they copied it. If a letter happened to be omitted in the text they were copying, they too left it out, though they knew perfectly well what it should be. They simply indicated by an asterisk that there was a vacancy. In the book of 1 Samuel there were only thirty-seven of these footnotes. How easy it would be to have let them drop off, but this they dared not do, for which we are greatly indebted to them. The men of old regarded the Bible as being holy, and handled it with great reverence and care.

Then I made a careful comparison of chapters in 1 Chronicles which were copied from 2 Samuel. Now, Chronicles was written some three hundred years later than Samuel, and it has been claimed that there were great discrepancies in the two records, and indeed a minute comparison of them in the originals does show a few slight variations, but not one single instance was found that would indicate a malicious or very careless handling of these sacred records. What were some of these variations and how did they occur? They may be classified as "Errors of Sound," and "Errors of Sight." "Errors of Sound" would occur by a priest dictating to a group of scribes. Furthermore, during the centuries the changing languages caused changes in the vocalization of the Hebrew. Some failed to pronounce the guttrals; often the labials could not be distinguished the one from the other—"b" and "p" being often thus confused. We have record of three hundred men taking dictation at one time.

"Errors of Sight."—Very often it was impossible to tell "resh" from "daleth," as they were so nearly alike. Other letters being so much alike were sometimes confused. Then there are transposition of letters. Egyptian influences sometimes came upon the Hebrew. The Egyptian language could be written from either right to left or left to right, or mixed. Also there were errors of abbreviation. The Hebrews used abbreviation just as we do. Five different abbreviations are found for Jehovah. Proper names often changed just as they do today. The letters being all jammed together would be sometimes separated at the wrong place. "Mem" on the beginning of a Hebrew word made it mean one thing and on the end of the word it would mean quite a different thing altogether. Then further the Babylonians used quite an elaborate system of signs which no doubt caused a few mere signs to get into the Hebrew copies of the Bible. Sometimes, moreover, an alleged variation is nothing more than a synonym. In spite of these possibilities of error and in spite of the many centuries of copying from hand to hand there are only a very few errors which remain unsolved, and it is the mark of a really great scholar to admit there are some difficulties and wait for further light. Some critics, when they come to something they can make neither heads nor tails of, say the text has been handed down wrong and they then proceed to correct it. Dr. Wilson says: "Now, listen, boys: no man on earth is smart enough to do that. He must try to find out what the text as it stands means, and when he is stuck there he is stuck. He has no right to change the text to suit himself, or to put in something he can make sense out of. The Bible is handed down better than most MSS., and so don't you let any man make you believe he is smart enough to correct it." In the chapters that I actually tested in the above-mentioned books I found not a single difficulty that could not be solved.

5. The Hebrew Bible and the Septuagint.

The Septuagint is the Bible that Jesus used. It is the Old Testament translated into Greek. This translation was made in Alexandria, Egypt, more than two hundred years B. C. It is very interesting to compare this with the earliest extant Hebrew text which was made over a thousand years later. It is claimed that in such a comparison as this there are found thousands of disturbing variations between the two, but as a matter of fact careful scientific study of the two texts show that they are essentially the same. Some time we may find statements that we cannot understand or do not like, but we can soon see that the translators of the Hebrew into the Greek Septuagint translated from a text like our present Hebrew Bible.

6. Comparison of the Hebrew and Septuagint Hosea 10.

(Under this caption I made scientific tests, or comparisons of the twelve seeming discrepancies, but since I have to transliterate the Hebrew for our press and for other obvious reasons I find one only of the comparisons made in the original thesis.)

* * * * * *

By this test of one chapter of one of the most difficult books of the Bible we find that while there are a few seeming erorrs somewhere in either the Greek or Hebrew we see that with only a little real scientific comparison what seem to be contradictions fail any longer to be so. If we knew more, the discrepancies would be fewer in comparison to our increased knowledge. There is a great deal of loose talk about errors which never have existed, and some of the arguments found in what claims to be scholarly work are simply unscholarly attempts to read a theory into the texts. A man's opinion is not evidence—it is only an opinion. Wherever real unquestional evidence is produced, the Bible is not the loser.

It will be a sad day for the Church when its leaders think the real investigation of the Holy Scriptures is no longer the thing. The enemies of the Bible are not going to cease their unfair judgings, and if we are worthy of being the transmitters of the sacred oracles of God, it is our bounden duty to be able to defend them against every foe. The religious morale of our country is being broken down by certain malicious theories that the Bible is not much more than a man-made book, and a rather poorly made one at that. It is the miracle of all literature, and before one has the right to deny that he should be able to come to it with ample knowledge to give it a fair test on sound philological principles. It is the testimony of those whom God has given the ability to know it best that it has nothing whatsoever to fear from true learning.

NOTE.—The paper given above was prepared by Rev. J. G. Truitt, now a student of Princeton Theological Seminary. He expects to graduate in that institution this spring. One of Brother Truitt's courses of study is under that prince of teachers and one of the most learned men of his day, the Rev. Robert Dick Wilson, Ph. D., D. D. The thesis is on "Hebrew Textual Criticism," and when Dr. Wilson had examined the paper he rated it as of the first group—that is, among the best of the papers prepared by this class. That is an enviable record for one of the North Carolina boys, and we are glad to publish the same, that our readers may enjoy it also. We had supposed that Brother Truitt would enter active pastoral work immediately after graduating, but we learn that he is planning to spend another year in study in some one of the great universities of the world, possibly in Europe. At the close of this extra year of study abroad, he hopes to be ready for the active work of the ministry. We wish him the highest possible success in his work of preparation for the preaching of the Gospel as an ambassador for Christ. One section of the paper is omitted because of its highly technical character. It was omitted on request of Brother Truitt. We are delighted to see that he stands true to the Bible, and we believe he will continue to do so, and to this end may the Lord be his guide in his further studies. —EDITOR.

CAN OUR SCHOLARS REBUT THESE FACTS?

IF YOU CAN, DO IT; IF YOU CANNOT, THEN GIVE UP THE SHIP WHILE YOU MAY.
SOME WONDERFUL STATEMENTS.

Dean Shailer Mathews, of the Chicago University, assures us that the doctrine of evolution is so absolutely proved that it only remains for us old-fashioned folk who love our Bibles to bring them into conformity with this well-proved truth; or, if we cannot do this, then we must let our Bibles go, and cleave to evolution.

But—Dean Mathews is only a theological professor—not a scientist. Before we accept his say-so, let us see what noted scientists, including Darwin himself, have to say:

Prof. Patten, of Dartmouth.—"As for biologists, they are further from agreement as to what constitutes the processes and conditions essential to organic development * * * than they were a year ago."

Dr. Etheridge, of the British Museum.—"In all this great museum there is not a particle of evidence of transmutation of species. Nine-tenths of the talk of evolutionists is sheer nonsense, not founded on observation and wholly unsupported by fact. This museum is full of proofs of the utter falsity of their views."

Prof. Virchow, of Berlin.—"It is all nonsense. The attempt to find the transition from the animal to man has ended in total failure. In vain have the links that should bind man to the monkey been sought—not a single one is there to show."

Sir William Ramsey.—"Our survey of the Mediterranean lands reveals no sign of development. It shows us only a process of degeneration and decay."

Prof. Beale, Physiologist of King's College, London.—"There is no evidence that man has descended from, or is, or was, in any way specially related to, any other organism in nature through evolution or by any other process."

Prof. Fleischman.—"It has in the realms of nature not a single fact to confirm it. It is not the result of scientific research, but purely the product of imagination."

Prof. Haeckel was a strong advocate of evolution, and once wrote:

"When in 1873 the grave closed over Louis Agassiz, the last great upholder of the constancy of species and of miraculous creation, the dogma of the consistency of species came to an end, and the contrary assumption—the assertion that all the various species descended from common ancestral forms—no longer encountered serious difficulty."

But in his later years, Prof. Haeckel felt that he was standing almost alone among scientific men, and said: "Most modern investigators have come to the conclusion that the doctrine of evolution, and particularly Darwinianism, is an error and cannot be maintained."

Sir Robert Anderson.—"It would be laughed out of any court in Christendom."

Dr. Alfred Russell Wallace.—"The great majority of educated persons hold the opinion that the wonderful discoveries and inventions * * * prove that we are really more intellectual and wiser than the men of past ages—that our mental faculties have increased in power. But this idea is totally unfounded. We are the inheritors of the accumulated knowledge of all the ages.

"I have come to the general conclusion that there has been no advance either in intellect or morals from the days of the earliest Egyptians and Syrians down to the keel-laying of the latest dreadnought. Through all those thousands of years morals and intellect have been stationary.

"If Newton and Darwin had been born in the times of the Egyptians, they could not have done more than the Egyptians did. The builders of the pyramids were every whit as good mathematicians as Newton."

Does this look very much like the ascent of man? And be it remembered that Dr. Wallace, whom they term "the grand old man of science," was Darwin's co-laborer.

And Charles Darwin himself, almost bed-ridden for months before his death, turned at last to the Bible as the Book of his faith. According to the testimony of Lady Hope, she found him one afternoon with his Bible in hand, and asked: "What are you reading now"?

To which he answered: "Hebrews—still Hebrews, the Royal Book."

"I made some allusion," says Lady Hope, "to the strong opinions expressed by many persons on the history of the creation, its grandeur, and then their treatment of the earliest chapters of the Book of Genesis.

"He seemed greatly disturbed * * * and a look of agony came over his face as he said:

" 'I was a young man with informed ideas. I threw out queries, suggestions, wondering all the time over everything, and to my astonishment the ideas took like wildfire. People made a religion of them.' "

Asked to speak next day to his servants, Lady Hope said, "What shall I speak about"?

And Mr. Darwin replied: "Christ Jesus, and His salvation. Is not that the best theme"?

In the "Life and Letters of Charles Darwin" it is stated: "George Romanes was a naturalist of the highest order, an esteemed friend of Darwin; so much did he esteem him that he gave him all his MSS. relating to phychological subjects, with the request that the great naturalist would publish any part he chose in his works on mental evolution in animals."

Romanes says of himself that he was perverted from religious faith by the influence of materialistic science. In his early life he wrote a work entitled, "A Candid Examination of Theism," and in his riper years wrote a sequel to it, which he called "A Candid Examination of Religion." While the former work was decidedly anti-religious, the latter was not only religious, but Christian. Romanes, in the last work, commenced by acknowledging the tendency in scientific men to dogmatism. "Scientific men as a class," he tells us, "are quite as dogmatic as the straightest sect of theologians. * * * Never was any one more arrogant in his claims for pure reason than I was—more arrogant in spirit, though not in letter—this being due to contact with science." He honestly confesses, "man without God is miserable." He says further, "I know from experience the intellectual distractions of scientific research, philosophical speculation and artistic pleasures; but am also well aware that even when all are taken together and well sweetened to taste, in respect to consequent reputation, means, social position, etc., the whole concoction is but as high confectionery to a starving man. * * * There is a vacuum in the soul of man which nothing can fill save faith in God."

These are but a few of the mature opinions of recognized scientific men, yet they serve to show that, although evolution is commonly taught in our schools today, yet among the greatest scientists and real thinkers it is a theory that has been discredited as unproved and unfounded in fact; while the Old Book still stands firm as the rock of ages.—Arranged.

"It should be repeated that most people cannot take a general principle out of a * * * lecture(s) and apply it to their own situation."

This is quoted from The Saturday Evening Post, "Helping the Man on the Job," March 3d. I never ran across it before stated so plainly, so clearly, but this is my difficulty and the difficulty of hundreds like me. The general principle in its solution is not grasped. It is not that we are unresponsive, unwilling, indifferent, or lazy. It is simply a case of our inability to apply the general principle to our situation and the general principle is all we get.

Very often we leave the convention hall or the conference auditorium confused, sometimes resentful, for bitter words have been heard; but more often quite convinced that the speaker is a theorist. Yet, probably, nine times out of ten the speaker has presented an excellent matter and one that would be helpful and useful to practically everybody present, but failing in a great measure, failing utterly with many of us, because this great truth has not been taken into consideration.

This, however, is true. The speaker frequently cannot go beyond the general principle himself. If he is questioned about it he will quite likely smile and inform you that that is your problem. But it is not. If he is really in earnest it is his problem too, and I question the integrity of his attitude if he does not make it his. The leader who is too big to grapple with the real problems of the situation is too small for me to follow. GIL BONHEUR, JR.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

April 22, 1923.

Subject: Moses, Liberator and Lawgiver.—Ex. 2:1-19:25, 32:1-33:23; Deut. 34:1-8.

A Survey of the Life of Moses.

Golden Text: "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of Jehovah."—Ex. 14:13.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 70:1-5.

Reference Material: Deut. 3:23-28; Ps. 105: 23-45, 106:7-33; Matt. 17:3; Acts 7:17-44; 2 Cor. 3:7-13; Heb. 11-23-29.

There had been many changes in Egypt since Joseph, as ruler, welcomed his father and brothers to the country. Probably four hundred years had passed since that day and the position of the Hebrews in Egypt was far different. They were hated instead of honored. They were slaves instead of welcome guests. This was the situation when the baby Moses was born. This survey of his life, as given in the Bible references for the lesson, presents the great leader of Israel showing the many sides of his great life.

"He was a goodly child."—Ex. 2:2. The mother of Moses could not bear to carry out the command that boy babies should be killed, and his life was saved through her love and God's protection. How much the Jewish nation, and the whole world owes to that little boy, whose life was in such jeopardy. Many of the best-loved Bible stories which have most influenced lives have been stories of children, as Moses, David, Samuel and Jesus. How much possibility was wrapped up in each of their lives! Suppose they had not been cared for and guided aright! In every child life lies great power for growth and development. The child neglected may mean a nation without a leader. The child loved and cared for and taught will bring a blessing to many. How great is the responsibility of the "grown-ups" around him! God has a plan for their lives, and must count on parents and preachers and teachers to help them to be ready.

"And Moses was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians and he was mighty in his words and works."—Acts 7:22. Moses, the lad, was trained for leadership. From his mother, as nurse, no doubt, he heard the old Jewish stories and teachings. He heard of the Heavenly Father who had chosen Israel as His own people; of Abraham, whom he called to go forth to begin a mighty nation; of Joseph, who brought the nation down to Egypt in the time of famine. His whole life shows the effect of this early teaching. Religious education begins in the very earliest years. Then as the son of the daughter of Pharaoh, he received a good education in all the "wisdom of the Egyptians." Like Paul, he received an education that was complete and unusual to prepare him for his great work.

"By faith, Moses, when he was grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to share ill treatment with the people of God."—Heb. 11:24, 25. As a man, Moses was faithful to his own people. The influence of his mother's teaching is shown. Intense loyalty was always one of his outstanding unto Pharaoh."—As Moses was tending the flock who was oppressing the Hebrew workman, but it led him also to persevere in face of great difficulties in leading his people from Egypt. Moses was a patriot.

"Dwelt in the land of Midian."—Ex. 2:15. This tells the story of forty years of the life of Moses. His early education brought him knowledge from the schools of his day. The forty years in Midian brought him close to God. Many vital lessons may be learned in solitude. The "Quiet Hour" in the morning changes the outlook of the day. Moses was a leader whose influence affected the centuries. Eighty years of his life were spent in preparation. The man who would be a leader must pay the price of getting ready.

"Come now, therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh."—As Moses was tending the flock of his father-in-law, Jethro, the angel of God came with the divine call. God calls those who are faithfully performing their duty, whatever that may be. They are the ones that he can depend upon for further service. God does not force men to work for Him. He calls: "Come." He needs volunteers, and promises His divine presence to guide and protect and give wisdom. Moses was humble. In his meekness, he at first felt that he could not go to lead his people, but with the assurance of God's presence, obeyed the call. With Aaron, he went, and after the message had been given, the people "bowel their heads and worshiped." With God, Moses worked. After the last plague, the people left Egypt, pursued by Pharaoh's host, to the banks of the Red Sea. There came God's challenging command: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." They obeyed, and divine power opened the way. God is still commanding His children to go forward in His Church, to spread the Gospel to everybody, to teach that Jesus Christ came to seek and to save all men. Obedience to this command brings the blessing of the Father.

In the wilderness, where he needed patience and wisdom in dealing with a people, often disappointed, sometimes rebellious, Moses worked and planned and led his people. From Jehovah, He received the law which he gave to the people, always declaring, "These are the words which Jehovah hath commanded!" Again and again he exorted them to set their hearts on the words which he brought them from God, that they should not only obey them themselves, but that they should be taught to the children that they should love the Lord their God with all their hearts, souls, and might. Always he placed this teaching and this obedience as the condition of their national welfare and prosperity.

"And Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died; his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated."

Moses, the "goodly child," the trained lad of the palace, the loyal patriot, the shepherd of Midian, the one chosen by God for a great task, the patient and wise guide who led the children of Israel out of Egypt and through the wilderness; the lawgiver, and the great teacher—truly here is a man whose life is worth studying. Robert Lansing, former Secretary of State, declares: "If greatness in human affairs depends upon successful achievement, then Moses was great. If it depends upon character, then he was great. If it depends on lofty ideals and high purposes, then Moses is entitled to be called great. From every standpoint and by every standard Moses was a great statesman, whose career the statesmen of today will do well to study and consider carefully in spite of the condition of modern society and the complex problems of the present."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

April 22, 1923.

Train for Leadership.—Ex. 3:7-12, 4:10-12.

Thoughts on the Topic.

God sees the need of His children, and hears their cries. When He impresses this need upon the heart of a man or woman, it is His call to them to prepare to be leaders for Him to relieve suffering and to better conditions.—Verse 7.

God needs earthly leaders to do His work with Him. He plans and guides and protects, but He must work through human instruments.—Verse 8.

The call that came to Moses has come to others. "Come * * * that thou mayest bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt," or "Come * * * that thou mayest teach, or preach, or heal, or serve in the Church and home, or work on the farm." His call comes to all. The important thing for us to consider is our attitude toward that call.—Verse 10.

J. Campbell White once said: "Do you say you are not fitted for leadership? Moses, Livingstone, and Dwight L. Moody felt the same way. But no one ever knows what God can do through him until he has given Him a chance. If we are ready to give "our utmost for the highest,' the undreamed of and 'impossible' will be accomplished through us."—Verse 11.

"Certainly I will be with thee." God's promise to Moses inspired Him to undertake the task. God is still present at all times.—Verse 12.

Humanity is one quality of great leadership. Moses realized his own limitations, but God overcame them. God never calls one to a task without giving strength and ability to do that work, if we trust sufficiently in Him and let Him help us.

Moses had a three-fold training for leadership. In his home with his mother-nurse, he learned of God's people. In Egyptian schools and in the palace, he was trained through experience and association with others. In the land of Midian, he came to know God in the solitude of the desert and to recognize His voice and His power.

Moses was willing to listen to God's voice. He was glad to work with God, always acknowledging His need of divine counsel and aid. These qualities made him a great leader.

Martin G. Brumbaugh writes: "I think of leadership and there arises in my soul an image of that heroic leader, who for years fed his father-in-law's flocks, and for the same time fed upon the thoughts that God gave him, until he became wise enough and strong enough to speak for God in Egypt, to act for God in the wilderness, and to talk with God in the morning alone above the mountain mists."

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Invite every member of the Young People's Department of the Sunday School to attend this meeting. The Sunday School lesson gives a survey of the life of Moses, and most members will come with the facts of his life fresh in mind.

Have some one tell the story of the life of Moses, from the viewpoint "Moses the Leader," bringing out especially his training for leadership. Ask several members to come ready to tell what characteristic in the life of Moses appeals most to them.

Have the president of your society make a five-minute talk on "The Christian Endeavor Society—A Training School," and invite visitors, who wish to make their lives count in Christian service, to join the society. Other subjects for short talks may be: "How Far is Education a Factor in Making Life Count"? "The Cost of Leadership" (Study, Sacrifice, Consecration), "The Qualifications for Leadership" (Sympathy, Initiative, Tact, Enthusiasm, Perseverance, etc.), "God's Call for Life Recruits" (Ministers, Missionaries, Teachers, Workers in all fields), "Opportunities for Training" (Christian College, Summer Conferences and Schools of Methods, Conventions, Study Courses).

Have your executive committee lay plans for further opportunities for training by starting an Expert Endeavor or Mission Study Class, by beginning to plan to send one or more members to a summer school, as the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods (July 30th to August 5th).

Songs for the Meeting.—"I Am Thine, O Lord," "O for a Closer Walk With God," "He Leadeth Me," "Something for Jesus," "Have Thine Own Way, Lord," "Higher Ground."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION INSTITUTES.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

Over twelve hundred people attended the twenty-five sessions held during the series of Christian Education Institutes in Eastern Virginia from March 17th to April 2nd. In addition, over two hundred children attended the Story Hours, and eleven different services were addressed on the Sundays during the tour.

These institutes were planned to reach the leaders of Eastern Virginia, and in every meeting the pastor and, in most, the Sunday School superintendents and several teachers were present. The afternoons were devoted largely to discussion of problems in Sunday School work, Christian Endeavor, Daily Vacation Bible School, Christian home, and Christian college attendance. The feature of the evening meetings was an address on "Makers of Man," by Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., field secretary of Young People's Work of Christian Church. Others who attended and helped materially in the meetings, or part of them, were Mr. Frank Wilson, field secretary of Christian Endeavor of Virginia; Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of the First Christian Church, of Norfolk; Rev. James Lightbourne, executive secretary of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, field secretary of the Southern Christian Convention Board of Religious Education.

The meetings were arranged by the Eastern Virginia Convention, working with the Board of Religious Education. The success of the meetings is attributed in large measure to the co-operation of the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church, who sent their field secretary for two full weeks. Nearly every Church in the Conference was reached, and several workers expressed the hope that the meetings might be an annual affair. Meetings were held at Old Zion, Rosemont, South Norfolk, First Church, Norfolk, Newport News, Portsmouth, Oakland, Suffolk, Holland, Franklin, Windsor, Wakefield, Dendron, Waverly and Richmond.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

The Sunday School at Windsor, Va., is using the Graded Lessons through the senior grade. A Teacher Training Class meets weekly. Mr. S. T. Holland is the progressive superintendent of this Sunday School.

In the public school at Waverly, Va., record is kept weekly of the Sunday School attendance of the boys and girls. Each Monday morning the record is taken and the per cent of each grade figured. The grade which has the best record at the end of the term will be given a prize by one of the teachers. This plan is extending throughout two counties of Virginia—Sussex and Prince George.

Oakland Church, Rev. I. W. Johnson, pastor, and Mr. W. K. Wagner, Sunday School superintendent, is planning to build an addition to the Church, to have adequate space for their growing Sunday School.

At their last meeting, the members of the Eastern Virginia Ministerial Association, which meets monthly in Norfolk, voted to go back to their churches and endeavor to have each Church send at least two representatives to the Elon Chatauqua July 30th to August 5th of this year, and pay at least part of their expenses. Many churches are already working toward this end now. Several Sunday School superintendents have expressed their desire to attend.

A great number of Elon College students are taking the course in Religious Education this year. Some of them are exceptionally well qualified to carry on a Daily Vacation Bible School this summer in their own Church, or to help other churches. Why not begin now to plan for your Daily Vacation Bible School, and write to your students at Elon, or teachers who will be home this summer, enlisting their aid?

The annual Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Valley Conference will be held with the Dry Run Christian Church, near Seven Fountains, Va., May 15th, 16th and 17th. The president, Mr. Roy A. Larrick, of Winchester, is now planning for a good program, and the best convention ever held in the Valley. Plan now to go.

The field secretary of Religious Education will be in the Alabama Conference April 15th to the 30th. The Sunday School Convention will be held at Rock Stand the 21st and 22nd, and a Missionary rally at Pleasant Grove the 28th and 29th. The rest of the time will be spent in visiting churches of the Conference.

The International Daily Vacation Bible School Association has kindly sent a number of copies of their annual handbook for the use of our churches. If you are interested and would like a copy, write 1012 East Marshall, Richmond, Va. —Board of Religious Education.

DIARY OF A BIBLE.

DEAR EDITOR:

If you think this diary of the Bible is worthy of your space in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, I would be glad to see it in print. It was taken from The Expositor. The author is unknown to us.

If your Bible could talk, how would it compare with this?

January 15.—Been resting quietly for a week. The first few nights after the first of the year my owner read me regularly, but he has forgotten me I guess.

February 2.—Clean up. I was dusted, with other things, and put back in my place.

February 2.—Owner used me for a short time after dinner; looked up a few references; went to Sunday School.

March 7.—Clean up. Dusted, and in my old place again; have been down in the lower hall since my trip to Sunday School.

April 2.—Busy day. Owner led B. Y. P. U. meeting and had to look up references. He had an awful time finding me, although I was right there in my place all the time.

May 5.—In grandma's lap. She is here on a visit. She let a tear-drop fall on Colossians 2:5-7.

May 6.—In grandma's lap again this afternoon. She spent most of her time on Corinthians 13 and the last four verses of the 15th chapter.

May 7, 8 and 9.—In grandma's lap every afternoon now. It's a comfortable spot. Sometimes she reads me and sometimes she talks to me.

May 10.—Grandma's gone back in the old place again. She kissed me good-by.

June 4.—Had a couple of four-leaf clover stuck in me today.

July 1.—Packed in a trunk with clothes and other things; off on a vacation I guess.

July 7.—Still in trunk.

July 10.—Still in trunk, though nearly everything else has been taken out.

July 15.—Home again in my old place; quite a journey, though I do not see why I went.

August 1.—Rather stuffy and hot; have two magazines, a novel and an old hat on top of me; wish they would take them off.

September 12.—Clean up. Dusted and set right again.

September 12.—Used by Mary a few moments today. She was writing a letter to a friend whose brother had died, and wanted an appropriate verse.

SLANDERED MONEY.

There used to be an old adage to the effect that money could buy everything except health.

Was it true?

At this moment there are 2,500 people in North Carolina who are doomed to die within the next twelve months of tuberculosis—a preventable, curable disease—unless they have help.

All these people need medical care, good food, fresh air and, most important, a knowledge of how to care for themselves.

All of these services—sanatorium care, medical and material relief in the homes, experts to diagnose the disease and educational work—cost a little money. But the lives of the 2,500 doomed people, and the health of unknown thousands of others are worth a little money, are they not?

Tuberculosis seals are dedicated to stamping out this preventable, curable disease. Take some of your slandered money—a few cents, a few dollars—and let it retrieve this smirch on its reputation. It means death to tuberculosis instead of death by tuberculosis. Let it buy health for your city.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Easter Sunday was a beautiful day, and no one was kept away from Church on account of the weather. We truly hope that our churches did well in their Easter offering. The cries of the orphan children are distressing. We turn appeals down every week because we do not want to get financially embarrassed.

We were called to see two little boys this week, bright little fellows, who lost their father several years ago. The mother works in a knitting mill, and they will not go to school, but loaf on the streets, and the mother cannot work in the mill and look after the little boys. Here is an opportunity for some institution to do a good deed by taking and training these two little boys to be useful citizens. If they are left as they now are, what will they grow up to be?

Our friends have been real good to us and have sent us in the last two weeks some beautiful dresses in answer to our Easter call for dresses.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Suffolk and Portsmouth both report observing Dixie Endeavor Day, using the pageant prepared for the occasion by the Dixie Endeavorer. Suffolk has a live Junior Christian Endeavor Society which is doing good work under the leadership of Miss Susie Powell. This is a new society.

The press is making it appear that Mr. Harding, after being in the office of President for two years, is now ready for six more years. We do not doubt it—if he can get them!

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

FROM THE MOUNTAINS AGAIN.

I wish to take this privilege to thank the several Sunday Schools for the song-books they have sent. Some of those that sent books was the Burlington Sunday School, Amelia Sunday School, Sanford Sunday School and Henderson Sunday School. I thank all these Sunday Schools very much, and will try to use the books to the best possible advantage.

Where the funds to buy a Ford has not been very numerous as yet, I feel sure the Sunday Schools and classes are getting ready to send in their money, and very soon we will have the necessary funds to buy a Ford car.

I have received two individual checks, one from Dr. J. G. Holland, Hollands, Va., for $5.00, and one from Miss M. H. Morey, our mission worker here, for $5.00. Thank you, Brother Holland and Sister Morey, and let others follow your spirit and example.

I have another appeal to make. If any Church has installed any lighting system and has any lamps that they are not using, swinging or otherwise, they would be very much appreciated in the work here, for we are very much in need of lights at Elk Spur at present, and when we build the new Church down on the Fancy Gap Road we will need some for that place. If any Church has some they can donate, it will be greatly appreciated.

Again, the first, last and vital need is your prayers. Will you not forget to pray for the work and workers here. ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Fancy Gap, Va.

REPRESSION NOT SUFFICIENT.

Once, in India, a man reared a tiger cub. His kindness seemed to eradicate the ferocity of its nature, and it grew up as a pet. One day its owner, being alone with it in the library, caressed it, and gave it his hand to lick. The rough tongue of the animal grazed his skin, and gave the tiger its first taste of blood. Then its ferocious nature awoke. Fury gleamed from its eyes, and, crouching itself, it made ready to spring upon its master. Fortunately the gentleman had a loaded pistol on his table, and saved his life by shooting his former pet. The sleeping ferocity of the tiger, awakened by the taste of blood, illustrates the slumbering passion in man's hearts, which needs but the taste of strong temptation to burst into a terrible storm. One moment of triumphant passion may suffice to undo the work of half a lifetime. Does not this teach us that something more than repression is necessary? Diabolus begged hard that he might have a corner in Mansoul, be it ever so small, but Emmanuel would not consent to his possession of an inch. Do not rest, my reader, until this tiger in the soul has been utterly destroyed by Him who was manifested to destroy, not to tamper with, the works of the devil.—Exchange.

Have Christian young people any special duty toward these educational missionaries? Ought our interest to be expressed in any tangible way? The question is not a hard one to answer. Those on the firing line need the interest and undivided support of those at home. And those at home owe it as a labor not only of duty, but of love, to help. It would be an excellent plan for each society to write to its denominational mission board and ask the names of one or two missionaries with whom they could correspond. Do not think that it will be a burden to a missionary. Their hearts are eager for home contacts. Those at home so quickly forget. There are many little things which a Young People's Society can do for a missionary—things which will seem big and may mean souls saved out on the field. Every society ought to be in contact with at least one missionary, and have correspondence read aloud.

Rejected of his brethren, Joseph received them into his royal presence with joy. In the same way the King of kings is waiting to receive all who will come to Him before it is too late.

"There is no joy like the joy and satisfaction of being instrumental in the elevation of the fallen, the strengthening of the weak, and the helping of the needy."

"The only power that can save us and keep us is a personal experience of the reality of God. It is neglect of this that causes many Christians to collapse in midcareer, and the streams of religion are frozen," writes Thomas Phillips.

WILLETT

Sister Flora Elizabeth Willett was born March 30th, 1887, died March 13, 1923. She leaves a husband and four children: Alma, Lillie Bell, Willie Mack, Mary Lucy; father, W. N. Spivey; three brothers: George, Walter and Robert Spivey.

The deceased had been for some years a member of Graces Chapel, and the esteem in which she was held, as a Christian, relative and friend, was shown by the large crowd that filled the church during the funeral. May the kind Father comfort the bereaved husband and care for the motherless children.

T.

WICKER

Deacon A. W. Wicker passed to his reward February 22, at the age of 77 years, 11 months and 20 days. He is survived by three daughters: Mrs. H. C. Booker, Mrs. M. W. Arnold and Miss Annie Wicker; two sons: M. D. and A. B. Wicker; four brothers: Rev. J. D., A. B., W. H. and Duncan Wicker; one sister, Mrs. Margaret Pattishall.

He had long been a member of Turner's Chapel, and as deacon, secretary-treasurer, Sunday School superintendent, he was faithful and efficient in the discharge of every duty. He was a leader of acknowledged ability, in matters both of church and state, having represented his county in both houses of the General Assembly. Strong of conviction, eloquent of address, kind to all, he rendered an estimable service to his church and community. The large number attending the funeral attested the esteem in which he was held. May the Lord comfort the bereaved and cause his mantle to rest on a worthy successor.

R. L. Williamson.

PRITCHETT

Deacon Edgar Wills Pritchett fell asleep in death March 25, 1923, aged 52 years, 11 months and 9 days. He had suffered very severely for more than a week, and last Sunday evening his earthly career came to a close, just in the prime of his life. The funeral and burial took place the 27th, at Berea Christian Church, where he held his membership. He was a faithful husband, father, member of the church and a good citizen. He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, Mrs. Margaret H. Pritchett, five children: Edgar Davidson, George Hughey, Carl Turner, Mary Elizabeth, Jane Garrison; three sisters: Mrs. G. A. Albright, of Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. C. E. Zachary, Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. B. F. Hale, Pine Apple, Ala.; three brothers: C. E., Greenville, S. C.; V. C., Elizabeth, N. J.; and C. B., of Albany, Ga. The floral offering was fine. Funeral and burial service by the writer, assisted by Revs. A. F. Iseley, G. C. Crutchfield and W. T. Scott. God bless the bereaved ones.

RESOLUTIONS

The Ladies Aid Society of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Virginia, has been bereaved of a dear and faithful member. Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Cathrell passed away on Tuesday, January 9th, 1923, at her home and was laid to rest in Magnolia Cemetery on the 11th, having answered the last call. As a small tribute to her beautiful character we offer the following resolutions.

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father to take from our midst our dear Sister, therefore be it resolved:

First. That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Second. That in the death of our Sister the Society has lost a faithful member and loyal worker.

Third. That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy in their great sorrow.

Fourth. That we shall cherish the memory of Sister Cathrell, and that these resolutions be spread on the records of our society and a copy sent to the Christian Sun and the local papers, and a copy be forwarded to the bereaved family.

The Sad Death of Lord Carnarvon—

Lord Carnarvon, who headed the archaeological expedition which discovered the tomb of Tutankhamen, died the other day at Cairo, Egypt, from blood poisoning. It is supposed that he was bitten by some insect, which resulted in blood poisoning, and that was followed by pneumonia. Lady Carnarvon hastened to his bedside, taking with her a noted specialist from England.

Many people think it was the long stay in the depressing climate which so debilitated him as to weaken his power of resistance. The superstitious Egyptians, however, believe it was a curse sent on him for disturbing the resting place of one of their ancient kings.—Exchange.

Jackson Barnett—

There are some singular freaks in history as well as in nature. Jacob Barnett is one of the singular freaks in history. He is an Indian, living in Oklahoma, and is very rich. He owned some land which proved to be very rich in oil, from this land he is reaping a large harvest in dollars. It is said that now he has an immense fortune from his oil wells. Then, not long ago, he discovered the fact that the law of the land does not allow a tax on the land owned by Indians. As he had been paying taxes for some years, he sued the United States Government and has recovered the sum of $216,000. We say Jackson Barnett is a freak in history, for it is a rare thing for an Indian, or any one else, as for that, to fall in line with so much prosperity. We hope he will have the good sense to use his fortune well and wisely. We understand he is a Baptist and gave liberally to their $75,000,000 fund.

Great World Issues—

A few years ago we rarely heard of issues outside of the State. Then a bit later we got to hear of issues which concerned the whole country, but now in one short lifetime, State matters and nation-wide matters have hardly a place on the front page at all. They are in many instances too small. We are now concerned with world issues. And what are these world issues? The occupation of German territory by the French and its outcome; the effort to keep Europe at peace; the farmers' bloc; Bolshevism; social upheavals; theological eruptions; new doctrines; law enforcement; transportation by various methods; prohibition; world peace and world wars—and what will come next? Wait and see. The one subject that ought to be a world question is the salvation of the world through Jesus Christ, but the greater part of the people do not like to discuss that matter, although it is far more important than all the other world issues put together. It is wise, no doubt, to keep an eye on these world issues, but really some of us little men and women will have to look after the things which make for the best interests of our country, and this is the more important since our country is coming to hold such a big place in world affairs. We need to keep well and strong to enable us to do our part in keeping the world straight.

The Execution of Russian Prisoners—

A Catholic priest was recently shot to death in Russia by order of the Soviet Government. He was charged with working against that government and they claimed to prove the charges against him, and then they shot him to death. Some people are seeming to enter into a sort of a half-way agreement with the Soviet Government, inasmuch as these men may have done something against that government. Suppose they did, did that give them a right in the time of revolution to take a man's life because he was opposed to the revolutionary methods they were using. Our sympathy goes with the executed men, and for the reason that the Russian Soviet Government has done so many fooling things that we can scarcely imagine a priest doing something which would justify that government in putting such men to death. We were glad to see so many of the great nations protest against the execution of this priest, but while glad to see it, it also puzzles us to understand how it is that they were so prompt and brave to protest against the execution of this Catholic priest while they allow thousands of men, women and children to be executed in Armenia and not one word is said to put a stop to it. It really does look now as if the Turks may become the masters of the world, for all the great nations of Europe and other continents do seem to be afraid of Turkey. What does it mean? Is there any explanation of this strange situation?

Was P. T. Barnum Right?—

Many years ago P. T. Barnum, whose name was almost a household word in this country, said there were forty millions of people in the United States, but they were mostly fools. That is a pretty hard saying to be applied in just that way. Maybe he would not say it if he were living now, since we have taken our place as the richest nation in the world and now having more than one hundred millions of people, but all the same we do some foolish things now and then, and it seems that there is no way to save us from such a fate. No matter how much we educate our children, it seems that when they grow up, they forget their intellectual training, and just like all of the balance of the people we do some foolish things, and one of the foolish things we do is to take up with all sorts of people who come along, making a claim to some new thing, or to some great thing, and now and then maybe to both. Listen. Here comes along Conan Doyle, claiming that he has discovered that the living may have communication with the dead, and the people flock to hear him and pay their money to do so, thus making the rich richer, and there is nothing in it except the richer are getting richer at the expense of Barnum's acquaintances. It does look like the people, now many of them, love to be humbugged. Then here comes along a man by the name of Coue, a Frenchman, telling the people that they can get well almost by saying, "I am getting better every day," and it is said after a recent trip through the United States he went back home with well-filled pockets, for which he left practically nothing behind except Barnum's friends. We are a great people, no doubt about it, but who will help us to do the right thing? We need a guide, but who would follow him, if we had him?

Not Very Wise, Though Rich—

There are some monied men who are very sensible and yet manage to do some very foolish things. Young Rockefeller is reputed to be very wealthy and, as was recently published in these columns, has the good sense to teach his children how to live economically and how to be careful in spending their money. We commended him highly for this good sense, but now an item is floating around in the press which is not so much to his credit, as we see it. The following is the item, which we clip from The Biblical Recorder:

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has appropriated a large amount of money to establish a bureau of social hygiene. This bureau seems to be completely out of something to do, as they sent out a questionnaire to one thousand married women asking if they had "spooned" before they were married. The answers were various and some of them nauseating.

The Raleigh Evening Times, in a very vigorous editorial, paid its respects to this nonsensical questionnaire. The language in which the editor of the Times expressed himself will hardly do for the columns of the Recorder, but we endorse his sentiments.

The social hygiene business is greatly overdone. We have seen little girls, hardly out of their teens, going over the country lecturing on social hygiene. We sympathize much with Safed the Sage in his discussion of "Eugenicks." He took Keturah to hear a lecture on eugenics which was delivered to an audience, many of whom were old maids and most of the others were childless women. On the way home he said:

"But thou, Keturah, who knowest mighty little about Eugenicks, has practiced it in the positive way. For thou hast given unto the world five strong, healthy children, and these have married other five, and unto these God has given other children. Thou art the mother of more good, wholesome, promising American manhood and womanhood than that entire bunch."

NOTES-PERSONALS

It may be that you think our Men and Millions are making most urgent calls for the promised money, and we are, but the large denominations we believe are having a harder time to collect than we are.

Those interested in the premiums to be offered for subscriptions to THE SUN will get busy. Line up your prospective subscribers. There will be no time to lose. Prizes will vary in price from that of a Bible, dictionary, typewriter, etc., to that of an automobile.

The "One-Day School of Missions," held by the Woman's Board of Missions of the North Carolina Christian Conference in Henderson, on April 8th, was a profitable occasion. Miss M. H. Morey, of the Mountain Mission, Fancy Gap, Va., was present and spoke to the people of the great and good work in which she is engaged. Dr. Atkinson was detained by sickness, so he could not be present; but, all in all, the occasion was one of real interest.

Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of our First Church, Norfolk, Va., is in a series of meetings at this time, from which he is looking for gracious fruitage. He is doing the preaching himself, and the music is furnished by a chorus choir. Among the subjects he will discuss are the following: "Sin No More," "Crossing the Gulf," "Playing at Religion," "Lost and Don't Know It," "Bitter Waters," "In Danger of Hell Fire," "The Greatest Confession," etc.

If the number of THE SUN'S readers is to be increased it will be necessary to do a great deal of personal solicitation. And in some way this expenditure of effort must be rewarded. Premiums are being arranged for in order to compensate for the work done. One would like to secure a standard unabridged dictionary, another a portable standard typewriter, and still another a radio equipment or an automobile To obtain such a prize will require work, and you can solicit outside of your own Church or denomination.

If you will study the weekly reports of Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, the superintendent of our Orphanage, you will find it interesting to observe how the people answer his calls for help for helpless children. Let us do our best for the orphans. There is no better work for your prayers and money than taking care of the dear children who have been deprived of their natural protectors. All pulling together, we shall do the work well, and what a good work it is. Think of it—we are now caring for 100 orphans There must be joy in heaven over such a blessed work.

The largest Church in America is said to be the First Presbyterian Church, Seattle, Wash. Dr. Mark A. Matthews is pastor. He has been pastor for twenty-one years. The membership now numbers 7,491. Seven hundred and seventy new members were added during the last year. During Dr. Matthews' pastorate of twenty-one years, 13,576 members have been added. The Church is now planning for a school and Bible institute building to cost $1,000,000, and Dr. Matthews is pushing that. It is said that the Church is very thoroughly organized, every member being on one committee or another. That makes a clean sweep of the membership—every member being on some committee.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., was in Henderson, N. C., on Sunday afternoon and evening of April 8th. In the afternoon he addressed the "Woman's One-Day School of Missions," and at night he preached for the pastor and gave a very strong sermon on the opening of the eyes spiritually. We believe the audience was deeply and favorably impressed by the sermon. He was returning from his appointment at Mt. Auburn.

The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 North La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill., has recently published a little booklet entitled "How Rationalism in the Pulpit Makes Worldliness in the Pew," by that daring spirit, the Rev. John Roach Stratton, D. D., pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York City. The price is 5 cents a copy, or 50 cents a dozen; 100 copies for $3.50 for general distribution among the people. We have read it with much interest, and commend it as a spiritual tonic, just suited to this day and time, just what is needed to correct some spiritual disorders now prevalent in the modern Church. You may order, if you desire, from Mr. William Norton, 826 North La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill. It is well worth your money and your time and attention. Dr. Stratton is a Southern man, if we mistake not, but now serving as pastor in New York City, right in the midst of the most daring modernists, and yet he does not hesitate to stand for and preach the old Gospel of the Son of God.

What is the best Church news of the week? Is there anything better than the fact that the Christian Church is now caring for 100 orphans in the Orphanage at Elon College, N. C.? Great trees from little acorns grow. More than forty years ago we began to call on the children of the Christian Church to raise a little fund for benevolences of various kinds. That was the acorn planted in the earth. The sprout did not appear for a long while, but finally, under Aunt Minnie (now of blessed memory), the thought of some definite work was developed, and later the Orphanage took shape. We then had less than $100 and no land and no buildings. Since that day the Christian Church has taken a long step forward, and now we have buildings and land easily worth over $100,000, and at the same time we are caring for 100 orphans. That is a good long step in the right direction, and we believe our people are grateful for the orphanage and the good it is enabling the Christian Church to do. Let us do a better part by this good work, for we all know that it will take a good deal of supplies to care for all of these children.

We have just received a copy of Dr. D. A. Long's booklet on Jefferson Davis, and though we had read it through in manuscript form before it was printed, and though it reached us on a morning when we were very busy getting matter ready for THE SUN columns, we laid aside all other duties for a short time and read it again. We did so because of the impression the first reading gave us of the masterly production. We wished to see if a second reading would still justify our estimate of it, and we say unhesitatingly that instead of diminishing our estimate of this rare production, it increased it. More than ever we feel that this paper has no competitor in modern literature, and must, as we believe, take a strong hold upon all of its readers. It is not in the true sense a sectional view of Jefferson Davis, but really a national estimate of the great leader, not on Dr. Long's individual estimate, but upon the estimate of the leading men of the North, as well as of the South, as is shown in this booklet; not so much from Dr. Long's ipse dixit as upon sayings of such men as Abraham Lincoln, Stephen A. Douglass, Prof. John W. Burgess, of Columbia University. Hon. William H. Seward, Horace Greely and many others, who have proclaimed their views as in harmony with Jefferson Davis on the very points for which the South went to war. It may be ordered of Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., Franklinton, N. C. Price 35 cents copy.

A writer in the North Carolina Christian Advocate tells of a man who, on coming into a strange town, inquired as to how many "filling stations" the town had, and after thinking a moment, he said, "Five." Then he asked, "How many newspapers have you"? "One," was the reply, "and that can hardly live because of the little support that is given." "Well, then, how many book stores have you"? "Not one," was the answer. "And how many libraries have you"? "Not one," was the answer. That is rather a poor commendation to a stranger—five filling stations for automobiles and not one for the minds of the people. No newspapers, no book stores, and no libraries, but five filling stations for automobiles! Does not the heart and mind of man need filling stations as surely as automobiles? And if an automobile will not go without filling stations to serve it, how can we expect any great intelligence among the people when there is no filling stations from which they may draw for the needs of the mind and heart. Reader, how many filling stations are there in your life, where you may fill the heart and mind and soul upon the great truths of God? Remember, you cannot live on nothing, and if you try to do it, failure for you is inevitable, and failure in this matter will mean failure largely hereafter. See that you have filling stations in your life work. Fill the mind and heart and soul as well as the body, if you would live and be happy and useful always.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION TO MEET IN HENDERSON, N. C.

The First Christian Church, of Henderson, N. C., Dr. J. P. Barrett, pastor, has extended the Convention an invitation to meet in Henderson for the extraordinary session, to be held this spring.

The Executive Committee appreciates this invitation, and hereby gives official notice of this acceptance.

The Convention will open Tuesday, May 1, 1923, at 3 P. M., and will close with the evening service Thursday, May 3rd.

The Henderson Church is a good Church, but not as strong as some, and I, as President, without the Church's consent, am suggesting that if any minister or delegate wants to help them in the entertainment, you can do so by simply writing, requesting them to arrange for you at the hotel, you paying your bills. This is only a suggestion, and I apologize to the Church now for making it. L. E. SMITH, Pres.

NOTICE.

All persons expecting to attend the forthcoming session of the Southern Christian Convention to meet with the Christian Church in Henderson, N. C., May 1st, and who desire entertainment at the hands of the Church are requested to notify me, as the pastor of the Church, at your earliest convenience. We will not hold ourselves responsible to provide entertainment for those who do not notify me. If you wish to engage rooms at hotels at your own expense, please let us know and we will do our best for you.

Very sincerely yours,

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Henderson, N. C.

We were permitted to see recently a letter from a high official in the public school work of North Carolina, stating that a new book, entitled "The Place of Jefferson Davis in History," has been unanimously recommended by the North Carolina State Board of Education to be placed on the supplementary list for use in the schools of North Carolina. This book was written by our beloved brother, Rev. D. A. Long, A. M., D. D., LL. D., Franklinton, N. C. We have read the manuscript personally, and do not hesitate to say that, for a work of that kind, we have read nothing like it in all literature. We believe Dr. Long has upset all the theories of those who opposed Mr. Davis in his ideas of government. He introduces as witnesses Mr. Lincoln and many others of the leading men of Mr. Lincoln's day. The book will be off the press and ready for readers by April 7th. If Dr. Long's book cannot be upset by the enemies of Mr. Davis, and we do not believe it can be done, then Mr. Long will put Jefferson Davis in a new light and henceforth the man will occupy a new place in the political and governmental history of our common country. The book will sell for 35 cents a copy. The right course has been taken to give Mr. Davis his rightful place in history, for when the school children get these truths in their minds the next generation will reverse the present opinions of the great leader of the Confederacy. Dr. Long may expect to be attacked as to the facts in this book, but as we see it, we believe the facts are invulnerable. Do you ask what can be accomplished by such a discussion? Truth always has right to be heard. Mr. Davis has a right to the place truth gives him, and we honor Dr. Long for giving truth a chance to put this great man right in the estimation of his countrymen. We have seen so much of effort to put men in a wrong light before their fellows that we feel, when a man has been wronged, it is a great privilege to stand for him, in so far as the truth sustains the facts, as it does in this case, as we believe, beyond all question. If you wish to be waked up from a solid nap, get this book and give it a careful reading, and we believe you will get your eyes open to facts you did not know were in existence. That is the way the reading of the manuscript, before it was printed, served this writer. We were no partisan for Mr. Davis, personally, but when we got the facts, as an honest man and a lover of truth, there was nothing else to do but to right about face and take a new view of Mr. Davis as the great leader in the struggle of the Confederacy. We like to see justice done to all men, and we believe Dr. Long has given Mr. Davis the first chance he has had at a good square piece of justice. You can get a copy of this book by sending 35 cents to Dr. Long at address given above.

Chicago is to have another great university. It is proposed to raise $10,000,000. It is to be located almost in the center of the business district. There will be one building of many stories, since the business buildings around the location are very high. Of course, there will be many other buildings, but the one will be made of many stories. We presume it will be a Methodist institution, as the report is sent out by the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

The beloved Rev. J. R. Miller once said: "Life is not a diamond, but a seed with possibilities of endless growth." A diamond does not grow. It does not get richer, nor does it gain in power, but a life should be all the while doing these things in reaching out and after God and His truth.

The Wonder-Workings of Grace

By Rev. Jack Spratt.

"And all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth."—Luke 4:22.

We like to talk of the marvels of engineering, the marvels of astronomy, the marvels of the heavenly bodies, the marvels of electricity, the marvels of science, and while these may be all very interesting, yet to the man who realizes the wickedness of his own heart, the marvels of grace exceed them all, for nothing else in all the world can give him such a hope of salvation as the wonders of the gracious words from the mouth of the Son of God. How difficult it seems for man to receive the gifts for the divine life and then live according to their demands!

Man has so set his heart and mind on the things of the earth that it seems quite impossible for him to grasp and appropriate the greater gifts of God to His people in Christ. We have seen the weakness of earthly values till it is difficult for the man in sin to bring himself to believe that God really means what He says, or that it is possible to even hope to receive by faith such rare gifts. Indeed, they do not understand the virtue of faith. How can such an intangible thing as faith bring us from the treasure house of God inestimable spiritual gifts? You know it is said of Abraham that he believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness; that is to say, that believing was counted to him for righteousness. Believing God greatly pleases Him. Paul tells us in Heb. 11:6 that without faith it is impossible to please Him.

If a man gives one of his fellows a farm, he counts that as a real gift, but if God gives a man everlasting life, why the man is not so certain of that. All he lacks is faith—let him believe and eternal life will speedily become the most real thing of his possessions. He will soon leave the farm, but eternal life will go with him as the most real of all of his possessions, and it abides always.

This morning I wish to name some of His gifts that will remain ours forever.

1. Jesus was to give Eternal Life to as many as God had given Him.—These are the words of Scripture. In John 17:2, we read: "That He (Jesus) would give us eternal life to as many as Thou has given Him." What a gift! But what is eternal life? I fear many have some unwarranted ideas of what eternal life is—what is it? Some seem to think it is simply living forever. It may be that. I think it is, but that is not all of it. Eternal life is not only lasting, nor is lasting the only or the main quality in it. Eternal life is the life of God given to us in its best, happiest and richest form known to mortals. That is His special gift to them that believe in Him through Jesus Christ our Lord and Master.

Again, Jesus defined eternal life when He said: "This is eternal life, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou has sent." Now, you can see that a knowledge of God and His Son, whom he sent to us is very necessary in order to enter into eternal life through Jesus Christ. Jesus Himself said that eternal life is to know God and Jesus Christ, whom He had sent. That is final and authoritative.

2. Salvation and safety belong to the True Believer.—Jesus, speaking to His Father face to face, as it were, says: "I have manifested Thy name unto the men which Thou has given Me out of the world; Thine they were, and Thou gavest them me; and they have kept Thy word." —John 17:6.

Now, think of the wonders of grace in human life. He manifested (revealed) God's name unto men. He tells what these men were:

1. They were in the world, in sin and in the way to ruin.

2. God took them out of the world and gave them to Jesus—the gifts He purchased with His own death.

3. They have kept Thy word. They did not neglect it or throw it away. They hid it away in their own hearts till it bloomed out, making them Christ-like in life, character and service. How wonderful is the Word of God when planted in the human heart!

4. Again, as if to remind them, He says in John 17:26: "I have declared unto them Thy name, and will declare it, that the love wherewith Thou has loved Me may be in them and I in them."

He brings as one the rich gifts to men the love with which God had loved Him. That ought to be good enough for any of us. What a gift!

3. Jesus Explains why the World hates the People of God.—In John 17:14, we read: "I have given them Thy Word, and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world."

You see the world hates the people of God, not because it has anything against them, but because they try to follow the Word which He has given them. No doubt about it, the world hates the man who obeys the Word of God. But why should they? Oh, it is not because the life is good, but because such a life rebukes the sin that is in the world. When you live right your life slaps in the face the man who does not try to live according to God's Word.

4. To the True Believer, Jesus gives His Love, that His joy may be Fulfilled in us.—The love of Jesus kept in the believer's heart keeps him full of joy, and I know of no other way the believer's heart can be kept full of joy, for apart from Jesus there is no real joy. How long it does take the world (the men and women of the world(to learn this fact! Perhaps the most common sin today and the worst sin is neglecting Jesus.

5. And Lastly, Jesus Gives His Disciples the Glory He had with the Father before the Foundation of the World.—He declared it in plain words: "The glory which Thou gavest Me, I have given them, that they may be one even as we are one." But what was that glory? Was it not the truth of God? Did He not, when He sent Jesus down to this world, clothe Him with the glory of God's truth? And did not Jesus give this truth to His disciples, as the very life of the Christian faith? Did He not also give them the Holy Spirit, the very Shekinah of God, and with it all the fullness of the divine life and its blessed fruitage now and always?

Henderson, N. C.

A GRAVE MATTER—WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT IT?

If there were no opposition to the Church, we presume it would rust out from inactivity, and that would be worse than being in a great and terrible battle. It is said that if we wish to save a man who is outdoors and in a dreadful snow-storm, when everything about him is freezing, then give him charge of a man who is already almost frozen in the same storm. His efforts to save the other man will enable him to hold out and save himself from freezing; and so after all, it would seem that there is much good in a hard task—helping to save not only the man who is so exposed and helpless, but the effort to do that work will lend warmth to the man who is in the struggle, so that it may be in his efforts to save a man whose life is in danger he may save himself also, and in that case the struggle would be a blessing to both.

May it not be somewhat that way when the Church has so many enemies to fight? If she had no enemies to call out her best in service, why then the inactivity of the Church might be the means of making her yield to the great enemy of souls. So it seems as if by the time one can get a victory over the devil and his angels, and feel like we have a little let up in the battle, why there comes another, and maybe fully as strong, and maybe a little stronger, than we had to contend with before, and so the Church must put up another fight against evil, and in so doing, she gets great help from herself. Then it must be that the friends of the cause of Christ are helped in their great work by the enemies of the Son of God.

It is only a few brief years since we fought the battle with John Barleycorn and defeated him, and we thought the great struggle was over, but alas! when that point was reached, the liquor men just began to fight in earnest, and now we not only have to keep up the battle against John Barleycorn, in his effort to regain what he has lost, but following right along, almost in the tracks of the liquor business, in an effort to keep the situation well in hand, why here comes the moving picture business, and it is doing almost, and may be more, harm than did the liquor business in its worst days among the people. So, though we have conquered one enemy, yet now he is trying to rally and come back, and fearing defeat in its fight against the Church, he has gone out and worked up another great battle and brings it along with him to help keep John Barleycorn in the field, if possible. This additional battle against the Church is waged by the moving-picture business, and it is an awful battle. It has, if possible, more subtle and wicked influences standing by and giving help to the liquor business.

Not many of the people know of the real character of the motion-picture business, and consequently they are doing almost nothing to save the cause of Christ from the evil work of these unholy pictures. You know pictures reach the brain and make a lodging-place there for themselves more readily even than did the whiskey business. Even the Church itself is not at all awake on this question—hundreds of Church people not only attend these shows, but they defend them with a courage which is worthy of a better cause. As a matter of fact, our country must be awakened to the dangers which are now confronting them in this great battle against the moving-picture business, and the quicker the Church gets on its fighting armor, the better it will be for both the Church and the world.

The editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate scents the danger from a distance, and he is getting his war paint put on, that he may step into the place of battle and do his best for the cause of his Master, and so in a recent issue he said:

"We feel we must again warn the people of Virginia of the untiring efforts of the motion picture producers to override and destroy censorship of the pictures. The following appeared in a Richmond paper about the time the Legislature refused to increase the salary of the censors:

" 'Announcement was made today that the motion-picture industry intends to conduct a serious campaign at the next session of the Virginia Legislature for a repeal of the present censorship laws. The producers are heartened by the fact that Governor Al Smith, of New York, has recommended the repeal of censorship in that State and that already the Senate judiciary committee has approved the bill to that effect.

" 'Yesterday word was received from Nebraska that censorship was defeated in the Senate on a vote of 21 to 12. From Tennessee came the news that censorship had been killed in the Senate judiciary committee, which is tantamount to admitting that this committee considered it unworthy of consideration.

" 'The producers plan a campaign of education in Virginia on an extensive scale, and, with the aid of a committee composed of prominent men and women, they hope that the result will be as successful as it was in Massachusetts.'

"It will, therefore, be clearly seen that the powerful picture trust is determined not to be disturbed in its greed to coin gold out of pictures that cater to base things and will be on hand at the next Legislature to do all that can be done to overthrow censorship in Virginia. And they will have the smartest men money can buy and the money to pay all bills. Their argument is that no board should be given the power to decide what is fit for the people to see. Of course they feel the producers, who are dominated by Jews and Catholics, and whose first and last aim is greed for gain at any cost, should be trusted with this all-important decision. The board selected by the people and composed of well-picked men and women who have the interest of the people at heart cannot decide this question, but the producers who are to profit by all the passions they can stir can be left to decide this matter. To state that argument is to refute it.

"The battle is on, and it is on against a trust as greedy and unscrupulous as was the liquor traffic that would override Constitutions and sneer at law, ruin homes and damn souls for the money that was in it. There is no matter that threatens the morals of the coming generation more than uncensored movies. As Christian people and patriotic folks who love home and State, we cannot afford to surrender to these Jewish and Romist money-lovers who have no interest in our boys and girls beyond the coin they can wrest from them. We call upon all good Virginians and all Methodists to rally as one man against this foe that proposes to invade our State and pillage our homes. Be ready when the time comes and see that these greedy money-changers know the stuff you are made of.

"Look out for their tactics. They will starve the board as they have tried to do. It was said, and said by some of our women, that we could get censors to work for less salary. Sure, if you let it be known you can sell the job to some office-seekers like the position of hat-checker sold in a New York hotel for ten thousand dollars. We can't afford to make it a cheap job that looks for those who will take it at the lowest bid. We have folks of honor and standing as well as ability on this board, and it is our duty to stand by them and not let them or our law be trodden underfoot by foreign money-gatherers. Be on the job, Virginians"!

WHO WILL CHALLENGE HIM TO ACT?

That looks rather belligerent, and yet it is sometimes needful for the sake of the truth to call for the evidence. There is in the American Association for the Advancement of Science a champion of evolution, and that body has recently gone on record, so the public press has it, to the effect that that body has formulated its faith in evolution as follows:

"So far as the scientific evidences of the evolution of plants, animals and man are concerned, there is no ground whatever for the assertion that these evidences constitute a mere guess. No scientific generalization is more strongly supported by thoroughly tested evidences than is that of organic evolution."

Now, friend, suppose you just buckle on your harness and give us the evidence you claim to have. That is not saying that your word is not good, but we should like to have the real thing—the evidence that man has actually come up from the monkey to his present exalted position in the world. You need not write a book to do this, just give us in as few and as plain words as possible—words that the average man can understand—and if we are convinced that you have the truth with you we will publish the evidences to our large number of readers. Now, please excuse us if we seem a little over anxious for the evidence, and give it to us in plain language.

Again this association declares:

"The evidences in favor of the evolution of man are sufficient to convince every scientist of note in the world. The evidences are increasing in number and importance every year."

Now, then, since that is so, you cannot refuse to give the people who do not happen to be scientists of note a crumb of your truth—you need not bother enough to give us all the evidences you and your associates have found, but just give us enough to prove beyond a doubt that the missing link between the monkey and the man has been found, and be sure to give it to us in such plain language that we may get your exact meaning, for we must be sure of the ground on which we are to stand before we can step off the solid foundation of good, common sense and the evidences of written history. Please hurry up your positive evidences, for we are anxious to have the real truth without any varnish.

You see we would not be so particular as to the evidences you have were it not for the fact that you scientific men have made so many mistakes in modern times that we cannot trust you in this matter till you bring out the evidences, fully proved, even to showing us the missing link so plainly that we shall know that evolution is at least a certainty. If you think I am just funning with you as to this matter, let me give you one of the big mistakes you or some of your associates have made, and then you surely will be generous enough to say, "Well, with such mistakes as that made by ourselves, we really do not blame you to be particular as to what you accept as evidences. Now, in case you can prove that scientists did not make the mistakes I am about to name, why prove it and so hush our every mouth.

"Not many years ago scholars and scientists emphatically asserted that Moses—granting he ever did live—could not have written the Pentateuch for the simple reason that the art of writing was not known in his day. But presently there came along a man with a pick and a spade, who, digging along the Nile, uncovered a library of letters written by the kings of Babylon to the pharaohs of Egypt many years before the birth of Moses. Later these scholars confessed that their declaration was an unfortunate hypothesis which was no longer tenable."

But that is not all. Soon following that mistake this one was announced. Read it, as follows, and give us the evidence that you did not make this mistake also:

"Again, other eminent scholars said that the Exodus was a myth, because historically it was impossible. Besides, the fact that no other records mention it branded it with the certitude of legendary origin. Soon after came another man with a spade, and unearthed a burial crypt from which was taken a mummy wrapped with bands of fine linen on which was written a description of the Hebrew Exodus. The scholars quietly said, when this fact was discovered, "We guessed wrong."

But that is not enough. Here is another mistake. Please explain that also, as you seem to have a plenty of evidence:

But while you are giving evidences, you may as well give us a plenty, so that we may be fully convinced, and not have to come back for more evidence. Your cocksureness seems to justify us in asking for a plenty of proof along all of these lines.

"Once more, eminent scholars told us that the Bible was wrong because no such people as the Hittites ever lived. They never lived because there is no record of them, apart from the Bible; therefore, it was a thoroughly tested scientific fact that the Bible was mistaken. Just then the man with the pick came to the valley of the Euphrates, and digged up seals, cylinders and the ruins of cities which conclusively showed that the Hittites not only lived at the time the Bible says they did, but also they were a great and warlike people. Again the scholars acknowledged that their conclusion was based on insufficient evidence. They did not have enough data. That is their failing."

When you give us the evidences for which we are asking, just be careful what you say because the man with a pick is so likely to upset your conclusions, and you will have to admit that your guessing was not quite so well founded as you had hoped it was. We conclude our challenge to you in the words of another, who has seemed to run into your arguments most unexpectedly (unexpectedly to you, we mean). He says:

"We want the truth, and are anxious to follow it, but feel that scholarship alone cannot disclose the truth so long as it uses the imagination rather than reason. If scientists can prove that man came from an animal ancestry we will accept the fact. But the burden of proof is not on us, and until the proof is produced we are not to be considered either ignorant or stubborn simply because we refuse to be gullible."

THIS MAN CHANGED HIS FAITH.

In this day when the faith of so many men is being broken up and shattered, it is not so surprising that a change of faith occurs now and then from the wrong side to the right side. It is a source of real satisfaction to note, for we always like to see men turn to the truth.

The Presbyterian Standard publishes the following confession of a Presbyterian minister who had regarded the virgin birth as not essential to salvation who has come to see the idea from another angle and he expresses himself accordingly. As we think, he does it well.

So far as we see the merits of this question, the thing that makes the virgin birth essential to salvation is the fact that if Jesus was born of natural parentage on both sides, then that fact alone robs Him of the character that qualifies Him to become a Saviour of the lost. If Joseph and Mary were His real parents, then He was a bastard, and, as such, had nothing to make Him the divine Son of God, and if this be true, then he could not be a Saviour of the lost, and we have no one who is able to save to the uttermost. It takes more than human character to save from sin. We are indeed glad to know that this minister has changed his attitude on this question and now believes the virgin birth of Jesus Christ is essential. In discussing this matter, the Rev. William H. Richardson, of Nashville, Tenn., the man who experienced a change in his convictions as to the virgin birth being essential in the person of the Saviour of sinners, says through The Presbyterian Standard as follows:

"The Virgin Birth," a sermon preached by John M. Vander Meulen, in the First Presbyterian Church, Oak Park, Ill., January 27, 1918, has been received by myself and other ministers. It seems to have been "broadcasted." I have read it with care. I thoroughly disagree with one of the statements he makes, and believe the statement to be unscriptural, unorthodox. On pages four and five, he says: "A couple of years ago I was in a company of ministers to whom a theological professor read a paper on the topic, 'The Essential Doctrine of the Virgin Birth.' In the discussion and criticism of the paper, three other ministers and myself took the ground that, while we agreed with the professor in believing in the truth and actuality of the virgin birth, we did not agree with him in regarding it as essential, if by that he meant essential to salvation; that if a man believe in the deity and atonemen and resurrection of Jesus, he had hold of the greatest essentials of the Christian faith." Now, I agree with the theological professor that the virgin birth is an "essential doctrine," fundamental to a true Christian faith. How can one believe in the "deity, atonement and resurrection" of Jesus Christ who does not believe in His sinless birth? How can one believe in the deity of Jesus Christ, yet believe that His father was a man of sin? "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee, therefore, that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."—Luke 1:35. "Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife, for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost."—Matt. 1:20. The conception and birth of Jesus Christ was a miracle of God. The Scriptures teach that no man ever could claim paternal connection with Jesus. As Kuyper says in his book, "The Work of the Holy Spirit," page 82, "Excluding the man, the Scripture thrice puts the Holy Spirit in the foreground as the Author of the conception." "Therefore, the Lord Himself shall give you a sign, behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a Son, and shall call His name Immanuel."—Isa. 7:16. I agree with Dr. Robert Alexander Webb, the late professor of apologetics and systematic theology in the Presbyterian Seminary of Louisville, Ky., who says in his book on "Christian Salvation, its Doctrines and Experience," page 62: "The prophecy has defined the mother of Jesus Christ to be a virgin who was impregnated only by supernatural power." I subscribe also to another statement made by Kuyper, page 82: "In the conception of Christ not a new being was called into life as in all other cases, but One who had existed from eternity, and who then entered into vital relation with the human nature. The Scripture clearly reveals this. Christ existed from before the foundation of the world. His goings forth were of old, from the days of eternity. He took upon Himself the form of a servant. Even though the biologist should discover the mystery of the human birth, it could not reveal anything regarding the conception of the mediator. It is not the conception of a human person, but of a human nature. Where a new being is conceived, a human person comes into existence. But when the Person of the Son, who was with the Father from eternity, partakes of our flesh and blood, He adopts our human nature in the unity of His person, thus becoming a true man; but it is not the creation of a new person. The Scriptures clearly show this. In Christ appears one ego, being in the same person at once the Son of God and the Son of man."

Is this doctrine of the virgin birth fundamental and essential to the Christian faith, or is it non-essential?

As it was through the Christian papers the ministers of our Church were requested to preach on this subject, might it not be well and for the edification of our people if you would permit its discussion in your columns?

A SLAM AT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH! WHAT ABOUT IT, BRETHREN?

In the North Carolina Christian Advocate of March 8th we find a most suggestive paragraph, contributed by some Methodist minister, at least we guess it was, who had visited the grave of James O'Kelly. The following is the paragraph which we wish our people to read and then tell us what you think of it. Is it not true that the grave of James O'Kelly has been shamefully neglected? The paragraph reads as follows:

AT THE GRAVE OF JAMES O'KELLY.

James O'Kelly, who broke with Francis Asbury in the early days of Methodism in this country and founded the Christian Church, lies buried about ten miles south of Durham, a little off the Fayetteville road. His grave, with about a half dozen others, is back of the house now occupied by a colored family in the edge of the woods. A low rock wall surrounds the graveyard, which is now overgrown with trees, some of which are three or four inches in diameter. The whole place has an air of neglect.

A stone about twenty inches square at the base and six feet high, almost an obelisk in form, stands at the head of the grave. On the west side are inscribed these words:

Erected by His Christian Friends to the Memory of
James O'Kelly, of N. C.,
"The Southern Champion of Christian Freedom."

No dates are given and nothing to indicate in what cause was he "The Champion of Christian Freedom." We would like to know who is quoted in that and in what respect he was the champion of Christian freedom. Surely, the mere matter of an issue about Church government did not involve Christian freedom to any extent.

We feel that this grave ought to have more consideration, and we think it a pity that the inscription was not fuller.

We believe that we ought to perpetuate the memory of James O'Kelly as the founder of the Christian Church in some substantial way. We suggest that a monument, worthy of the man, ought to be built at Elon College, N. C. It can be done. Why not build one of the new buildings in memory of James O'Kelly and then have a statue of the man put in some suitable place in that building. It can be done, and it ought to be done, as an act of appreciation of our first great human leader, as a denomination. Brethren, let us hear from you as to what you think of the suggestion. We respectfully ask Dr. W. W. Staley to tell this brother what he wishes to know as to the "Champion of Christian Freedom." Will you please do it, Doctor?

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference formed an association years ago, and they have held meetings in Norfolk, sometimes monthly, for eleven months in the year; sometimes every two months; at the present, the association meets monthly for eight months in the year—October to May. There were fifteen present the 9th of April. Monday is the day of the week on which the meetings are held.

All sorts of methods have been used in these meetings. The study of a book with a leader or teacher. Reviews of books by appointed reviewers; discussion of current topics, Church interests and Church enterprises. When the meeting is over, we often lunch together. By these meetings we keep posted as to what is being done in the Churches, keep in sympathetic touch with one another, and this prevents jealousies and misunderstandings. A more brotherly set of good fellows seeking the interest of the kingdom and the Christian Church would be hard to find. Our method of meeting the expense of the meetings is by "pooling" expenses. It costs the ministers in Norfolk the same that it costs the minister in Waverly or Holland.

While at luncheon in Southland Hotel at the last meeting, this matter of "pooling" for delegates to the Southern Convention was discussed and a straw vote was practically unanimous. It was suggested that the ministerial delegates and lay delegates pool separately. If this were agreed to, it would cost a nearby minister the same it would an Alabama delegate; but it would enable the Alabama minister to attend. It would equalize the expense so that all would share alike. The same would be true of laymen. Of course, this would apply to traveling expenses only. It would mean railroad fare from home to place of meeting and return. Side expenses, expenses while at the place of meeting would be a matter for individuals themselves. Our association considers this matter of sufficient importance to receive consideration.

I was not authorized to write this, but I am doing it for the delegates to think about before the Henderson meeting. It is not as easy for a minister in Georgia or Alabama or Delaware to come to Henderson as it is for delegates from Virginia or North Carolina. With such an arrangement, the sessions could be held in one section as well as another. If you read this, think about it and speak to some other delegate about it.

ELON LETTER.

The "Buckeye Limited," Cleveland to Washington, is rushing us at terrific rate toward the Capitol City of our nation. I have been attending the twentieth session of the Religious Education Association in Cleveland. Hermon Eldredge was there, as also was Rev. E. D. Gilbert.

The Religious Education Association is about the size of the American Christian Convention or the Federal Council. It is absolutely democratic in its organization, membership and conduct. Jews and Catholics, as well as Protestants are active in its sessions. Naturally there is no unanimity of opinion. It does not issue findings or make a pronouncement at its sessions. It publishes a summary or narrative in brief compass of the various ideas expressed. Authority counts for nothing in such an assembly. If you are not prepared to defend your idea, you had better not express it.

Since it was the twentieth annual session, a historical sketch of the nineteen previous sessions was given, and then these leading workers in religious education adjusted themselves to prophesying what should be the aim of such workers for the next twenty years. No man is wise enough to say what twenty years can bring forth, but there was agreement along what lines progress would likely be made.

The writer was asked to prepare in advance a paper on "How May Denominational Boards Plan for the Next Twenty Years." The paper was printed and placed in the hands of the body for reading and made the subject of discussion at Friday afternoon's session.

The plan I submitted was that provided for by the recent session of the American Christian Convention, uniting all the boards of education of our Church into a single board of Christian education. Mr. Eldredge, in a splendid speech, outlined the plan and advocated its need. When he sat down, the applause indicated that our plan has the approval of the great thinkers of the nation. We felt we were right before. Our hearts are stoutened now for the task of making our plan effective. I will never again be superstitious about Friday or the thirteenth.

Mr. Eldredge made another fine contribution to the gathering. The matter under discussion was, "What are the Motives for Human Conduct Today"? The highest motive listed in the printed articles was humanitarianism. Mr. Eldredge said there was one still higher—the duty we owe God. His suggestion was applauded to the echo and constantly referred to throughout the remaining sessions.

One very definite thought advocated and agreed to was the absolute need that denominational colleges should provide religious education laboratory facilities. Just as a modern college must have a science building, so it must have a religious building, with provision for all the religious and social activities and organizations of the campus and with a model arrangement for a clinical Sunday School and week-day religious school. This is what will differentiate the Christian College from the State and independent college, it was concluded. There is certainly thought here for Elon.

I enjoyed the R. E. A., but my attendance there brought a brief cessation in our Elon emergency fund efforts. They will be resumed with full vigor when I reach home. Before I left, however, a splendid lover of the Christian Church and of Elon gladdened my heart with a gift of $5,000 to the endowment to be used in providing for the education of one young minister a year. He is a layman, but he knows what necessity we are under to provide ministers for our Churches, and so has established this foundation. God bless this great-hearted servant of His, and grant that others may follow in his train.

It is snowing without, but a warm welcome awaits me in a little college town, where a loving heart keeps vigil for my return. "Home, Sweet Home"; there is no place like home. The more I travel, the more I am convinced that "Home-keeping hearts are happiest." W. A. Harper.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

By Lord Robert Cecil.

(An address delivered by a distinguished visitor to America at a luncheon tendered to him by the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Churches, in New York on April 3, 1923.)

I am most gratified to be received by representatives of the Churches and to have an opportunity of saying a few words upon a subject which is of interest to us all.

In my country, there is no body of men who have been of greater service to the League of Nations than the representatives of the Protestant Churches. In the work that I have been trying to do in my own country, I owe a deep debt of gratitude to the Churches, and I doubt not that you will also play your part in the great cause of international peace, which surely is the cause of our religion. Surely a religion which rests the whole of its moral precepts on love, which declares that the chief of all virtues, must find itself hostile to the practice of war as the encourager of hate.

The ministers of all Christian Churches preach love and brotherhood amongst men. Love and brotherhood—those are the foundations of any scheme for establishing peace amongst the nations of the world.

The League of Nations has as its very first words of the covenant: "by promoting international co-operation." Those are the first words it sets out. The rest is the whole scheme of bringing the nations closer together, teaching them to co-operate with one another, teaching them that they are parts one of another.

It is a definite, conscious and deliberate application of the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount to the relations of the nations of the world.

The Attitude of the Church.

There are only two grounds on which it might be said that the Christian Church ought not to take an active part in promoting, I don't say this particular scheme of the League of Nations—that, of course, is a matter of debate—but a scheme which is going consciously and directly to work for a closer union of the nations of the world and the elimination of war as a means of determining international disputes.

The first of those grounds is a doctrine which found great support in Germany before the war. I don't know whether it finds any support in this country. It finds a little, though very little, in my own. That is, that the moral law which applies to individuals doesn't apply to nations. The argument is put in several ways, but it is something like this: The nations—Germany, France, England, America—are mere abstractions. What you mean is the executive power of the nations—the people who determine the action of the nations—the minister, president, king, or whoever he may be. And the argument goes on in this kind of way: The duty of the executive power is only to its own people; it can't be generous, or even just, at the expense of its own people. It has a trust from them to carry on their affairs to the best of its power, and it is a poor form of morality which, in the guise of generosity toward other people's interests, sacrifices those interests which have been confided to its care.

That is the more subtle way of putting the contention. The Germans put it much more brutally and clearly. They merely said that the only rule or law that governed nations was the law of strength and might; that the State was essentially a non-normal entity.

Which ever way you put it, I do not deny that you may confuse yourself with a number of subtle arguments in favor of such a doctrine; but I believe that in point of practice, no decent human being would ever wish the government of his country to be carried on in defiance of moral law. I believe, as a matter of actual fact, that it would not be even advantageous for the government of a country to attempt such a policy. I believe it would lead them straight to disaster.

But for my part, I am content to rest my complete repudiation of any such doctrine on what appears to me to be the whole teaching of the Bible. It seems to me that the whole of the history which we read has been written in vain unless we are taught this great national truth that a nation that despises and rejects the law of God will inevitably be punished for it by destruction from the face of the earth. That appears to me to be the absolute truth, and if that is so no Christian teacher can consistently contend that a State is not amenable to the moral law.

The only argument that is left to him is this: He may say, "Well, I grant that peace is a great Christian object, I grant that the moral law does apply to international relations, I grant that it is part of my duty to preach and work for the application of that moral law to the doings of the government in my own country; but this particular scheme that you suggest will not be of practical advantage to peace, and therefore I am not bound to support it; indeed, if I take any action at all I am bound to oppose it as a fraudulent proposal."

What the League has Done.

I am not going to weary you with a long dissertation as to the constitution and working of the League of Nations, but I do think that any impartial person who examines the record of what it has done since it came into existence three years ago must concede that it has in fact promoted peace in a most essential manner on more than one occasion and in more than one country; that it has promoted international co-operation and international good understanding; that it has increased the happiness (as far as material prosperity can increase happiness) of many millions of human beings; that it has promoted the destruction of great social evils, and that, as a matter of actual historic evidential fact, you do find flourishing at Geneva and in what has been well called the atmosphere of Geneva, a new spirit of international brotherhood and friendliness, a new spirit limiting the fierceness of national fear, and setting up the duty of every national, not only to his own nation, but to humanity at large. And I say that if you find that spirit existing, if you see these achievements actually made, then you have no right to say that the League of Nations is ineffective. You are bound to say, if you are an honest and clear-sighted man or woman, "Here is a good thing; it may be improved, cultivated and made to grow into a solid tree. But the plant is a sound one, it is well planted, and it is our duty to tend it and cultivate it and improve it, but by no means either to neglect or to destroy it."

What Churches Alone Can Contribute.

I want to add one other thing. The covenant of the League of Nations is a piece of international machinery, and it is nothing more; it can be nothing more. It is a framework into which may be fitted the new spirit of which I have spoken, and in which that spirit may grow. It may prove of great value to the world; it may, after a feeble or brief existence, perish. Whether it is to be of permanent value or not, depends, as it seems to me, entirely on the spirit which is to guide it.

The last assembly at Geneva began with a great service in the cathedral there, lent for the purpose, in which the Archbishop of Canterbury preached a very remarkable sermon, advocating the principles of the League and dwelling on the importance, the vast and overwhelming importance, of the leaders of religious thought in relation to the League. He said it was their part to give a soul to the league. That is true. If the league is left merely as an ingenious piece of international mechanism, designed to prevent nations from cutting one another's throats and perhaps to encourage nations to work together, it may be of some value—indeed, I hope it will, even so—but it will never do that which is essential if you are to establish peace in the world, namely: change the spirit of those who have in their hands the direction of the government of the nations.

For that, we must look to the religious forces of the world. They, and they alone, can accomplish that. And it is, therefore, to my mind, not only of enormous importance in each nation that the religious leaders should, for the benefit of the national conscience, be forward in supporting this great movement, but it is essential for the success of the movement itself. It is essential, if it is to have the strength and the courage and the spirit to discharge the great duties and functions which are laid upon it, that we should sanctify its action by linking it closer with the faith which we profess, and for that purpose we must appeal to the Churches of Christ throughout the world, for it is only they who can give that gift to suffering humanity.

EASTER IN CANADA.

Having received from some Southern friends words of appreciation of my article on "A Canadian Winter," I am prompted to write again.

Sitting by the window while writing, I have the privilege of looking out upon an old Virginia scene, for it is raining, and the dark earth and green lawn hold little pools of water, while the branches of the trees glisten with raindrops trickling down their course. But such has not been the type of weather through the month of March. Furnaces in the homes were kept just as hot, and coal was shoveled on in as great quantities as in any month of the winter.

Quite interesting it was to watch women last week carrying bundles for Easter—hats, slippers, etc.—while at the same time fur coats had to be worn, and many with the collars turned up to keep out the coldest breezes of the year. Wednesday before Easter, Mr. March Wind endeavored to make a new record with the thermometer registering zero. Snow storms of various styles visited us, and even Easter Monday morning greeted us with a thin coat of white. However, this is said to be the coldest March for several years.

Easter Sunday brought us sunshine and hope. The streets were heavily treaded with Churchgoers, dressed in many beautiful colors. The Churches were decorated with pot plants and flowers of various hues and fragrance. Services at the Christian Church welled up in the hearts of the people great joy and gladness, for twenty-eight new members were received into the Church, which was a twenty per cent increase of membership. They were all men and women, except six, and upon the profession of faith, except one. Easter from the very first has always been a day of rejoicing, and it always will be when the Lord's will is done in bringing in souls for His kingdom. These mentioned came in as the result of quiet personal work, no evangelistic meeting being held, which inspires me to state that if every Christian would win one soul each year, our Church would be enlarged and the kingdom of God more rapidly increased.

How many years would it take to win the entire population of the world to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ if every Christian would, by the power of the Holy Spirit, win just one soul to Christ in a whole year? Begin with the suggestion that there is only one Christian in the entire population of the world—over 1,700,000,000. At the end of the first year there would be two Christians. Then those two would each win one, and there would be four at the close of the second year. Each Christian, whether former or new convert, would continue to win only one each 365 days, and at the end of ten years there would be 1,004 Christians. But before the thirty-first year had been concluded, the population of the earth would have been saved.

Now, this is a simple calculation, on easy terms—one win one—and may all Christians who read this go forth to make disciples of all nations, remembering our Lord's promise, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

PROTESTANT CHURCHES IN EUROPE IN DIRE NEED

According to reports made by the Federal Council of Churches, the Protestant Churches of Europe are in great need of help from outside. The Federation of Protestant Churches of Switzerland reports, through its secretary, that—

"Great help has been given in the restoration of devastated churches in France and Belgium through the Federal Council of Churches. The latter was responsible also for the calling of the Copenhagen conference on relief work for the Churches of Europe, which led to the organization of the central office for relief work, most of the expense of which is being carried by the Church boards of America. This conference, which was attended by seventy-two persons, representing thirty-seven different communions and Church federations of twenty countries, was noteworthy as being the first time European Churches had stepped over denominational lines and national boundaries in friendly co-operation. In spite of this work, however, many institutions, schools, and charitable organizations are in imminent jeopardy of being closed or passing into other hands. The evangelical press and evangelical literature is fast disappearing. Indeed, many of the evangelical publications have already gone out of existence.

"Thousands of professional men, clergymen, and their families, widows of the clergy, and aged pastors are plunged into the direst want. Evangelical minorities in many places are enduring persecution. The supply of candidates for ordination has fallen. European Protestantism is faced with a great crisis. Help must come or the Protestant Churches will perish."

We saw a little girl a few days ago display a good bit of wisdom and cunning toward her little brother. He was trying to go where she did not wish him to go. She was pulling him one way and he was pulling in an opposite direction. She determined upon a different course. She began to run from him, and while I could not hear what she was saying to him as she ran, I took it for granted she was saying something like this: "You can't catch me; you can't catch me," and forthwith the little fellow put out after her with all his strength; and in that way she induced him to go where she wished him to go. She was dealing with human nature. Force did not work well, but when she misled him, he was easily caught. She was wise in her cunning. How true this is of many of us in life's struggle! We cannot always force people to do what we wish to have them do, but now and then we can get them to do it by "fooling" them into doing just what we wish them to do.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A WORD FROM PASTORS WOULD HELP.

I have a very interesting letter from a faithful captain of Men and Millions in one of our Churches. In this case the captain is one of our good women who has been all the while deeply interested in this our greatest and holiest movement for the Church and the kingdom. She states in her letter that the cause of Men and Millions would be very much aided in her Church if only the pastor would at least now and then make an announcement about the movement or refer in some way to it, but that neither one of the two pastors who have served her Church since the pledges were taken has ever referred to the movement or made an announcement about it. I happen to know that both of these pastors favor the movement and always have done so, but cold indifference is more killing and difficult to overcome than open opposition. How greatly this movement for the Church and the kingdom could be aided if all our pastors now and then would at least refer in a friendly way to it. This would certainly not hurt them in the estimation of their people, and would lend material assistance to a most noble and worthy Church enterprise. J. O. ATKINSON.

THE KINGDOM FIRST.

I wrote in THE SUN last week something of the life of the late lamented S. C. Hobby. Since that time there has fallen into my hands a most remarkable writing, the thought and message of which I could wish all CHRISTIAN SUN readers to grasp and to get. When one remembers that Brother Hobby was not a man of letters and learning, one is reminded in reading this document of Acts 4:13: "Now, when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus."

With the papers of his last will and testament there was found a "Last Message to His Children," dated March 19, 1920, some three years prior to his decease, the following:

"Dear Children, I want to say to you all I have divided my hard earnings as near right as I know how. I hope it will be satisfactory with you all. Take this and make it a blessing instead of a curse. There is one thing that I want to impress upon your minds: this life is short, and there is no pleasure in living in sin. A hope beyond the grave is worth more than all the money in Wall Street. Count your days ahead of you; compare the short time with eternity, and think about what there is to be gained by serving God —and what a pleasure to you while you are living to lie down at night and think "I've wronged no one." "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Remember this world is nothing but a preparatory school to get ready for the other world. There is more pleasure in living one week with the grace of God in your heart than a lifetime in sin. Oh, if I could call back my time, I feel that I could serve God so much better than I have, while I would not give my little hope for this whole world.

"I will close. Good-by children, let's try to meet in heaven, where there is no more trouble. Good will to you all; I hope God will guide you all the balance of your lives. Children, please don't forget to live right. Good-by to you all."

It will be seen that all thought of earthly goods is disposed of in three lines, and that the uppermost thought in the mind and heart of this business man and modest Christian brother was that of the true riches, those eternal riches that fadeth not away. And I am wondering after all if this is not the highest and holiest legacy that mortal man can bequeath to the loved ones whom he leaves behind. It is indeed worth while for all of us to "compare the short time of this life with eternity, and think about what there is to be gained by serving God." After all, I say, this is the one thing worth while in this life. "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," a Scripture which is verified in many lives and many hearts that the world knoweth not of.

J. O. ATKINSON.

Generosity Among the Nations.

There are many transactions between nations which are anything but praiseworthy, and yet now and then there is a stroke of generosity which promises better things even among nations. Take the course of the civilized nations of the world, and their conduct in dealing with China in the matter of indemnities, due on account of the damage done to property belonging to foreigners, and we must admit that their course has been magnanimous. An exchange puts it this way:

It has been nearly a quarter of a century now since the trouble in China in which the Boxer movement played such an important part. The Boxers destroyed quite a good deal of property belonging to foreign countries, America among the others.

Demand was made upon the Chinese Government for indemnity for this property which the Boxers destroyed. The United States returned the indemnity which was granted for the property that was lost. The money was used in educating young Chinese students in this country. It seems that another payment fell due recently. Great Britain has returned the indemnity it was granted and a bill is now pending and will doubtless pass the Japanese Parliament, returning the indemnity offered that country. It is generally believed that the example set by our country led Great Britain and Japan to relinquish their claims to indemnity.

Now comes the strange part of this story. The second payment on the indemnity being due, the Senate of the United States passed a bill returning the indemnity, but the Committee on Foreign Relations in the House has held up the measure, and unless public sentiment is brought to bear the Senate bill may fail of passage in the House.

What has come over the spirit of our dreams? Our country is far more able to remit the indemnity than either England or Japan—certainly than England—and the amount due England is five times as great as that due the United States. Is our country losing its soul? Surely we cannot afford to go back on our former record, and allow England and Japan to surpass us in generosity.

ALAMANCE DISTRICT MEETING.

The "One-Day School of Missions," Alamance District Meeting of Woman's Missionary Society, was held with the Union Ridge Christian Church April 10, 1923.

Mrs. J. D. Kernodle, president, in her usual charming manner, gave an excellent opening address. This was followed by reports from the different societies represented—Burlington, Graham, Elon and Union. The ministers present were Revs. G. O. Langford, D. D., S. L. Beougher, P. H. Fleming, D. D., and W. T. Scott. Each gave a short, inspiring talk on missionary work.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, the principal speaker of the morning, delivered a splendid address on "The Big Things of Life."

A sumptuous picnic dinner was served on the lawn.

The afternoon session was opened with a solo by Miss Mary D. Atkinson. It was a delight to all to have present Miss M. H. Morey and to hear her encouraging report of "Our Mountain work."

An address was given by Rev. S. L. Beougher, pastor of Graham Christian Church.

Mrs. N. G. Newman, in her talk, told us of the great things which can be accomplished through our Cradle Roll Department.

A report of Young People's Work was given by Miss Pattie Coghill.

An invitation was extended by Elon Society to meet there one year hence, which was accepted. The meeting was well attended, and the only regret was that every Church in the district was not represented.

Adjourned to meet at Elon College one year hence. MRS. J. D. KERNODLE, Pres.
Graham, N. C.

MRS. R. M. ROTHZEB, Secy.

THE BIBLE HAS—

1. An origin that is mysterious.
2. A unity that is marvelous.
3. A depth that is matchless.
4. An existence that is miraculous.
5. An influence that is mighty.
6. A fulfillment that is manifest.
7. A proof that is maturable.—Selected.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—Wish you would tell us what is meant in Matt. 24:8, by "All these things are the beginnings of sorrows?—Sunday School Lover.

Let us first ascertain to what all these things refer to. In Matt. 24:6, 7, we read: "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars; see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places." Then it is said in the next verse: "All of these are the beginning of sorrows." Evidently, the reference seems to be to some time when these great calamities shall be alarmingly worse than ever before. As to whether this is the time in the world's history to which this passage points, we do not undertake to say, but we will show you a picture, a striking picture, of the world situation at this time, and then you can apply it as you see fit. A recent writer draws the following presentation of facts from current events of our time. If you take the events given below and apply them as an interpretation of that Scripture, then you may get something to set you to thinking as to what may be meant by "All these things are the beginning of sorrows." Of course, we have had wars between the nations, famines and pestilences and earthquakes, but the reference here seems to be to some time when we shall have these calamities in great abundance, as marking "the beginning of sorrows." The question is, is that time now, and are we seeing these beginnings of sorrow? It may be that the following facts will throw light upon the situation:

Down to 1913, a total of 188 periods of ten years each had passed into history since Christ's prophecy of wars, and earthquakes, and famines, and pestilences (Luke 21:10, 11), but in not one of these 188 decades had occurred, all in the same decade, the worst in history of each of these four terrible scourges. Then came the 189th decade, and with it—

1. The worst war the world has ever seen, costing 10,000,000 lives and over $200,000,000,000.

2. The worst earthquake in human history—the one in China during December, 1920—"which literally shook the globe," and carried suddenly into eternity a quarter of a million lives. Some authorities place the estimate far higher.

3. The worst famine "the world has hitherto known," that of Russia, in which millions perished miserably through starvation, and "added millions through starvation plus disease."

4. The worst pestilence, in some respects, known to man, world-wide in extent, and exacting a toll of full 12,000,000 lives. In the short space of twelve weeks, nearly 6,000,000 persons died. In South Africa the mortality exceeded the combined mortality of three wars, and in India in a few months' time 5,000.000 deaths occurred.

Is it, or is it not, significant that all these prophesied judgments, in their worst form, should occur in the same decade?

"All these," said Christ, "are the beginning of sorrows." "But the end is not yet."—Matt. 24:6, 8.

If they are only the beginning, what yet must lie ahead, what but "great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time; no, nor ever shall be"?—Matt. 24:21.

"So is the Most High thundering at the conscience of mankind." It is not man, but God, who is Scripture (Luke 21:36) and in history (fulfilled prophecy) is calling to prayer.

"It is a mystery," says D. M. Panton, "that the Church is not prostrate on its face before God, so acute is the crisis, and so awful and imminent the danger.

"If these are but preliminary travail-shudders—and they can be no more—what will be the birth agonies? It accentuates the tragedy (though it but confirms the prophetic page) that a section of the Church of Christ, of unknown magnitude, while these thunders are actually in its ear, begins to tread the world's infidel way."

O Church of Christ, when God calls, wilt thou not answer? Must it be said of you, dear fellow-member of the body of Christ, and must it be said of the Church at large, as was said of Israel, that all day long He hath stretched forth His hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people? Thousands are praying, but are there not multitudes who are still indifferent?

Must God plead in vain? When He pleads, is it not time for the Church to answer? Yea, to cry mightily for revival, that it may be girded for the things that lie yet ahead? Ought there not to be prayer bands in every Christian community throughout the world, pleading with God for revival of the Church?

Thou, thou who readest these lines, "Thou art the man"—the man to bow in heartbroken contrition before God, the man to call together for united supplication the faithful few in your community, the man through whose utterly yielded life God would begin a mighty work—in that one community for which under God you are directly and immediately responsible. God "now commandeth all men everywhere to repent" (Acts 17:30), but "judgment must begin at the house of God."—1 Peter 4:17.

Question.—Much is said nowadays about Christian education. Will you please explain to me what is Christian education in contradistinction to that education which is not Christian?—Solomon.

Turn to Prov. 4:1-9 and you will get one view, and a very good and safe view, of what Christian education is. Christian education is the education in which nothing is taught contrary to Christian teaching. If education were otherwise, it could not be classed as Christian. The Bible says: "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore, get wisdom: and with all thy getting, get understanding." There can be no true education apart from this biblical ideal. In discussing this passage, the Moody Bible Institute Monthly puts its thought as follows:

It is possible to get a lot of knowledge, knowledge of history, literature, philosophy, and ethics, and yet to be uneducated or unwise. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Apart from that reverence and regard for God expressed in the word "fear," one cannot get wisdom and understanding no more than one could have a wheel without a hub. The wisdom that comes from the knowledge of God is the unifying principle in true education. It is indeed "an ornament of grace and a crown of glory." Those who by divine grace have become recipients of the knowledge of God in Christ, realize how utterly vain all else is. When Christ, who is the wisdom of God, is discovered or revealed to the soul, then the student has a proper center, a satisfying Saviour, a unifying principle. Therefore, "with all thy getting, get understanding." Without this there will be failure; not failure in making a living perhaps, but failure in building a life.

The principle underlying the education given in our institutions of learning may be seen in the following incident. An honor man in one of our great institutions of learning put the thing in this way: "I passed through four years of hard drudgery. The professors poured in and poured in knowledge on the whole range of subjects in the curriculum; and when I came to the end of the course they asked me to pour it out, and I poured it all out, and it stayed out." How different it might have been in his experience had there been a proper connecting link, a proper unifying principle.

The school of Christ is a great school. The education of faith is a marvelous experience. The Spirit of God is a wonderful teacher. All the lessons He teaches find their unifying principle in Christ. Concerning life, He teaches us that it is indeed a race, strenuous and exacting, but it can be run with patience as we look away unto Jesus, who for the joy set before Him endured the cross, despised the shame and is set down at the right hand of God. See Hebrews 12:1, 2.

Question.—Do you really think there is anything in this work of foreign missions? By what I mean, do you really and truly believe that said work is of any real and lasting value to the people in heathen lands?—J. L. R.

Well, yes, I do really and truly believe that the foreign missionary enterprise is one of the greatest in all the world. I know, to many, it seems impossible of accomplishment, since it seems to be 500,000,000 of Christians, many of whom are only nominally Christians, trying to bring at least one hundred thousand millions of benighted people to Christ. That seems like a Herculean task, I know, but remember that God is with the Christians in their efforts to do what He told them to do, and of course, to the extent that they may be faithful to make an honest effort to do what He has told them to do, he will give them a helping hand, and He will bring success out of their labors. I hope you are not a critic of missions, since that is God's plan for saving the world through Jesus Christ. His way is right and always the best plan that can be had. I once heard of a man who was criticising missions who met his match and was converted to the cause of missions. I wish that may be your happy lot. The following is the account of the way that critic of missions was caught, wound up, and turned over to missions:

When Missionary Weeks, of Africa, was traveling in England, a gentleman in the same railway carriage began to attack him as the friend of missions. "What," said he, "are the missionaries doing abroad? We pay them pretty well, but hear little about them or their movements. I suppose they are sitting down quietly and making themselves comfortable."

There sat beside Mr. Weeks another traveler, as black as any of the natives of Africa. He quietly waited until the stranger had exhausted his silly talk against missions, and then, making a sign of silence to Mr. Weeks, undertook himself to reply to the critic of missions. "Sir," said he, "allow me to present myself to you as a result of the labor of the missionaries whose work you have been depreciating." Pointing to Mr. Weeks, he continued, "I am an African and this man is the means of my having become a Christian and of my coming to this country in the capacity of a Christian minister."

The man who had assaulted Christian missions looked upon the black man with a look of mingled embarrassment. He could not be mistaken—there was a genuine African, who had addressed him in the elegant language of an educated and accomplished Englishman; he had, no doubt, felt the power of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; there was in his whole manner the unmistakable signs of a Christian gentleman.

The accuser of missions sank into a reverie. He had no more to say against missions, and when he resumed conversation, it was in a different tone; he began to talk with Mr. Weeks upon missionary topics as an interested listener.

That black man was none other than Samuel Adjai Crowther, who afterwards became the first native bishop of the Niger territory in Africa and who for many years labored successfully as missionary among his countrymen. Mourned by many, he, in December, 1891, entered the rest which remaineth to the people of God.

JESUS.

"And she shall bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call His name JESUS: for He shall save His people from their sins."—Matt. 1:21.

Jesus (the Greek form of the Hebrew Joshua) means Jehovah saves, or Saviour. Christ (the Greek translation of the Hebrew Messiah) means anointed. Jesus was His common name during His life on earth, generally used in the Gospels. Christ is His official name, frequently used alone or with Jesus in the epistles. Jesus occurs in the Bible 711 times; Christ, 304 times; Jesus Christ, Lord Jesus Christ, and Christ Jesus, 244 times, and Messiah, 4 times. He has many other names and titles in Scripture, as "Immanuel," "Son of God," "Son of Man," "Son of David"—in all, upwards of 100 titles, indicating His character, life and work.

It is not necessary for you to know and explain all of these names in order to become a Christian. The fact is, Jesus is a mysterious person. The great peculiarity of the Scripture doctrine of the person of Christ is that he is God and man indeed—two natures, forming one personality. "He is not divine alone, nor human alone, but divine-human." He is the Eternal Word (John 2), the "Son of God," and he is also the "Son of Man" (Mark 11:13). This is beyond my comprehension. It may possibly be beyond your comprehension. If a finite mind (and that is the kind I have) could comprehend the whole of Christ's nature, Christ could not be the infinite God He is declared to be (John 1:4).

As prophet, He perfectly reveals the will of the Father to man; as priest He is the perfect offering for sin, procuring redemption for all who will accept of it; as King, He is and will become rightful ruler and judge of this world, and be exalted above every name that is named, putting all things under Him, receiving the praises of all created intelligence."

The predictions concerning Christ in the Old Testament were about 150. They were made at various periods of history. He was to be born of a virgin in Bethlehem, a small village (Micah 5, 2); He was to be a King with a universal and perpetual empire (Ps. 2:6, 45:2-7, 72; Isa. 9:6, 7); yet would be despised and rejected (Isa. liii). He was to open the eyes of the blind and the ears of the deaf (Isa. xxxv 5, 6); and yet to be betrayed, sold and slain and His grave appointed with the wicked. Yet his sufferings should make many righteous (Isa. xi 1-9, ix:1-11). He was to do the work of a prophet (Isa. xiii:1-7); of a priest (Ps. 110:4, Zech vi 13); and of a King (Dan. vii:14). These predictions were all fulfilled in Jesus the Son of Mary. He is the center of all Jewish and Christian history—the "Holy of Holies in the history of the world."

HIS INCARNATION.

While Augustus was Emperor of Rome and Herod the great King in Jerusalem, Jesus was born four years before 1 A. D., the Christian era having been fixed by Dionysius Exiguus in the sixth century, four years too late. Angels celebrated the birth of Jesus with songs; wise men from the East brought precious gifts to the newborn babe. To escape Herod's wrath, the child was taken to Egypt, but later settled with His parents at Nazareth.

Only one event of His childhood is known—a visit when twelve years of age to Jerusalem, when He astonished the doctors by His words and questions. It is possible that He was trained as other Jewish lads. If so, at three, the boy was weaned, and wore for the first time the fringed or tasseled garment prescribed by Num. xv:38-41 and Deut. xxii 12. His education began at first under the mother's care. At five he was to learn the law by extracts written on scrolls. The creed of Deut. ii 2:4. Then the festival psalms 114, 118, 136. At twelve He became more responsible for His obedience to the law. On the day when He attained the age of thirteen, put on for the first time the phylacteries which were worn at the recital of his daily prayer. Phylacteries were safeguards. They were strips of parchment on which some verses of Scripture were written. During the time of prayer were worn on the forehead, or on the left arm, near the region of the heart. In addition to this, Jesus learned the carpenter's trade.

At the age of thirty He entered upon His public ministry, which lasted about three years. John records more of the Judeon ministry, Luke more of His Perean ministry, while Matthew and Mark give His Galilean ministry, as does Luke also. In the fifteenth year of Tiberius, John the Baptist made a great impression by preaching repentance. Jesus sought baptism at the hands of John and was baptised, not for the remission of sins, for He was without sin; nor in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost —Jesus Himself was to give that command with the great commission, and those of John's disciples who had never heard of the Holy Ghost were baptised again.

After Christ was baptised and had triumphed over the temptations of the devil, He went to Cana and worked His first miracle at a wedding. The Old Testament tells of about fifty-six miracles. The New Testament of about thirty-three. After Christ had performed His first miracle He went to Jerusalem to keep the passover. The first work He did after He reached Jerusalem was the cleansing of the temple of grafters—something He repeated near the close of His ministry. He soon had a visitor by night, who got clear-cut instructions in regard to the absolute necessity of a sinner being "born again."

Soon after the great Baptist was thrown into prison, Jesus withdrew to Galilee. On His way through Samaria, He conversed with a woman at Jacob's well. The woman was converted and at once became a missionary. At Nazareth He was rejected and went to Capernaum, which He made "His own city." Here He called Peter, Andrew, James and John and made his first tour through Galilee, performing many miracles. Early in the second year of his ministry Jesus went up to Jerusalem to a feast of the Jews and healed a lame man at the pool of Bethesda, explained the right use of the Sabbath, a subject which He renewed on the way back to Galilee when the disciples plucked some corn.

When He reached the Sea of Galilee, great multitudes followed. Just before His second tour in Galilee He appointed the twelve apostles and delivered the wonderful sermon on the mount. It was during that second tour that he delivered the series of parables mentioned, Matt. xiii—stilled the storm on the Lake of Galilee, healed the demoniacs of Godera, raised the daughter of Jairus, and, after other miracles, came again to Nazareth, where He was again rejected. He then made a third tour of Galilee and sent forth the apostles, giving the instruction recorded in Matt. x 2. After an interval of some months, the twelve returned, and with them He retired to the Sea of Galilee, fed the 5,000, walked on the water and delivered His sermon on the bread of life (John vi) in the synagogue at Capernaum. Early in the third year of his ministry, Jesus disputed with the Pharisees about eating with unwashed hands, and went towards the northwest, healed the daughter of the Syrophonician woman, and then passed around to Decapolis, where He wrought many miracles and fed 4,000. Near Caesarea Philippi, Peter made his confession of faith and then Jesus foretold His own death and resurrection, and the trials of His followers. The transfiguration followed, and the next morning the healing of an epileptic child. On the way back to Capernaum He again foretold of His sufferings and exhorted the disciples to humility, forbearance and brotherly love.

About this time He instructed and sent out the seventy on their mission. Then He left Galilee, and having cleansed ten lepers came to Jerusalem at the Feast of Tabernacles (John vii 2). Here He taught in public and answered a lawyer's question with the parable of the "good Samaritan." The healing of the man born blind led to a long discourse, which aroused the rulers, and Jesus retired beyond Jordan. In Perea, on His way to Jerusalem, He uttered the parable of the lost sheep, the unjust steward, the rich man and Lazarus, and the pharisee and the publican; gave precepts concerning divorce, blessed little children, taught the rich young ruler. He raised Lazarus at Bethany. A third time He foretold His death and resurrection, and approaching Jericho healed a blind man called Zacchaeus and gave the parable of the pounds. He arrived at Bethany six days before the passover. At supper in Simon's house He is anointed. At the beginning of the last week before the crucifixion, Jesus made a public entry into the city, spoke parables and warnings, lamented over Jerusalem, praised the widow's mite, met certain Greeks and predicted His second coming with solemn warnings, confirmed by the parables of the ten virgins, the five talents, and the sheep and the goats. At the last, or fourth, passover, with the twelve, Jesus instituted the Lord's Supper, delivered his farewell discourse and withdrew to Gethsemane.

After the agony in the garden, He was arrested and, in the night, brought before Annas, and then Caiaphus, and the Sanhedrin, and in the morning before Pilate and Herod. Pilate, the Roman procurator, yielded to the Jews, delivered Jesus to be mocked and crucified.

I have, as you see, given you a very brief history of the life of Jesus on this earth. Tonight I will briefly give you an account of the death and resurrection of our Lord and Master.

I have prayerfully reread the New Testament and a number of the so-called lives of Christ. I am indebted to all for valuable information. The best place to read the history of Jesus Christ is in the Bible, yet I am especially indebted to the writings of Dr. Edward W. Rice, author of "Commentaries on Matthew, Mark, Luke and John."

If you will take the words I have just spoken in one hand, and the pointer in the other, you can look at the map giving the journeys of Jesus, follow Him from the manger to the cross.

It is a pleasure to speak to those who love to accept the Holy Scriptures as the authoritative word of God.

Tonight at 7:30 o'clock I will take for my subject, "Jesus—From the Cross to the Throne."

(Sermon delivered at First Christian Church, Franklinton, N. C., April 1, 1923, by the pastor, Rev. D. A. Larry, D. D.)

"THE MOST BEAUTIFUL VERSE IN THE NEW TESTAMENT."

What is it? Dr. John A. Hutton, of Glasgow, whose writings have attracted wide attention, makes answer in an article in the British Weekly as follows: "If I were asked to quote the most beautiful short saying in Holy Scripture I should hesitate between two—one in the New Testament and one in the Old. In the Old Testament my choice would be: 'The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms.' In the New Testament I should offer 1 John 4:16, not as translated in the Authorized Version indeed, but as it is translated in Weymouth, and as it always should have been translated: 'As for us, we know the love which God has for us, and we confide in it.' There you have the substance of all Christian theology, and the substance in the same breath of all Christian ethics. It is a saying compact of thought and philosophy and faith, all cast in a form of beauty so that the very sound of it augments the same."

SUBJECT: Ruth, the Faithful Daughter.

THE BOOK OF RUTH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."—Ruth 1:16.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 91:1-7.

Benjamin Franklin, when in Paris, belonged to a club which was intensely interested in ancient writings of all other races and religions except those of the Christians and their Hebrew forefathers. Franklin's turn to contribute to the program came, and he engaged an actress to learn and recite the Book of Ruth. All were deeply moved by the pathos and charm of the story, and expressed wonder that it had not been found before. Then Franklin told them that it was from the Bible, where many other immortal stories could be found if they would but seek. Goethe once declared: "We have nothing so lovely in the whole range of epic and idyllic poetry as the Book of Ruth." It can be read in fifteen minutes, and repeated reading serves to more deeply impress its beauty.

The scene is laid in the land of Moab, and in Bethlehem "in the beginning of barley harvest," or the month of April. The time is that of the judges, when "every man did that which was right in his own eyes." Loyalty to God and to man is the theme of the story. Interest in the tale is two fold. Boys and girls will be eager to hear what happened. Men and women will be concerned about the motives back of the deeds, and the characteristics of the hero and heroines.

The incidents unite to present one of the most beautiful romances of literature. The appeal of the story is universal, because the characters stand out as real men and women. Picture Elimelech, forced by famine to take his family to Moab, a land of strangers and a strange God; their home life according to Jewish teaching; Naomi's triple bereavement and her desire to return to her native Bethlehem; Orpah's affection, and Ruth's love; the welcome of the kindly neighbors; Ruth's faithful gleaning in the harvest field; the courteous and benevolent near-kinsman; the romance of Ruth and Boaz, and Naomi's joy at the birth of Obed, who was the father of Jesse, who was the father of David. Here is a story of human joys and sorrows, a beautiful picture of personal relationships.

The story of the Book of Ruth offers an opportunity for an interesting character study.

Orpah, who loved her mother-in-law, but who cared more for her own land and customs. She was not willing to renounce the past. She may just have been afraid to risk an unknown future in another country. She did not hear the call which Ruth heard. Her heart was still in Moab. She was fond of her mother-in-law, but she did not come first in her life. She went back to oblivion. Ruth went on to be a mother of the line of the Messiah. Orpah was satisfied to remain where she was. Ruth was ready for something bigger and greater and better. Are there not Orpahs today who are content in Moab when they might go forth to enjoy the privileges and joys of Bethlehem?

Naomi, the bereaved, but faithful. She loved her home, and longed to return to the home of her fathers. She must have talked of Bethlehem and of her God in Moab, or Ruth would not have been ready to go with her. She won the love of Ruth, not for herself alone, but for the God whom she served. Her counsel guided Ruth to happiness. Her joy over the birth of Obed was expressed in praise to Jehovah.

Boaz, the friendly kinsman. In his fields, Ruth labored that she and her mother-in-law might have bread to eat. She was treated kindly and most generously. Boaz was a gentleman in all of his manners. He had a holy reverence for God and for man. He respected womanhood. He knew the laws and customs of his country and abided by them. He respected another man's rights, but when conditions were fulfilled, joyfully took Ruth to be his wife.

Ruth, the loyal. Her name meant "friend," and she expressed its meaning in her daily life. She left her homeland. She renounced its gods for the true God. She even declared that she would be buried in Naomi's land, the last renunciation she could make. "Love never faileth." To Orpah, no doubt, it seemed that Ruth was giving up much. To Ruth, it seemed not like giving up much, but like gaining more. David Livingstone declared that he did not know the meaning of the word sacrifice. Ask any missionary about the "giving up" and you will hear not of the joys missed, but of the joys gained in the service. The vital question is "What is worth most"? This decided rightly, the best path is pointed out, no matter what it may cost. The price will not be too great to pay for the reward to come in joy and satisfaction found in service. Ruth, the Moabitess, the loving, loyal and obedient, although a foreigner, became the great-grandmother of David, and the ancestress of the Christ. Was she not the kind of woman whom such honor should justly crown?

"What man does for others—not what they do for him—gives him immortality."—Daniel Webster.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

APRIL 29, 1923.

SUBJECT: "What my Denomination Has Meant to the World."—1 Peter 2:9-12.

THOUGHTS FOR THE MEETING.

All Churches are "God's own possession." They are placed here to serve the people of the world. Their work is divine, for it is a work with God.—Vs. 9.

The work of the Church is to brighten the world, to shed forth a light which will dispel darkness. "Ye are the light of the world" comes to His disciples today, as well as on the mount of old.—Vs. 9.

God's light and blessing make life worth living. His love brightens our lives every day. The Heavenly Father's love and mercy is continually shed upon His children.—Vs. 10.

Christians are responsible for the example they set. "Children have more need of models than of critics."—Joubert. Those thoughts and words and deeds "which war against the soul" are to be refrained from, lest a stumbling block be set in another's pathway.—Vs. 11.

Good works are not for personal glory, but to glorify God. "Ye were bought with a price; glorify God, therefore, in your body." All things belong to God. All things come from Him. Men are looking to Christian people to show a love for Him, through the deeds of their lives. "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever."—Verse 12

Every denomination has come because of conscientious men and women who believed firmly in certain principles and Church governments, and have felt that they, as a body, had a work to do in the world. Martin Luther once declared: "I can do no other." This is the attitude of loyal members of many a Church.

At Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., Rev. Rice Haggard stood, holding aloft in his right hand, a copy of the New Testament, in 1794, declared: "Brethren, this is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. By it we understand the disciples of our Lord were first called Christians, and I move that henceforth and forever the followers of Christ be known as Christians simply."

The motion was unanimously adopted, and from that date our denomination has been known as the "Christian Church." This was the beginning of the modern organization of the Christian Church.

Our denomination has held before the Christian world the Bible as the only creed on which all true Christions can ever unite. With the Bible as the only creed, and Christian character as the test of fellowship, and private interpretation the right and privilege of all, a platform on which all Christian people can come together is offered.

In 1808, the first religious newspaper was published by the Christian Church—The Herald of Gospel Liberty—and thus was started an agency which has been powerful in its influence in extending the work of all Churches. The Christian Church is the "mother of the religious newspaper," and so has given a great gift to the world.

The Christian Church was the first of all denominations to open her college doors to women on equal terms in every respect with the men. The Christian Church also led out in ordaining women to the ministry.

The third Christian Endeavor Society to be organized, and the first outside of the Congregational Church, was in a Christian Church. The denomination which thus made Christian Endeavor interdenominational also gave it one of its great leaders in the person of Amos R. Wells.

To the Sunday School movement, the Christian Church gave Marian Lawrance and W. C. Pearce.

The most recent forward step to be taken by the Church was taken at the Burlington Convention last October, when all of the educational agencies of the Church were correlated in one program under one board, to be known as the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church. This is a step which many denominations, larger in numbers, have been looking forward to and talking of for some time. The Christian Church is the first to actually try out such a correlation in a practical way, thinking more of young people and boys and girls and their needs, than of specific organizations.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Make this a meeting which will bring helpful information regarding the principles, history and work of your own denomination. Ask your pastor for information regarding the history of the Church, and have a member ready to give this in the opening part of the meeting.

Have five two-minute talks or papers (not longer) on the five principles of the Christian Church—

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

BOOKS FOR REFERENCE: "The Life of James O'Kelly," McClenny; "The Centennial of Religious Journalism," Barrett; "The History of the Christian Denomination."

TOPICS TO BE ASSIGNED TO MEMBERS IN ADVANCE: "Christian Church Leaders," "Why I Belong to the Christian Church," "Christian Church Missionary Work," "The Work of the Southern Christian Church," "The Future of the Christian Church" (to be assigned to the pastor for the closing talk of the meeting).

SONGS FOR THE MEETING: "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord," "Faith of Our Fathers," "O Worship the King," "Jesus Saves," "The Church's One Foundation."

"Planted in Christ, the living Vine,
This day, with one accord,
Ourselves with humble faith and joy,
We yield to Thee, O Lord"!

A NEW BOOK.

How long since you have read a new Sunday School book?

Here are four which will interest our elementary workers:

TRAVEL BOOK FOR JUNIORS. By Helen Patton Hanson. $1.25.

The very interesting story of a boy who visited the Holy Land with his father. Many interesting adventures occur to him, both on the way and after he reaches the land, where he has the pleasure of flying from Alexandria to Jerusalem, thus covering in a few hours the territory it took the Israelites forty years to traverse. The book is arranged so it may be used as a study book, a list of "Things to Find Out" being given at the end of each chapter.

FOLLOWERS OF THE MARKED TRAIL. By Nannie Lee Frayser. $1.25.

A book of stories concerning those who through the ages from Abraham have helped to make and mark the trail, down to the Pathfinder Himself, and to some of those who afterwards helped make the trail clearer. Told as only Miss Frayser can tell them, these stories will be enjoyed by every junior, while the "suggestions" at the end of each chapter makes it usable as a study book.

THE DAWN OF RELIGION IN THE MIND OF THE CHILD. By Edith E. Read Mumford. $1.25 net.

While this book is not so new, having been first published in 1916, it is not as well known among our people as it deserves to be. No mother of young children, no teacher of beginners can afford to be without it. It is clear, concise, suggestive and interesting in its presentation of the dawning of the religious instinct and how to care for and foster this awakening of the mind of the child and turn his thoughts God-ward in a normal, rational manner.

PRIMARY METHODS IN THE CHURCH SCHOOL. By Alberta Munkres. $2.00.

A book which primary teachers will find almost invaluable. Beginning with a chapter on "Child Study," Miss Munkres discusses curriculum material, methods of instructions, story-telling, etc., but gives chapters on sources of stories, expression through dramatization, and handwork, with a splendid amount of illustrative and pattern material. The program for the departmental service is thoroughly covered, while other chapters are devoted to equipment, organization and training. Miss Munkres is professor of religious education in Boston University, but while her book is scholarly and thorough enough to be of service in the best-equipped of primary departments, yet its style is sufficiently simple, and its material sufficiently usable to aid the teacher in the one-room school.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our call for Easter dresses has been answered very encouragingly. One hundred and sixty-two dresses have been received to date. We wanted two hundred—still lacking thirty-eight dresses.

We asked the good women of our Church for two hundred sheets, and to date we have received one hundred and thirty-four, still lack sixty-six being to our goal for sheets. We have also received twenty-eight suits for little boys. We feel very much encouraged. Our Easter offering has started off nicely, and we hope to reach the desired amount, $3,000.00, for this offering. We truly hope that all our Churches and Sunday Schools will make this special offering, and make it liberal.

We now have one hundred children in our care. It takes more to feed and clothe them than it did when we had only fifty. Our denomination ought to be proud of the opportunity to care for one hundred children in its orphanage.

The following have been received since our last report: Mrs. L. E. Carlton, Kinston, N. C., 4 white skirts; Woman's Missionary Society, Holland, Va., 4 sheets, 1 quilt, 8 framed pictures; Ladies' Aid Society, Dendron Christian Church, 24 sheets; Lenora D. Crotinger, Johnstown, Ohio, 1 nice quilt; Mrs. J. E. Francis, Cary, N. C., 2 sheets, 4 shirts, 1 suit; Mrs. Cora Warrell, Kokoma, Ind., 3 pairs hose, 2 dresses; A. Florence Messimore, Sidney, Ind., 1 dress; Ladies' Aid Society, Graham Christian Church, 6 sheets; Mrs. J. E. Isley and daughter, Portsmouth, Va., 2 sheets, 6 pillow-cases, 1 pair socks; Mrs. E. B. James, Mansfield, Ill., 17 dresses, 3 suits, 4 blouses; Mrs. H. A. Culver, 1 pair blankets, 2 sweaters; Mrs. Eunice Gaye, Zuni, Va., 5 towels, 5 pairs pillow-cases.

This is a new way to put it, but it is expressive, if not wise. We are very sure that this brother has had a good bit of trouble with his automobile. In reporting a revival and the fruits thereof, he says: "As a result of the meeting, "flat" tires were reinflated, spark plugs cleaned, batteries recharged, and a large number of cars placed on the right track." Now, that is hard to beat.

Bishop Hughes, speaking to a class of theological students said: "Be outright, forthright, downright in your convictions that a man can (must) be born again. Preach the Gospel of a regenerating God." Well said, brother.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

YOUR SIGNATURE.

A lady tells this story: "I sat in the dining-room at the Intervale Convention, talking with a dear friend about the baptism of the Holy Spirit. She had been seeking this baptism for months. As I looked up I saw Mr. B—— approaching, and I stepped towards him and said:

"I am going to introduce you to a friend of mine who is seeking the baptism of the Spirit.

He took my seat, and the first question he asked, as she afterwards told me, was:

"Sister, have you any plans?"

"Any plans?"

"Yes; have you any plans for the future that you would be disappointed if they were not fulfilled?"

She frankly replied, "Yes, I have."

He reached his hand, and took up a blank sheet of paper that lay on the table, and holding it up before her, said, "All your plans must be given up." And pointing to the bottom of the page, he said, "Will you write your signature here, and let God fill in this blank as it seems best to Him"?

She said she shrank back. She saw the whole truth—she must henceforth have no will in regard to her future, and put her name, her amen, to all that God willed. The struggle was sharp, but short, and with her eyes still on that blank, she said, "Yes, I will sign my name."

And so she entered the large place where her feet stand today. It was the total self-surrender. The life of blessed inward ease can come no other way. Is it not better to have God plan for us than to plan for ourselves? Who will sign his name to a blank, and let God fill it day by day?—Selected.

EXPERT PRACTICE.

The pastor of Purity Presbyterian Church, Chester, S. C., adopted the idea of grading the members of his class in Expert Endeavor, not by testing their knowledge of what the book says, but by the way in which the members put into practice what they learned from it. All the executive committee were in the class, and their duties were especially emphasized. On one Sunday evening the Endeavorers took charge of the Church service and put over a fine program.

On March 14, 1923 Mr. Ray Stroop and Miss Annie Shiflet were married at my home in the presence of a few friends. Both are good members of the Woods Chapel Christian Church, and are popular young people in their community. May success and happiness attend them in their wedded life.

LINDSAY

Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Lindsay are bereaved of their 11 months old son, William Wallace. His life was despaired of for several days, though the loving care of parents was supplemented by that of neighbors and friends and two skilled physicians. On January 23rd the summons came. Both the call and the response were tender; the little form entered quietly into that dreamless sleep, and we knew that to Heaven had been added a glory.

Interment was made in the cemetery at Damascus Christian Church. Brother and Sister Lindsay are active members of this church. Their bereavement brings a feeling of sadness to a host of friends.

SHAVER

Alma C. Shaver was born September 23, 1899, and died March 24, 1923, aged 23 years, 6 months, and 1 day. She was the daughter of Brother and Sister Jacob Berry, and since childhood had been a member of Antioch Christian Church. She had been married only about a year, when the grim reaper, death, cut short the happiness of her married life. She is survived by her husband and an infant child, and by her parents and two sisters. Funeral services were held at Antioch, March 26, 1923, and the remains laid to rest in the Greenmount Cemetery.

MARY JANE DUCK

Mrs. Mary Jane Duck, wife of Mr. W. M. Duck, was born November 16, 1853, died March 26, 1923, making her 69 years, 5 months and 10 days old. She is survived by her husband, one sister, one brother, seven children, besides grandchildren and a host of friends. She was laid to rest in a family cemetery near Christiania Christian Church near Dadeville, Ala., where she was reared. Funeral services conducted by Rev. Burnes of Dadeville. She has made her home near this Church for a number of years and several of her children have united with this Church.

Heartfelt sympathy is extended to the bereaved.

Flora Mae Duck.

TATE

John Calhoun Tate was born November 17, 1839 and departed this life at home, March 30, 1923, making him 83 years, 4 months and 13 days old. He had been in declining health for several years.

Brother Tate made a profession of religion in early life but never became fully satisfied about joining the church, so he never united with any church but had a preference toward the Presbyterian Church.

He was an industrious farmer and a good neighbor. He was married to Miss Sallie F. Garrison, October 23, 1889. To this union were born six children, all of whom survive him.

He leaves to lament a devoted wife and six children, two boys and four girls, one half brother and a host of friends. He will be missed for he was always at home.

Burial services were held at Concord Christian Church by Rev. J. F. Isley and assisted by the writer. Interment of the body was made in the church cemetery.

May our rich Heavenly Father bless and comfort the bereaved ones until they meet again.

L. L. Wyrick.

RODGERS

Since God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from this earthly tabernacle to the home prepared for those that love and serve Him, W. E. Rodgers, who passed peacefully away at his home near Holland, Va., February 3, 1923.

First. That in the death of Mr. Rodgers our church has lost a faithful member and although too far away to be with us as much as he would have liked his heart was in the work, and he loved his church and liked to see it go forward in every good work.

Second. That we sorely miss the sunshine of his presence, and his cheerful greeting wherever he was permitted to mingle with us. In his last sickness he suffered much but expressed himself as being fully resigned to God's will.

We bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will, knowing He maketh no mistakes.

Third. To his loving and devoted companion, and all his family circle, we offer our tenderest sympathy, and point them to the One who will sustain and comfort them in their sorrow and loss: their loss being Heaven's gain.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to the Christian Sun for publication, and a copy spread on the minutes of Liberty Spring Christian Church records.

RESOLUTION

Mrs. John T. Clark, of near Wakefield, Va., while visiting in the home of near by neighbor, on the afternoon of December 3rd, 1922, was suddenly taken quite ill, and as the shades of night were darkening on this lovely Sabbath evening. she fell asleep, passing quickly to the reward which she had so deservedly won. Because she was our friend and co-worker, because we are feeling our loss keenly, and because her genial smile and helpful deeds will be greatly missed in our community; we the Ladies Aid Society of Spring Hill Christian Church, offer the following resolutions:

First. We extend our most sincere sympathy to her dear family, who so deeply mourn the loss of wife and mother. We bid them look to the Father for peace and comfort, in this hour of their affliction.

May her passing away serve to strengthen the bonds between earth and heaven, and some day may there be an "Unbroken Circle" around the Great White Throne.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our departed sister, and also that copies be furnished The Christian Sun and The Waverly Dispatch for publication.

Mrs. J. L. Foster,
Mrs. E. B. Richardson,
Miss Adelle Matthews,
Committee.

AWFUL FACTS IN THE LIFE OF THE CHURCH—CAN YOU DISPROVE THEM?

The picture is a dark one. We do not like even to hold it up to light so that it may be seen. But we recall what happened in the life of a dear friend. She discovered a serious malady on her person. She kept it strictly to herself. She would not let her husband know of its presence. She would not hint to her nearest and dearest friend any thing of her trouble. So concealing it, she went on and on till one day she realized that it was rapidly growing worse, and that something must be done, or she could live only a short time. She then told her husband. He sent for the physician. When he arrived and made an examination, he took the husband out and told him that it was too late—that nothing could be done then for his wife's relief, and that she could live but a short time. Then the awful fact must be made known to the wife herself. It was done, and it was about as she expected it would be, after having kept it to herself for so long; she felt assured that she could not hope for relief, and that she must soon succumb to the ravages of this terrible cancer, and in a short while she was dead—and most likely it was all due to her refusal to recognize the fact that she had in her system a terrible disease. When it started it might have been removed, and most likely cured, but a sort of false modesty made her keep it to herself until it was too late to give her relief.

This is an illustration of what it means to allow the Church to go on with a terrible disease luring its membership and saying nothing of the dangers in the way—dangers to which she is daily exposing herself—such dangers as are likely to destroy her life and usefulness in the Master's vineyard. Sometimes on the outside we see only the symptoms of the disease that is so fearfully at work within. The symptom is only a key to what is on the inside, and when allowed to go on to great lengths, it means sure death. Because of this fact, we feel that we ought to awake and bestir ourselves that we may save the Church from the dreadful consequences of the disease which is so eating out its vitals as to make sure of dreadful conditions just a little later. The disease which is now gnawing at the vitals of the Church must be arrested and destroyed, or it will surely arrest and destroy the Church. The truth is it has already arrested the spiritual life of the Church, and the time of its downfall is only a little while away unless we will quickly awake to the seriousness of the situation and apply the proper remedy.

The editor of the Western Christian Advocate, in his issue of April 4th, sees the danger and he makes an earnest call to the great Methodist brotherhood, and seeing he is so broad in his view of the situation as to make his words apply to others just as truly as to the Methodist, if our conditions should become akin to theirs, and we know it is, at least in part, where we have had a chance to observe conditions. We ask especially for a careful and a prayerful reading of what the Western's editor has to say along this line of downfall. The following is the article—read it closely:

SHAME ON US, CHRISTIAN BRETHREN!

The average Protestant does not give religion enough time in ten years to wear out the sole leather of one pair of shoes. The average man would not wear thin the knees of his trousers in a half century in performing his devotions!

Mark the words of the cynic. Nevertheless, the cynicism in these words, on examination, may quickly disappear. They contain more truth than we are willing to acknowledge. How many Protestants attend the midweek services? About one-tenth of the membership of each Protestant Church. The other ninety per cent have as little interest in the prayer meeting or spiritual exercises as though they had no capacity to perform it or to enjoy it.

It is a shame that such a criticism can be made. We may be wrong. We hope we are. It is worse that such a criticism can be made in all truth. The wise man, Solomon, wrote, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; study his ways and be wise." This might be transformed with pertinent application to the average Protestant—"Go to the Roman Catholic Church, and learn how to be religious." No, no; surely not. We have not come to that desperation.

Roman Catholic men go to Church. They go to Church to pray. They go to Church to confess their sins. They go to Church because they like to go, not because they are driven or compelled. The average Protestant man goes to Church when it is convenient. As to confessing his sins, he has to a large extent passed that up and never undertakes it. He feels no inclination in that direction. His sins give him very little worry. They are all found in the realm of responsibility, and consequently can be passed up without any anxiety about human pledges.

Does he go to Communion? Does he regard it as a means of grace? Oh, yes; quite a number do. How many go to the holy sacrament? Earnest, red-blooded, vigorous, busy men—how many of them religiously confess that they need to go to Communion and partake of the broken elements of the body and the shed blood of our Lord Jesus Christ in answer to the hunger of their souls, or in expression of any obligation they may feel toward him? Can you answer, how many?

Brother Protestant Christian, you understand down in your heart how recreant, how reprehensible, how shameful is your conduct in the field of the performance of your religious responsibilities. Throw your slurs and your sneers at the Roman Catholic if you will: deprecate his religion, and inwardly thank God for the liberty you enjoy; but remember this: he can teach you how to be religious and how to be true to your Church. You abuse your liberty and lose your soul.

The great trouble with the average Protestant is, he takes advantage of the Protestant liberty to live his own life and to grow careless about his religious duties. He stays at home and takes an attitude of indifference toward the call of the Church; and he is prone, if he is a man of means, to say by his action, "Religion is good for the other fellow, but I don't need it especially myself."

Again we say, shame on our Christian Protestantism! Why will we not heed the call of the Church when it urges us to give ourselves to its service in the prayer meeting, in the Sunday School, the men's Bible classes, the revival meeting, and the special services dedicated to the promotion of Christian citizenship in behalf of Americanization?

What would this world be if the men of Protestantism would really take themselves seriously for a century? Fifty per cent. of the citizenship of America is now outside of the Church. Why is this so? Because too many of the men of the Protestant Church have ceased to interest themselves in the spiritual life of the great masses of the people. They are permitting their minds to be occupied by business and professional duties, and other interests that have come to occupy their attention. The Church is working out the social problem as well as the religious, and they are working out the industrial and economic problem, not knowing that no man can afford to pass up his Church and his religious duties because other obligations are pressing upon him.

If you want to learn a lesson of Church attendance, you can find the best one at the door of the Roman Catholic Church. If you want to witness devotion; if you want to see how a man will say his prayers and confess his sins, and do it regularly and intensely, follow the footsteps of the average Roman Catholic during the year.

We do not call your attention to this to commend, but to inform. We do not want you to follow the example, but we want you to take note of the fact that there is a difference. We want you also to be stung in your conscience by a sudden discovery of your own reprehensible conduct. We want you to be better Christians than any Roman Catholic. For otherwise you will have no reason to boast. You will have no cause for condescension. Otherwise your contempt, your expression of superiority will be like the ashes of Gomorrah upon your lips and leave on your tongue a taste like the apples of Sodom.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Henderson Convention meets next Tuesday, May 1st, at 3 o'clock P. M. Let all delegates be in their places at the opening hour.

The interest in the fourthcoming Convention at Henderson, N. C., seems to be general among our people in the South. We are looking for a large attendance.

The editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN preached the baccalaureate sermon last Sunday for the school at Epsom, in Liberty Christian Church, Vance County, N. C.

The Liberty Church, in Vance, has lost another of its useful members—Bro. Robert S. Watkins. He was a man of good influence in the Christian life. He was buried April 19th.

Be sure to give Dr. Staley's notice in this issue special attention. It is an all-important matter to which he calls attention. The coming Convention should give the matter careful consideration.

Rev. Chas. H. Rowland, D. D., Franklin, Va., has recently been assisting Rev. Stanley C. Harrell in a meeting for the First Christian Church, at Durham, N. C. We hope to hear of good results from their united labors.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., will preach at Mt. Auburn April 29th—fifth Sunday. Mt. Auburn is Dr. Fleming's childhood home. The boys and girls of his childhood days are now wearing gray hairs, but they will give him a real old-fashioned Tarheel welcome.

Those interested in the premiums to be offered for subscriptions to THE SUN will get busy. Line up your prospective subscribers. There will be no time to lose. Prizes will vary in price from that of a Bible, dictionary, typewriter, etc., to that of an automobile.

Just as truly as a man needs exercise to develop his physical self, and education to develop his mental self, he also needs spiritual thought and contact to develop his spiritual self. Go to Church somewhere! Come and worship with us! If you prefer some other Church, go to that Church! But go!

Judging from the reports now coming in of those who expect to attend the Henderson Convention, we may expect a pretty good attendance. Between sixty and seventy persons have reported their intentions to attend. The Henderson Church is making preparation for their coming, and the little Church will make a strong effort to care for all who come. A few have chosen to go to the hotel as a place of entertainment.

Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., reports his work at Burlington, N. C., as doing well. He is one of the hard-working pastors among our people. Besides, his Church is one well qualified to work with a good pastor, and the two together, with God's blessings upon them, could hardly fail in their efforts to build up the cause of Christ in their midst, as well as abroad, and they are maintaining a good work in Japan as well as at home.

The One-Day School of Missions, held this spring in the various portions of our territory, was in most cases a very decided success in awakening an interest in the missionary work. Most of the reports have been very gratifying.

If the number of THE SUN'S readers is to be increased it will be necessary to do a great deal of personal solicitation. And in some way this expenditure of effort must be rewarded. Premiums are being arranged for in order to compensate for the work done. One would like to secure a standard unabridged dictionary, another a portable standard typewriter, and still another a radio equipment or an automobile. To obtain such a prize will require work, and you can solicit outside of your own Church or denomination.

Judging from the cards received from those who are expecting to attend the Henderson Convention, all the Conferences in the Southern States will be well represented. Then we expect a few visitors from the north side of what we used to call Mason and Dixon's line. We are expecting a good Convention. We hear we are to have a visit from ten of our Freewill Baptist Brethren from the Eastern and other parts of North Carolina. Prof. J. E. Sawyer will address the Convention on "Christian Union from the Freewill Baptist Point of View."

We regret to hear of the continued serious illness of Mrs. J. P. Dalton, of Holland, Va. For more than a year she has been a great sufferer and still is. Her devoted husband, Bro. J. P. Dalton, who is one of the official members of the Holland Christian Church, is sparing neither time nor money in trying to get relief for her. She is now at the Protestant Hospital in Norfolk, Va., and we do hope she may find speedy relief. May God's blessings be upon her and the family from whom she is temporarily separated. They both have the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends.

Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, N. C., spent a part of last week in Cleveland, Ohio, where he spoke on Thursday before the Religious Education Association on "Evaluating Results of Religious Education." We understand Dr. Harper is to tell that association something of the plan he has laid out for religious education in the Christian Church for the next twenty years. Educate people religiously? Yes, surely, but be sure that you first educate them to seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit in the religious life.

The many friends of Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., will be pained to know that he keeps feeble, and to add to the difficulty of the situation, Mrs. Holt sustained quite a serious injury from a fall not long since, so that she has not been able to walk for some time. Let these dear friends have the prayers and deep sympathy of our people in their afflictions. Bro. Holt himself is not able to be out but little if any. A kind and brotherly note to these servants of the Lord would be greatly appreciated, we have no doubt, and at the same time such a note might brighten the otherwise overcast sky.

For a long time it did look as if our modernist friends were about to sweep the field for their new ideas. It only seemed that way because the conservative side of the Church had not been awakened to the gravity of the situation. Within the last year there has been quite an awakening among the conservatives of the Church, and now many sentinels are keeping watch, and it will be harder now than ever for the modernist to get in his work without being seen. It was only a few weeks ago that the editor of the Southern Churchman had an editorial which was supposed to give some expression of sympathy to Mr. Grant, an Episcopal minister of New York City, who had been understood to reject the divinity of Christ. At once, certain men in the Episcopal fold called on him to declare himself as to this matter. The editor remained silent, but his brethren would not stand for that, and so he at length came out and said that he was true to the divinity of Christ. It may be that this state of things will bring the people to positive conviction, and so in the end it may work good to the cause of Christ. Let us hope it may be so.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION OF THE VIRGINIA VALLEY CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Convention will meet at Dry Run, ten miles east from Woodstock, Va., in Powell's Fort, on Wednesday, May 16th, at 8 o'clock P. M. All the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies in the Conference are urged to send delegates. Let visitors come, too. We want a great Convention at Dry Run. Every Church in the Conference needs the inspiration such a convention can give.

Those coming by rail will be met at Woodstock. Those coming by auto can leave the Valley Pike at Edinburg and go down through the fort, or leave the pike at Woodstock and go directly across the mountain to Dry Run.

Write Wesley Ritenour, Seven Fountains, Va., and tell him how and when you are coming, and be sure to come.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION TO MEET IN HENDERSON, N. C.

The First Christian Church, of Henderson, N. C., Dr. J. P. Barrett, pastor, has extended the Convention an invitation to meet in Henderson for the extraordinary session, to be held this spring.

The Executive Committee appreciates this invitation, and hereby gives official notice of this acceptance.

The Convention will open Tuesday, May 1, 1923, at 3 P. M., and will close with the evening service Thursday, May 3rd.

The Henderson Church is a good Church, but not as strong as some, and I, as President, without the Church's consent, am suggesting that if any minister or delegate wants to help them in the entertainment, you can do so by simply writing, requesting them to arrange for you at the hotel, you paying your bills. This is only a suggestion, and I apologize to the Church now for making it.

L. E. SMITH, Pres.

NOTICE.

All persons expecting to attend the forthcoming session of the Southern Christian Convention to meet with the Christian Church in Henderson, N. C., May 1st, and who desire entertainment at the hands of the Church are requested to notify me, as the pastor of the Church, at your earliest convenience. We will not hold ourselves responsible to provide entertainment for those who do not notify me. If you wish to engage rooms at hotels at your own expense, please let us know and we will do our best for you.

Very sincerely yours,

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Henderson, N. C.

Bro. J. E. Harward has recently moved from Durham, N. C., to Henderson, N. C., to make his home. Soon after coming to Henderson he went back to Durham and brought one of the fair members of the Durham Christian Church with him to Henderson as his bride, Miss Minnie Carden, a daughter of our beloved brother and sister, Rev. and Mrs. J. S. Carden. They are already heartily at work in the Henderson Christian Church, and they have received a most cordial welcome. They were married April 3rd, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell officiating.

A few Sundays ago, while on a visit, we listened in to a sermon broadcasted over the "wireless." When it came time for the offering, the minister said, "A word to my invisible audience: We do not ask you to send your contribution to us. I will ask, however, that every man now listening in, puts his hand in his pocket and brings out a coin or a bank-note. Now I will pause, and I want every man to promise himself that tomorrow morning he will send that coin or bank-note to his Church—or to his favorite charity." Rather unique, wasn't it?

Bro. J. Bird Ellington and family, of the Mt. Auburn Christian Church, Warren County, N. C., have moved to Henderson to make their home in that city. They are co-operating with the Henderson Church, although their membership is still with the Mt. Auburn Church. It is a fine family and of much real help to the Church. They, too, have received a warm welcome by the Church in Henderson. We have plenty of room in Henderson, and if there are others of our people who would like to come to Henderson and co-operate with us, we shall be glad to welcome them also.

Do not forget the fact that if you are planning to attend the Southern Christian Convention at Henderson, May 1st, that you should notify the pastor of the said Church that you are coming, if you wish entertainment, as no provision will be made for those who do not give us notice of their coming. Some are choosing of their own accord to secure room at the hotel. That is all right, so far as the Henderson Church is concerned. But if you are to engage a room at a hotel you had better do it soon, as the hotel is nearly all the while crowded. If you wish to do that, write to the Hotel Vance. Rooms are $1.50 a day without bath; with bath, $2.00.

We appreciate the following, which gives expression to appreciation along a line that may interest others. If you are interested, suppose you send in a question as often as you think of one that would be likely to call out interest on the part of our readers. Our brother says: "I wish to congratulate you on your new feature in The Sun—'The Question Box.' While some of the things that may be asked about may sound very academic to a great many people, yet I believe that it will build up an interest in the paper that will have far-reaching effect. Our people will see and know that they have somewhere that they can go for information and can get good replies. I believe it to be a valuable addition to the paper."

We wonder if it ever occurs to our brethren, who so strenuously insist on the maintenance of sectarianism in their work, to ask: "And where does Christ come in"? For instance, in the Religious Herald for April 12 we learn that Dr. Frank M. Goodchild, pastor of the Central Baptist Church, of New York City, recently addressed the Baptist students of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, and the following were his subjects: "Baptist Principles," "Baptist Doctrine," "Baptist Polity," "Baptist Ordinances," "Baptist History and the Present Denominational Organization," "Baptist Heroes," and "The Relation of Baptists to Other Christian Bodies." As we read, we could but ask, "And where does Christ come in"? It was almost a strictly Baptistic affair; now, was it not? It may be that Christ came in on the two last words of the last subject. It must be rather inconvenient to have to turn things around so hard to get an open door for Christ to come in. If it had not been for other "Christian Bodies," how could they have admitted the Christ into this series of subjects? We love our Baptist brethren, but they really do mightily insist on everything being very Baptistic. Well, that is their responsibility, and not ours.

Did you hear some of our young men who are delegates to the Henderson Convention say they could not come. Well, that is too bad. Tell the young man who said he could not come that five of our oldest men in the ministry of the Christian Church have signified their intention to come. Not only are these five of our oldest men, but they are all, with a single exception, more or less feeble. These are Rev. J. D. Wicker, Rev. W. G. Clements, Rev. W. S. Long, and Rev. J. W. Wellons. If we are not mistaken, they are all above eighty years of age, and Bro. Wellons is in his ninety-eighth year, and yet these old men are coming if their health and strength should hold out till the day comes—May 1st. We think if men as old and feeble as these can endure the hardships of such a journey in order to show their interest in the work of the Christian Church, our young men ought to be stimulated to do as much, if not more, for the cause needs the strong and active support of our young men. Come, brethren! The old men are moved by their interest in the cause of the Christian Church, and under that interest they come. Now, what is it that makes our young men stay at home—we mean such as do not come—when the Church of their choice needs them?

There was quite a fuss made over the fact that prohibition on the steamers crossing the Atlantic would kill travel on American ships, but the government authorities stood by their guns and would not allow the steamboats to violate the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution, and already it is announced that our ships (on which liquor is not allowed) are overrun with passengers, so that many have been unable to get passage. Again the "wet" prophets fail in their dismal predictions, and so we have more reason to keep prohibition than ever. Let no man try to take prohibition from the United States. It is a great thing for the country. It is true that in some places it is hard to enforce the prohibition law, but give Uncle Sam a little time and we hope he will work it out all right. We would be having no trouble even now were it not for the men who are "wet" and have no regard for law. True they say, we have regard for laws which do not disturb our business, but we have no respect for the laws which we do not like. Exactly! That is the truth, we have no doubt; but a majority of the people of the United States have said they do like the prohibition law, and so we must let the majority rule. The "wets" are not in the majority, and we hope they never will be again. The fight is a bit hard now, but wait a few years and the conditions will improve and great things will come to pass as the outgrowth of the prohibition law. Let us keep the law and continue to enforce it, and we shall soon realize what a blessing it has been to our country. Indeed, that is true now—great gains have already come to pass as a result of prohibition, and the gains will become greater as the years come and go—and the law is better enforced, as it will be, as the days come and go.

There is a satisfaction in knowing that many of the most faithful and loyal followers of Christ are but little known to the public. In a ministry of almost fifty years, it has been our privilege to know many of the Lord's people in our Churches who are among the most faithful and loyal. Indeed, we have known many of these people to be so loyal and true, self-sacrificing and devoted to the Christ of our salvation as to commend them in a most unselfish way. It does not matter whether the world knows them or not, or whether their names have ever been in print or not, but every time you hear from them it is the same thing—they are loyal and true to the Saviour and His Church. You may not even recognize their worth, but when you hear from them again, you will find that their heart and mind are bent on loyalty to the Christ, ever seeking to do their best for His cause among men. Now and then you find one of these devoted servants, living quite a distance from the local Church, so that often such an one cannot be in the public service, but all the same they are loyal and faithful. Just now we have in mind one such who has been denied many of the privileges of the Church in late years, but a letter from her this morning brings in a modest way the assurance that she is working for her Church, whether she is known or not. God bless the little woman who can stand amid the storms of life and yet always ring true to her Lord and Master and to His Church. Yes, God bless these faithful ones! By and by, their reward will outshine some of us who have been before the public for so many years. We would call her name, but for her well-known modesty.

AUTO DRIVERS MUST STOP BEFORE CROSSING TRACKS

Drivers of automobiles and trucks on the public roads of North Carolina must halt before crossing railway tracks at grade, under an act of the General Assembly which becomes effective July 1, 1923.

Under the terms of the act, every person driving a motor vehicle must come to a full stop at a distance not exceeding fifty feet from the nearest rail when approaching a railway track. Failure to observe the law will be a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment.

Reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that in the last five years 9,101 persons have been killed and 24,208 injured in grade-crossing accidents in the United States, and of this frightful figure, North Carolina has had more than her full quota.

Laws similar to the North Carolina statute are already in force in Virginia and Tennessee.

SHORT TALKS ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

GENESIS, THE BOOK OF THE BEGINNINGS.

It is a good thing for the Bible student in beginning to read a book of te Bible to take time to learn all he can about the book he is going to read. Get its date and as much as possible of the history of the people among whom it was written. Also get a history of the name of the book, for most of the names have a history, get the scope of the narrative, get the purpose of the book. It will be a great help, too, to familiarize yourself with the persons whose names appear in the book. Learn who they were, their character and their life work; and as far as possible learn the full story of their lives. These things will mean much to the reader and will give him an insight into the full meaning of the book which it might be hard to get in any other way. Then, above all the rest, be sure to study to get the spiritual teaching of the book. If you miss that, you will not get much real strength from your own life from reading it.

Let us give you a little illustration of what we have in mind.

We will take up the book of Genesis. Let us see what the reading of the first book of the Bible will mean to us, if we follow these suggestions:

1. The meaning of the name of the book—Genesis literally means the "Book of the Beginnings. That is, the book of Genesis is the book which teaches us of the beginnings of the world and its history from God's standpoint.

2. As to the date of the book, it may be sufficient to say that it was in the beginning. The chronology usually given is that it was 4004 B. C.

3. There is in this instance but little history to be had of the people among whom it was written, except what is given in the Bible itself. The history of the name of the book is really given in the meaning of the name—it is the book of the beginnings. It will be well to learn all you can of the men and women who were on the stage of action in that day, such as Adam and Eve, Cain and Abel, and all the rest of the names given there. Then study Noah and the people mentioned in connection with him. Then Moses and his surroundings and work and the outcome of his labors. Following Moses came Joshua and Caleb. Do not imagine that in those early days there was nothing spiritual among the people that could be helpful to you in your own Christian experience. It was in the early days of the world's history, and had man happened on this earth by some unknown circumstance, then he might not have had anything to leave to such as might come after him, but having been put here by the hand of God, he was equipped with much that was needed in the beginning of the race, beginning was spiritual experience, the very thing that so enriched his life as to make his labors very fruitful for good. We who read the book, in this the twentieth century of the Christian era, need to get as much of their experiences as possible, for these will enrich us and qualify us for larger fruit-bearing in the kingdom and service of our Lord.

As you study the book of Genesis you will find some account of the beginnings of man and his environment, but you will find no account of the beginning of God. That is the one great unsolvable mystery that, so far as we know, must always remain to man as the one great unknown beginning. While this is true, the book of Genesis will give you the most reliable information that may be had concerning every known fact of creation in its relation to revelation and the physical, moral and mental development of the race.

The beginnings which will most closely engage your attention and study will be the beginning of the human race, marriage, the family, the State, the Church, or the people of God, as they were most generally called in that day. Out of these came nations and civilization. Then followed history, law, government and penalty for wrongdoing, and along with these came the Sabbath, sin, sacrifice and salvation. Then men and women began to worship, and God entered into covenant relations with His people. Following came God's call to His people to enter upon great undertakings in keeping with His plans and purposes. Under His direction, language came, literature was given, in a small way of course. In the line of the development of the race came the mechanic arts, fine arts, science and poetry. Thus equipped, the human race had a pretty good start for doing things for God and humanity, but it was not but a few years till the wicked one had his hand in affairs and troubles came.

Another great theme for study will be the way God taught His people great truths, such as would tend to make them wise and useful in filling the places and doing the work for which He had designed them. His first great lessons were as to Himself, His character, His relation to them, and what He designed to accomplish through them. The first great lessons He gave them concerning Himself was of His unity, His Trinity, His eternity, His power, His wisdom, His moral attributes, His holiness, His goodness, His mercy and His justice. He also taught them not merely of His own unity, but of the unity of the human race, the relation of husband and wife, of the responsibilities of parents for their children.

Then He taught them that Adam's marriage to Eve was a great lesson in human life, pointing to some great event in the future, possibly to Christ as the Bridegroom of the Church. Then He taught them to put away sin and to put on righteousness. Abel was the first martyr for truth; Noah was the first preacher of righteousness, the ark was the first great symbol of salvation, Abraham offering Isaac was God's first hint to the human family that later He would give His Son to die for the saving of the world. In Joseph, He filled the world with ideas concerning the humiliation of His Son and then later of His wonderful exaltation.

The book of Genesis excludes unbelief, atheism, pantheism, polytheism, materialism and all other isms which seek to make a place for themselves by leaving God out. Genesis denies the eternity of matter, but enforces the eternity, self-existence, independence, omnipotence and wisdom of the Creator. The book of Genesis may be divided into two great parts, as follows:

Chapters one to eleven give us some account of the doings which took place from the time of Adam to Noah, including sin, fall of man and the coming of the flood for the destruction of a sin-mad world.

Chapters twelve to fifty present another panorama of what took place from Abraham to Joseph, the chosen seed, the going into Egypt and the hard life and bondage they experienced in that land.

The critics may say all they say but genesis is the beginning of God's plan.

THE ONLY SURE AND SAFE FOUNDATION.

If there was ever a time when we needed things sure and safe and sound, it is now, and the reason for that is the fact that the country, and even the Church, at least the professed and visible Church, have in them so many theories and teachings which are not sure, they are not safe, and they are not sound, and it is because of this fact that we need to cry aloud and spare not, and at the same time be looking for the old paths which are well supplied with the truths of salvation and the way of safety.

Mr. R. H. Edmonds, a man of fine thought and standing, and editor of the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, recently gave expression to thoughts along this line which we deem very appropriate and just the thing for the consideration of our readers at this time. He says:

"The very foundation of individual, national and world prosperity is religion. Without the guiding influence of religion and the power which it has over mankind this nation would soon sink back into barbarism and no business in it would be safe. Eliminate from every community the churches that are in it and property of all kinds would become practically worthless and the bats and the owls would soon take possession of the city. This is the lowest possible point of view from which to study the influence of religion on the individual or on the world, but it is a view which a business paper can stress even from the strictly business standpoint.

"This country needs more than anything else a genuine nation-wide revival of old-time religion—the religion that accepts the teachings of the Bible as divine; a religion that makes the employer honest in dealing with his employees and the employe equally as honest in dealing with his employer; a religion that makes every adherent of it through and through honest and honorable in every transaction and in every relation of life; a religion which uplifts, which makes men realize that in the literal fulfilling of the teaching of the Golden Rule there is safety, and nowhere is there safety for business or for society. We need a religion which will give men the moral backbone to stand out in the open and fight wrong wherever intrenched, regardless of their personal safety or their business. Every man who seeks to fight wrong under the guise of some secret organization hasn't the moral courage to fight in the open, and lacks the inspiring power of true religion.

"Looking at it in the larger sense, the spirit of the Golden Rule must dominate every office and every factory and every farm if there is to be honesty and honor among men.

"The man who tries to cheat his employee or his employer, the man who tries to sell bad goods for good goods, the man who tries to take an advantage of his customer or any man with whom he is dealing, is by that fact sapping his own moral fibre.

"Only through a nation-wide and world-wide revival of the religion of the cross can the world be saved from chaos.

"The world is in turmoil, partly economic, but largely through the failure of religion to function fully in the hearts and lives of those who profess it."

WHO IS THE "FORGOTTEN MAN"?

Usually he is the most unselfish man in the community, the man who has been constant in looking after the best interests of all instead of trying to get everything for his own ease and comfort. Men often forget him because they regard him as so true, and that he may be counted on any way, that it is not necessary to look after him. That is not a good way to see it, but in many instances it is probably correct.

The man who is generally forgotten is the man who is not much in making a show before men, but at heart he is doing his best to be true to the good, the right and the wise. It is plain enough that the minister, is it not? Well, the minister is the man that many feel they can afford to forget, because in many cases he will not have anything to say, and we are glad that he is thus unselfish. It is an indication that he is made of the right stuff to be used in the Master's cause.

The Church itself, the one who has profited most by the labors of the minister, is often the one who forgets the minister so readily and so easily.

The editor of the Christian Advocate tells the following story on the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as to how it forgets its own devoted workmen and leaves them to suffer and get along as best they may. We are glad that the ministers are such noble and self-sacrificing men, for they speak well for the Master whom they serve under such circumstances. Here is the picture of what that great Church is doing for the poor minister, and picture it is! Do not talk of the minister being no financier, if he can get along while he is rearing his family on a mere pittance, when he comes down to old age and can work no more, then they do him almost as some men do a faithful horse that has served them for many years and did his hard work for his owners. Now that the minister is old and can do nothing much to take care of himself and aged wife, they forget him and the work he once did for the cause.

It is said that on one occasion the father of Ex-President Wilson, who was a minister, was driving his horse through the street when some man who knew him quite well said: "Well, Mr. Wilson, your horse seems to be kept better than you are." Yes, he said, but I keep my horse and my Church keeps me, and that is the difference, but a tremendous difference it is, too.

The Methodist Episcopal Church began in earnest to relieve the needs of its superannuated preachers in 1908. The tables given in the last number of the Veteran Preacher enables us to form some idea of what has been done for the cause since then. In 1908 the gross income for conference claimants was $605,680, in 1921 $2,493,906, and in 1922 $2,756,121. The present resources are $15,923,263. Now, as to what the superannuated preachers get. The table shows that 106 get $50 or less, 184 get $51 to $100, 254 get $101 to $200, 380 get $201 to $300, 461 get $301 to $400, 510 get $401 to $500, 497 get $501 to $600, 384 get $601 to $700, 253 get $701 to $800, 156 get $801 to $900, 76 get $901 to $1,000, and only 67 get over $1,000. Thus it can be seen what a pitiably small sum the Methodist Episcopal Church pays the vast majority of her preachers who bore the heat and the burden of the day, planted the mudsills of our present bridge of triumph which we boast as we pass over, and were finally placed apart as non-effective and non-supported. But as the record is for the Methodist Episcopal Church, it is much worse for our own Church. Be sure to read our own statistics and begin to pray that the day of redemption from our reproach may be brought nigh.

HE IS RIGHT, WE THINK.

What are we doing as a people to take care of our history? It is certain that we are not doing what ought to be done, and therefore it might be a good thing to have the Convention next week at Henderson to plan some means of taking care of our history as a people. We cannot afford to let it go without attention, for if we do, soon certain historical facts will be lost to us. Historical facts may be all right for a short time in the minds of men, but let us not forget that men die, and a dead man tells nothing to the people he leaves behind him, no matter how much he knew that was important and valuable.

We have had our attention called to this matter by one of our brethren in another State, and his suggestions are so timely that we give them below without his name. We withhold his name by request, but we guarantee the name to be a worthy one, and we commend his suggestions to our people when they assemble in Henderson next week. He presents the matter in a very practical way and withal to the point. We have not much time to do the thinking over this matter, not such as it deserves, but it is too important to let go without such attention as we may be able to give it.

Our brother says:

"The General Convention will soon meet in extraordinary session, and by looking over the records, I find that from time to time there have been efforts made to get a history of our Church together and give it in a concise and readable form. Most of these efforts have turned out to be along individual lines which have been valuable in themselves. Yet the scope has not been what it should have been. Do you not think that it would be a good idea to have this session of the Convention appoint a historical commission to gather the history of the Church together and give it to the world in good shape? The longer this is delayed, the more difficult it will be to gather the data. January 1, 1923, we had a good mine of information in the library at Elon College; today, it is in ashes and no one knows how soon the next best one, which we believe to be the North Carolina State Library, will be in the same condition. It behooves us as a denomination it seems to me to gather our data while it is available."

What say you, brethren? Get your studying cap on and give it your best thought and be ready to present something along this line in the coming Convention.

HOW CAN WE PROVE UP?

As Christians, we need to prove the life we profess to live by our character and our works. Works alone cannot bring salvation to any one, but a true character and good works may serve to prove to the world that we really have what we profess to have in the Christian life.

Paul shows us that works cannot save us from a sinful life, but James, by the same works, insists that we may prove the genuineness of our profession by our works. James gave us these words: "Show me thy faith without works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." So we may take it that our works simply prove that we have the faith we profess, and that means much to the world round about us, for the world is always in need of proof of the truth of what Christians profess.

It was Paul who said to the Christians at Corinth: "Ye are our epistles written in our hearts, known and read of all men." What encouragement it must be to any minister of Christ to see that what he has taught his people, they are showing in their daily living, so that the people can read of the great truths of Christianity in the lives of such as have embraced these truths. The truth preached, but not accepted—not lived by the people who have heard the preaching—means but little in the eyes of the world or elsewhere. If we are to reach the people with the truths, those truths must not only be found in the Bible, but they must be found translated from the mystical language of the Bible and put into the language of a life, and being lived before men much may be accomplished in the lives of unbelievers.

Let us remember that the Bible is written in two languages always. The first language is the one in which the Bible is written, and the other is the language of human life, which, if saturated with the Gospel, will mean so much to the unsaved. Brother, sister, let the first aim of your life be to know the Gospel, and knowing it, then by all means seek to translate it into human conduct that others seeing it may be led to glorify God by accepting the same and then living the truths of Christianity before men. That is a preaching of the Gospel that all men may do if they like.

WHO SAYS PREACHERS ARE NOT GOOD FINANCIERS?

Not long ago since in a public meeting in the city of Henderson, N. C., we heard Mr. J. H. Bridgers make a remarkable statement concerning the reliability of the preachers of the North Carolina Methodist Conference. We take it that the preachers of other denominations will rank with our Methodist brethren in the management of their finances, and, therefore, we publish herewith a statement from the North Carolina Christian Advocate, concerning the same statement to which reference is made above, as follows:

In conversation with Mr. J. H. Bridgers, one of the foremost laymen of our Church in the State, and who was for sixteen years a member of the joint board of finance of the North Carolina Conference and its treasurer for nine years, he made the statement that he had handled something like four hundred checks each year that he was treasurer of the board signed by preachers, making a total of about 3,600 checks passing through his hands, and that only two of them were even delayed in being cashed. One of these was not honored because a layman, who had failed to pay his assessment before his pastor went to Conference, promised to deposit to the credit of his pastor $5.00, but failed to do so. The other preacher's check that was not paid was because the bank had closed before the check got back home. In each case the preacher made the check good. We do not claim that the ministry is due any credit for this good showing because common honesty will not permit a man to give a check when he has no money in the bank to protect it, but it is gratifying to know that our ministers are so careful about their financial obligations.

In the two instances named by Mr. Bridgers, when the checks were not promptly cashed, it was not in any way the fault of the preachers who were involved. It seems to us if the preachers proved all right in every case through so large a number as 3,600 checks, we ought to admit that the preachers have honored themselves well, indeed. Even millionaires could not have done better, could they?

Violation of the Eighteenth Amendment cost a native of Finland the right to American citizenship in Federal District Court in Spokane, Wash. When he admitted he made whiskey at one time, the judge replied, "Application denied; I will admit no one to citizenship in this court who, by his own statements, has thus knowingly violated the Constitution which he must swear to uphold."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

An orphanage is a modern Christian institution to care for children whose parents are no more in the flesh. Heathenism and paganism never dreamed of such worthy help. Greece and Rome, with all their learning and power, made no provision for orphans. It remained for Christianity to house, feed, clothe and educate the helpless little ones. This age surpasses all other ages in the care and training of children, and the orphanage touches the heart of this Christian teaching. Centuries passed before this obligation was realized by the Church; but it has at last gripped the sympathy and moved the people of God to help care for the homeless little ones, and, as the people are informed, they respond with their sympathy, their prayers, and their gifts.

The support of the orphanage is a great opportunity for the Sunday Schools as well as the Churches. An offering once a month helps the institution and those who give, for the Lord Jesus said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The Bible gives an account of a beautiful orphan. She was taken by her cousin, Mordecai, and brought up as his own daughter. She was a poor peasant, alien child, but she was beautiful, and when the servants of King Ahasuerus sought a wife for the king, Esther was chosen of all the young women brought into the palace for selection. In the great crisis, when a decree had been issued by the king to destroy all the Jews in the 127 provinces of his empire, it was Esther, at the request of Mordecai, who went in before Ahasuerus, won his favor and saved the race to which she belonged. Mordecai's home thus became a tiny orphanage, and queen Esther was a sample of what an orphanage can do for the world.

The Christian Orphanage has claims upon all the members of the Christian Church—claims which should appeal to heart, head, and purse. It must be a heartless Christian who does not feel for orphans. Children have a hard road when their parents live. Think of mumps, measles, teething, school, and all the changes up to manhood and womanhood, and you see a rugged path for those who dwell at home; then think of the little tots whose lives must grow to maturity without father or mother, and it will touch your heart. It is a sad picture to see a group of little children looking into the grave of widowed mother. No wonder Jesus loved little children, for He could see all of their trials in all conditions; and real Christians have the love of Jesus in their hearts.

Thought grows out of love, for "as a man thinketh in his heart so is he." There is thought that is of the head only; but when the heart loves the head will think. When Christian hearts are moved by love, the head is moved to think, so that heart and head unite in sympathy for the little ones. When heart and head unite their forces, then real service begins. Such thought leads to inquiry, prayer, a desire to help, to giving. Have you thought, seriously, of the hundred children in the Christian Orphanage? If you have not, it is time to think!

The Orphanage was founded by the Church in 1907, and the Church is composed of men and women just like you. It takes money to care for a hundred children, and their needs have claims upon you today—claims upon your money as well as your prayers. Every Sunday School in the Convention should take a monthly offering for the Orphanage. Always send whole dollars. Use special envelopes for the offering—make it a special offering; take it by classes, and teach the children to understand what it means to give. When we think, feel and give, our interest in the Orphanage will grow.

ELON LETTER.

The rebuilding work forges along nicely, and we fully expect to have the administration building and auditorium ready by September the first. Three buildings are now in progress of erection. We have faith in our people to believe they will not let the college suffer in a time like this, and that they will supply the money for the buildings, and gladly supply it.

On Tuesday, April 17th, at 2 P. M., the first brick for the Whitley Memorial Building, funds to erect which are being furnished by Bro. J. M. Darden, was laid. The ceremony was brief, but impressive. Dr. J. W. Wellons offered a word of prayer and consecration, voicing appreciation for the gift and the generous hearts that made it possible.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who first suggested to Bro. Darden the erection of the building and convinced him of the appropriateness of such a magnanimous deed, laid the brick. Dr. Atkinson prefaced the laying of the brick with an eloquent tribute to the life of Bro. L. H. Whitley, in whose memory the auditorium is being erected, speaking of him as a "good man, always seeking the right, and urgent always to do it."

Dr. N. G. Newman closed the ceremony with prayer and the benediction.

A slight indisposition and pressing duties at home have prevented much field work for the emergency fund this week. Almost every mail, however, brings money or a subscription from some stout heart and true to aid in the work of reconstruction.

My heart is being made greatly to rejoice these days for the friends who are gladdening our experiences with their generous gifts and brightening Elon's future prospects of service to Church and kingdom. Fellowship has been said to be the finest ship that sails the sea. Right with it I would undoubtedly place friendship. Friendship is fellowship in action. What would life be without friends? What would Elon be but a heap of ashes with blasted hopes but for friends and friendship? Friends are making of shapeless debris a new and larger Elon. God bless our friends!

We must have several thousand dollars yet to make this rebuilding program safe. I have not the slightest doubt but that we shall get them. I know our people. I know what they will do. They care, and they who care always do the sacrificial act in a time like this.

OUR EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM.

Sooner or later, the Southern Christian Convention must face the issue of an adequate educational system for our people. Elon College is the mecca of our school interests at the present time, and I hope it will always remain so. The loyalty and generosity of our Church and others to the institution in this time of calamity will give it a larger place in our hearts and will call forth a more liberal patronage from our people.

The college has met the needs of our Church in the preparation of its ministerial leaders admirably, as evidenced by the growth and development of the Church since the founding of the college, but there is a need for an expansion of the system to meet the needs of the laity. The tendency to patronize local schools vitally effects colleges of all denominations. The last catalogue shows that 76 per cent of of the Elon College students are from North Carolina, and 46 per cent of them from Alamance and adjoining counties. Recognizing the fact that every student is most directly interested in his own alma mater, we cannot see how there will develop a lack of interest in our own institution to meet this condition; we need a system of junior colleges.

Bethlehem College is but a start to what the Southern Convention will have to do if she educates her lay workers in her own schools. We should build another in the Valley of Virginia in the near future and follow it up with others later.

The value of these institutions within the reach of our people will be inestimable and will mean another new day in the advancement of our Church.

CANADIAN YOUNG MEN.

One of the greatest problems of the church and Sunday school in Canada, as well as elsewhere is that of getting and holding young men between the ages of 16 and 25. Often young men who have continually attended Sunday School up to this period of their life will drift out into the world, many never to be reclaimed for Christ and the Church. The Church needs these men for its future life and growth; they need the Church and Christ for their best development and happiness, both now and forever; and Christ lived and died for young men as well as others; so we Christians should do our very best to hold them, and also gain those who are already out on the streets of the cities on Sundays. I shall now tell one of my experiences and briefly explain the methods used, trusting this may inspire other teachers of young men.

On arriving here to serve as pastor of the Oshawa Christian Church, eighteen months ago, I was asked to teach a class of 16 young men. Within three months the class numbered 25. At the end of seven months there were 35 enrolled. In the fourteenth month, Sunday, December 10th, 38 were present, and Sunday, the 31st, 43 faced the teacher. Realizing that a change must be made, the Sunday school provided another teacher, and upon invitation ten of the youngest boys went out of the class to the new teacher. Nevertheless our class continued to grow, and in spite of the decrease of ten in January, the class now numbers 45 young men between the ages of 16 and 25.

Now, perhaps the reader is thinking the the church membership must be large. No! That is not necessary, although it would aid greatly, for people generally follow the crowds.

The membership of this Church was only about 135 until the recent addition of twenty-eight new members. But, in case the church is small, it is necessary to be located in a city, where there are always great numbers out of church. In this city of 12,000 this condition exists. Don't try to get members of other Churches into your Sunday School, but welcome them if they come. I have a few from each of these denominations—Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Anglican, and Catholic—but I never saw them till they sat in the class. There are enough outside of the church, without going into another church after them.

First, the teacher must be interested in young men and must show clearly to them his interest. Where such is natural, so much the better. Become a young man and ask them questions about their sports and activities. Be a student; let them teach. Having learned their attitude of life and knowing the trend of their most frequent thoughts and desires, you are ready to teach. Then be sure you do teach. Be prepared before class to teach without hands full of notes. Always greet your class with a cheerful smile. Give the stranger and visitor a warm welcome in words and a hearty hand clasp. In teaching the incidents and lives of ancient days, adapt the lessons learned to the life and activities of your young men. Get illustrations from your own class. Feel responsible for every soul in your class. Tactfully teach the saving power of Christ, and the Master will bless your efforts.

FROM BURLINGTON.

While it has been some time since The Sun carried a letter in its columns from the Burlington Church, our silence is not to be taken altogether as an indication of the inaction of the work here. On the other hand, the work has been going steadily forward and with many encouragements and assurances of success.

Since the beginning of the Church year our Church roll has been materially strengthened by the addition of several substantial members, and at present a number of good prospects are in sight and it is felt that further additions will follow in the near future.

The Sunday School has recently gone through a period of unusual activity which has imparted new life and interest to this phase of the work. As a result of this increased activity the school had present on a recent Sunday 366, and the number would have been above that but for an epidemic of measles in the community. And it may be said also that the attendance from Sunday to Sunday now is considerably in advance over the previous record.

On Saturday, the 7th of April, the last note against the Church was settled, and on Sunday night following the congregation celebrated the debt-paying victory, during which celebration this last note was burned. It is, therefore, a pleasure to report that the Burlington Church has had a destructive fire in its auditorium—the burning of its notes—and plans now to dedicate the building on Sunday, May 6th. Dr. A. B. Kendall, of Springfield, Ohio, has been invited to preach the dedicatory sermon. Several former pastors, in addition to Dr. Kendall are expected to have a part in the program for the day.

SECOND SPECIAL VACATION COURSE.

The success of the first special vacation course for pastors, teachers and Christian workers has led the Moody Bible Institute to announce a similar curriculum between July 5 and August 3.

As the institute was already conducting Bible conferences in various summer resorts, it was questioned whether a midsummer course in Chicago would ever prove a success. However, Chicago, with its beautiful parks and boating facilities, is far from being an undesirable place to spend the month of July, and the institute is one of the few educational establishments that offers such a summer course in the midst of its regular sessions. This gives the added inspiration of hundreds of students and the presence of every member of the faculty.

Again, it is improbable that more conferences will be held this summer than are actually required. One-fourth of the 700,000 teachers in the United States attend some sort of summer school. Such is their eagerness for self-improvement. On the other hand, not more than five per cent of the ministers avail themselves of such opportunities for added inspiration and edification. There is a growing demand that religious leaders and teachers keep themselves as intellectually fit for their work as educators. The increasing number of Bible conferences and summer courses are the result of this demand.

In addition to the faculty of the Moody Bible Institute, a number of distinguished instructors have been secured. Among these are Rev. A. T. Robertson, D. D., LL. D., Th. M., a leading specialist on the Greek New Testament; Rev. Thornton Whaling, D. D., LL. D., professor of systematic theology, Louisville Southern Presbyterian Seminary; Dr. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, formerly principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, England, and of Wycliffe College, Toronto.

The program will also include Charles Calvert Ellis, B. D., Ph. D., vice-president and professor of education, Juanita College, Huntingdon, Pa.; Dr. George Shannon McCune, president Huron College, S. D.; Rev. S. B. Rohold, Jewish scholar, author of "The War and the Jews," recently returned from Palestine; Rev. P. W. Philpott, pastor of Moody Church, Chicago, and Rev. E. S. Lorenz, veteran music publisher.

A wide range of subjects will be taught, and there will be no charge for instruction.

NOTICE!

I hereby call the attention of Delegates to the Southern Christian Convention that I will offer in person, or through the Committee on Finance, at the Henderson Session the following Recommendation:

Whereas the Men and Millions pledges will expire, except in cases where the time is extended, in 1924; and, whereas, some provision must be made to keep alive the work of the various Departments of the Convention; and, whereas, this can be more effectively done by some permanent financial system; and, whereas, the membership of the Convention, after leaving out non-residents, indifferent, and destitute ones, is Twenty-five Thousand; now, therefore,

Resolved, That the Conferences composing this Convention be requested to ask the local churches, at the 1923 session, to pay to the Convention, annually, the sum of TWO DOLLARS per capita, payments to begin with the 1924 Annual Conferences.

This would make a total sum of FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS for the following purposes, divided according to the following schedule, or some modification thereof: For

Education, 40 per cent	$20,000.00
Missions, 20 per cent	10,000.00
Publications, 10 per cent	5,000.00
Orphanage, 10 per cent	5,000.00
Convention, 10 per cent	5,000.00
Superannuates, 5 per cent	2,500.00

BRO. COTTEN'S WORK IN CANADA.

We clip from the Ontario Reformer, of Oshawa, Canada, the following item in regard to the work of Rev. and Mrs. E. T. Cotten, who are so well known in Virginia and other parts of the United States:

Christian Church.

Easter services at the Christian Church Sunday filled the hearts of its members with great joy as did the Resurrection some nineteen hundred years ago make glad the hearts of the disciples of Christ. At each service was a full congregation. The music was in keeping with the spirit of the day, especially the solo, "Jerusalem," so well sung by Mrs. E. T. Cotten, accompanied with the beautiful sweet strains of the pipe organ, played by Miss Mildred Ellis, the organist. The pastor preached in the morning on "The Stone Rolled Away," and at night gave a very vivid sketch of the "Life of Christ."

But that which rejoiced the hearts of the people was the receiving of twenty-eight new members into the Church. With the exception of six, they were all men and women, a scene which has not been witnessed in this Church on any single day for a decade and longer, some of the older members say. After the new members gave their pledge to God and the Church, the old members arose and pledged their fellowship to the new members, after which the pastor gave the right hand of fellowship and appropriate words of welcome to each one.

The Christian Endeavor meeting, which is held after Church Sunday nights, was attended to the number of fifty-five, the regular attendance the past month being thirty-five to forty.

"I THOUGHT OF YOU, MOTHER."

When a boy, Governor Russell, of Massachusetts, came near being drowned. The boat in which he was sailing capsized, and he had to swim more than a mile, but he finally reached the shore in safety; and when he reached home and told his mother what a long distance he had to swim, she asked him how he managed to hold out so long.

"I thought of you, mother," replied the boy, "and kept on swimming." The thought of mother helped him in the moment of his greatest need and thus saved his life, not only to himself and to his mother, but also to the State and nation.

The thought of mother has saved many boys and girls, men and women, from sinking. Indeed, it has done more than that. The thought of mother has not only saved men from death, but it has inspired them to the most noble and heroic achievements.. The thought of mother's love, mother's life, mother's toils, mother's endless sacrifice, mother's sleepless nights for our comfort and safety—thoughts of these things have helped many souls over the rough and dangerous places in life and finally into the Father's house on high.—Selected.

Whether the World Conference on Faith and Order is to be held at Washington in May, 1925, as tentatively called, will be decided at a meeting this summer in Europe between European and American delegates, if the recommendation of the North American branch of the conference continuation committee is followed. Postponement of the conference, preparations for which have been going on for thirteen years, is a likelihood, as European Church leaders feel Europe has not recovered sufficiently to be able to send delegates so far at that time. Group conferences in all sections of this country to promote Church unity were urged by the North American branch at its meeting in New York City.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

AGAIN FROM THE MOUNTAINS.

Since I last wrote, I received one more check for $5.00 from a friend that did not want the name mentioned. This is greatly appreciated, but much more is needed to buy a Ford, so I will have to renew the appeal. I am sure many are going to help, but doubters are just waiting to know something of the needs, so will tell in part, at least, in the following lines.

First, to get back and forth to the preaching points, consisting of Elk Spur, Rocky Ford, Sandy Ridge. Elk Spur is on top of the mountain, Rocky Ford five or six miles below, Sandy Ridge near the same distance from Rocky Ford (around the road). I have to reach all these places in some way, and often need to do so on the same day, to say nothing of the visiting on the field.

I have, after staying down the mountain over Saturday night, walked two miles to Sandy Ridge and preached, then up to Rocky Ford and preached, then up to the top, in time to preach at night, and have made this trip not having time to stop and eat anything from morning until night.

Now we are beginning to build a Church between these two points (as we had no Church house at either of these places), about seven miles down the mountain, and I have to go down there quite often to look after that work. This work will also make it necessary for me to make several trips to Mt. Airy.

Again, to get our workers to and from the train, they have to go to the train from time to time. If I had a car I can carry them to and from the train; if not, we have to go to a lot of trouble at high cost and inconvenience.

I have to go to and from the train at Mt. Airy, N. C. My people are in Eastern Virginia, and I am here, and I feel that I have to go to see them sometimes, and then I have other calls which make it necessary to go to the train. There is no car near on top of the mountain, and if there was it would not be ours, and if able to get it at all it would be expensive.

I have left the top several times with a handbag weighing forty or fifty pounds to catch the train seventeen miles away, with no promise of a ride.

Just a few weeks ago, one Sunday A. M., I left the top to go to Mt. Airy. I had to go by Sandy Ridge to preach, so I walked there and preached. I left there about 12 o'clock noon for Mt. Airy and walked to within four miles of the place and found that I could not catch the train, so I hired a man to take me the rest of the way, this being the first man that I had been able to get.

The way that I had to travel, this trip had to be made in such haste that I did not have time to eat at any place, so did not eat anything from the time I left the top in the early morning until I reached Greensboro, between 7 and 8 o'clock that evening.

Now, brother pastors and Christian friends, just try some of these trips, and then I believe you will be ready to help just a little, for it will not take much from any, if all will help some.

Who will be the next to help? Everything will be reported through THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Have found a Ford, almost as good as new, that will serve our purpose, and only $250.00 cash is needed to get it. Please do not forget to pray for the work, and the workers here, for we need your prayers.

With much prayer for the work everywhere, I am your brother in the Master's service.

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Fancy Gap, Va.

NOTE.—I am acquainted with conditions about which Brother Bradshaw writes, and agree with what he says. He cannot use the horse we purchased, but find we can get a good Ford for his use for the horse plus $250.00 cash. This, it seems, is a most excellent trade, and will meet conditions exactly. Bro. Bradshaw must certainly have means of travel, and a Ford will do the work. Any money sent him, I know, will be properly applied, greatly appreciated and meritoriously used. J. O. ATKINSON.

MINUTES OF ONE-DAY SCHOOL.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS OF THE GUILFORD, ROCKINGHAM AND FORSYTH COUNTY DISTRICT.

The "One-Day School of Missions" held its annual meeting with the Monticello Christian Church on Wednesday, April 11, 1923, with Mrs. M. F. Cook, chairman of the district, presiding.

After several selections of music, Mrs. O. P. Shelton, of Greensboro, led in the devotional exercises. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield led a chain of prayers for the men and women in the various mission fields, for those who plan our work, for our Conference and Convention, and for the meeting in session.

Mrs. M. F. Cook gave a few words of welcome and a short message on "Co-Workers with God."

To the roll call of the Churches of the District the following representatives responded: First Church, Greensboro—Mrs. M. F. Cook, Mrs. H. R. Clem, Mrs. L. M. Clymer, Mrs. H. H. Clymer, Mrs A. E. Hardin, and Mrs. O. P. Shelton; Palm Street Church, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Reidsville—Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Gerringer, Mrs. Effie Chilton and Mrs. B. W. Fields; Hines Chapel—Mrs. C. E. Gerringer; Monticello—Mr. W. R. McKinney, Mrs. W. F. Burton, and Miss Myrtle Rudd. The ministers present were Rev. G. C. Crutchfield and Rev. C. E. Gerringer.

Mrs. W. H. Carroll, president of the Woman's Mission Board of the North Carolina Conference, was also present.

The Churches that were not represented at this meeting were Apples Chapel, Belews Creek, High Point, Pleasant Ridge, Salem Chapel, Smithwood, Happy Home, Howard's Chapel, Kallam's Grove, Mt. Bethel, New Hope and New Lebanon.

Following the roll call, the representatives from the various Churches reported on the work that has been done during the past year.

Mr. Carroll made a very interesting talk about the goal set by our Conference. After this, special music was rendered.

The next speaker introduced to the audience was Miss Margaret Morey, one of the teachers in our mountain mission.

Miss Pattie Coghill made a short talk and distributed some pamphlets by Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

Committees were appointed as follows: Nominating—Mrs. W. R. McKinney, Mrs. L. M. Clymer, Mrs. W. F. Burton; on a place of next meeting—Mrs. W. G. Rudd and Mrs. O. P. Shelton; and on resolutions—Mrs. C. W. Gerringer and Mrs. H. R. Clem.

The secretary was then asked to read the minutes of previous year. The session then adjourned until the afternoon session.

In the beginning of this session the meeting was favored with a solo by Rev. H. C. Crutchfield, and Mrs. H. R. Clem conducted the devotional exercises.

Miss Margaret Morey made a real live and interesting address on "Our Mountain Mission."

Mrs. Clem followed this with a discussion on the Young People's Work and the need of a leader in this work in our district.

A few remarks were made by Mrs. W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, in regard to the buildings needed in the mountains for ministers and teachers.

The committee on nominations presented the names of Mrs. M. F. Cook for chairman; Mrs. H. R. Clem for vice-chairman, and Miss Russell McKinney for secretary. This report was then adopted.

The committee on a place for the next meeting suggested that perhaps Apples Chapel Church might like for the rally to be held at their Church next year, so it was decided to confer with this Church before publishing the place of the next meeting.

The committee's report on resolutions was accepted unanimously. The session then adjourned after a prayer by Rev. Crutchfield was given for Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who was sick, and Miss Williams. RUSSELL MCKINNEY, Sec.

FROM THE MOUNTAINS AGAIN.

Is it well with your soul tonight? Is it well with my soul? Is it well with the soul of your son, and daughter? Is it well with my son, my daughter? Is it well with our friends, and loved ones? Is it well with our neighbor? These are questions we might do well to ask ourselves. Again, we, as ministers, should ask ourselves, "Is it well with our people, the people to whom we preach from time to time? Is it well with the world, with whom we come in contact"? And again let us ask ourselves the question, "Are we doing our duty? are we seeking to know the conditions, and doing our best to warn and help the people see their condition and reveal unto them Jesus the hope of the world? Is it well with those above mentioned? Is it"? Some say the world is getting better, but is it truly getting better? To be sure we all agree that there are people that are holding on to God, and many that are true, and tried. But is the world getting spiritually better? And Jesus, when He spoke of the world, spoke not of His people, but the worldly element. And the Bible does say that evil men will grow worse and worse, and that there will be a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. Again ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Then, what are the conditions?

It seems to me it is time for some one to hoist a danger signal, that we may find in what direction we are traveling—whether it is towards God or just the form. God, deliver me from just a form, for a form is just a sham, a pretension, a deception, a false guide, something to fool some one. My life was almost shipwrecked when I was a young man by looking at forms, and I have been afraid of them ever since.

Not are we well located, or situated, but are we saved? Not are our children well dressed, not are they being well educated, not do they stand well in society, not have they good business prospects for the future. All these things are fine, and good in their place, and no one is denying it; but they may have all these things, and then their lives be a miserable failure and their souls be lost in eternal torment.

But the question is, Is it well with their souls? Are they saved? And do their lives show evidence of having been made new creatures in Christ Jesus? These are questions we need to ask ourselves.

IS IT WELL?

I heard, within the last few days, from a very reliable source, of a community, above the average for piety, that very near every young man in it used profane language; that is, swore and took the Lord's name in vain at will. I heard of another community the same report from a reliable source. And this only one of the many sins; to be sure, this is a very big one, although to some it may appear very light. It is big enough to condemn men before God and the judgment, if it is not repented of, forsaken, and brought under the blood of Christ. Many in this class were professing Christians, so it appears to me that the form is in danger of taking the place of the power of God which Paul said was sufficient for salvation unto all that would believe.

IS IT WELL WITH YOUR SOUL?

As I sat tonight and sang the song, "The Haven of Rest," my mind began to go out to the world. And I thought of many that were related to me by blood that did not really know Christ. I thought of the hundreds that I knew that did not realy know the Christ. I thought of the millions of people out in the world tonight that know not the Christ, in the pardon of their sins. When I thought of all these out in the world burdened with sin and distress, many seeking peace and finding it not, because they were not seeking through the right source.

And when I thought of Jesus, who gave His life that they and we might have peace, joy and salvation, I began to ask myself the question, "What are we doing"? What am I doing? What are you doing, my Christian friends? Are we at our best, are our lights trimmed and burning? Are we living testimonies? Are we true to the trust Christ left us? Can men see Jesus through us, and if they followed the Gospel, as lived by us, would it lead to the upward way? Are we, as teachers and ministers, teaching and preaching a gospel of salvation or a gospel of organization and form?

Are we, as ministers, not afraid to preach against the sins of the day, fearing we will lose our salary, our honor, our standing with the people Are we not, in many cases and to a large extent, sitting idly by while the tempter is deceiving our people and leading them astray?

Are we not, as Christian professors, and even many ministers, taking up time with the frivolous things, and at the best the material things of life, while our loved ones, neighbors, friends and the world are being engulfed and swept away by the great onflow of sin and worldliness?

Let us awake, arouse ourselves, for the King's business requires haste and action. As the Shunammite woman hurried towards the man of God seeking help for her child, her instruction to the servant was to drive, go forward, slack not thy riding. You say that the people are not rushing towards God today. Truly so, but they are rushing some place, and as a rule away from God. But they are not finding the things that will bring peace, joy, and happiness. And if they are led to see the folly of their mad onrush, the vanity of their pursuit, they will halt, round-about-face, and turn and seek the things that bring peace, joy, happiness and salvation. What we need is a danger signal; no man seeks a remedy until he finds he is sick.

Often times many appearently healthy people have some very fatal disease, destroying the vitals of life, and they are very unconcerned about it until they realize their condition. Then there is a mad rush for the doctor and all possible medical aid. When the people are awakened to see their condition, then they will become alarmed and seek refuge somewhere. You do not tell me that people want to be lost, be deprived of peace, joy, happiness, here and go down to shame, sorrow, darkness, blackness, lost, and eternal hell. I do not believe that any sane man wants to suffer such loss here and eternal torture in the future. Yet we say they are, and so they are—but why? Largely, at least, because no Christian worker at large is hoisting the danger signal. But you say, are we not doing all that we can? Yes, and no! Plenty of activities, organization and form, but the power is absent—Jesus is too far in the background, and the people cannot see Him.

The disciples toiled all night and caught nothing, but when they let down at the word of Jesus, the net was filled with fishes. Jesus instructed his disciples to tarry, and wait for the Holy Spirit. They tarried, prayed, confessed, forsook their sins, and the power came. When we tarry, confess, forsake our sins, the power will come, and we will be able to go out and win men to Christ. When Jesus is seen in our acts, deeds, our organizations, our service, then we will have results—Christians will be revived and sinners saved.

But I must close, or this writing will be too long. But, once again, Is it well? And what are the conditions? And are we at our best in the Master's service?

We find that Gehazi had one mission—that to carry the staff of the man of God and lay it on the face of the dead child. He fulfilled his mission. The man of God came and the child was restored.

Our mission is to preach the Gospel to a dying people, and tell them of the Christ who died in their place that they might have life here and hereafter. I believe in organization, and all the activities we can use, but when the spirit of Jesus is not seen in its members, and when their service and plans are not directed by the Holy Spirit, they come short of their purpose and they fail to lead to salvation.

Is it well? And what are the conditions? And what are we doing, you and I, Brother Pastor? Are we at our best, or will we stand condemned before God and the people at the judgment because we have not preached and lived as we should? ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Fancy Gap, Va.

DANVILLE, VIRGINIA.

We have great reasons to rejoice at the progress that the Church of Jesus Christ at this place is making. The Sunday School is increasing in interest and number so much so that the brethren have decided to add two more Sunday School rooms. This addition will give us better equipment for the Lord's work. I say the Lord's work, for I am done calling it the work of our Church, for there is but one Church, and that is the Church of Jesus Christ. For Jesus said, "Upon this rock will I build my Church." His Church at Danville is getting hungry for the infilling of the Holy Spirit. The Ladies' Missionary Society is growing. They are endeavoring to have every member of the Church become a member of this department of the Church. The interest in the prayer meeting is growing. They have as many as 65 per cent sometimes. They are having from two to four services a week preparatory to the coming series of meetings, which is to begin the first Sunday in May. Rev. Bro. J. Lee Johnson is to be with us in this meeting. We are praying for a great meeting—a Holy Ghost; a real Pentecost. Pray with and for us.

Our senior deacon, N. D. Jarell, has been seriously ill for more than a month, but is convalescing now and we truly hope and pray that he may soon be fully healed from his affliction.

Sister Shelton has also been seriously ill, but is now improving.

We are now in a great meeting at Mebane, N. C. The celebrated evangelist "Cyclone" Mack is here in full force, with his crew of helpers and a tent with a seating capacity of seven thousand. His sermons are logical and forceful. He is showing the people that without the baptism of the Holy Spirit that we are weaklings. It would just do you good to hear his chorister and choir of about 500 sing "Come and Hear."

Questions and Answers.

Question.—In this day when there are so many denominations, please tell me do they all seem to prosper alike, or do the facts show that the orthodox prosper more than the heterodox?—C.

We think that as a rule the orthodox churches seem to prosper more than the heterodox. For instance, take the city of Boston, where it is understood that most any ism can get a following, the growth of the churches is indicated by the following figures: The Congregationalist denominations have in that city 136 churches: the Baptist, 117; the Methodist, 116; the Protestant Episcopal, 101; the Unitarian, 65; the Universalist, 33; the Presbyterian, 24. Boston is regarded as the stronghold center of liberalism, and yet, with one exception, the churches which are regarded as orthodox seem to have swept away ahead of the liberal bodies. It is not in keeping with the other facts that our Presbyterian brethren should have the smallest number of churches, although it is regarded as an orthodox church. Indeed, we believe it is taking one of the most determined stands for truth and righteousness among them all. We cannot tell why the Presbyterians should stand so low in the scale of the number of churches in Boston.

Question.—Is Mr. Henry Ford, the automobile man, considered a square man in his dealings with his fellowman?—J. C. J.

We know practically nothing of Mr. Ford personally. All we know of him is what is commonly accepted by the public as correct. We do know that it is commonly reported that he pays his men good wages. It is said if a man sweeps the floors in the Ford factory that he pays such a man as much as $5 a day for sweeping. Then, too, the papers are just now telling that not long ago he bought out the Lincoln Motor Company, paying them $8,000,000 for their plant and good will, etc. The manager of the defunct company, it is said, declared that if Mr. Ford had not been a bidder, the whole thing would not have brought over $5,000,000. The $8,000,000, it is said, paid the creditors only forty-seven and a half per cent. on the dollar. This all took place, we are told, a year ago. Last week, or very recently, Mr. Ford mailed checks to 1,000 creditors of the old Lincoln Motor Company, paying them every cent that was due them. Of course, according to law, Mr. Ford was under no obligation to do anything of the kind, and yet he did it of his own accord. Some one desired to know why he did it. Mr. Ford, so far as we know, has given no reason, but the newspaper men, who "nose" into most things of that sort, say that he did it because he wished to "play fair" with his fellowmen. It is said that many of these creditors were Mr. Ford's competitors, and insome cases they were men who had said some very hard things about Mr. Ford. That looks like he not only desired to play fair, but that he was taking the scriptural method of heaping coals of fire on their heads. See Romans 12: 20.

Question—Can you tell me if what is generally known as the drug habit is growing in the United States?—R. H. E.

The reports in the newspapers claim that the drug habit in the United States is alarmingly on the increase. In most of the larger cities of this country smugglers of drugs are making fortunes by selling the drugs, and they do it on the sly, and for no other purpose than to make money. They are practically selling the souls and bodies of their fellowmen for what they can get out of it in the way of money. We are told that at El Paso, Texas (right on the border between the United States and Mexico), there are now one hundred boys and girls who have become addicts to the habit. It is said in this case the selling is done by persons whose aim is to create the drug habit and so bring ruin and untold suffering upon these young people. When once they get a customer, they feel pretty sure of keeping him as such, for the drug habit, once formed, few ever break away from it. If the United States Government cannot break up this business and save our young people, and older ones, too, from this curse, then we think they had better give someone else a job. We know that many of these smugglers are very hard to catch, but caught they should be, and caught they must be, if we are to be saved from that curse.

Question—I hear much said about railroads losing money in recent years. Do you think this is so? If so, why so?—Carl.

You have asked us a hard question. So far as personal knowledge is concerned, we cannot tell you just what is the truth in this matter. We know it is said that the railroad companies are losing money, and if that is true, I presume it is due to the increase in the expenses of these various companies, but a different tale is told in the public press of the country. It is said that in 1922 the Louisville and Nashville Railroad hauled 13,000,000 on an average ride of fifty-two miles for each passenger. It carried 78,000,000 passengers over its rails without a single one being fatally injured in an accident. It transported 49,000,000 tons of freight an average of 201 miles, the equivalent of 9,800,000,000-ton miles. It handled 27,421,000 tons of coal during 1922, the largest amount in any one year in the history of the road. It employed 48,000 persons during the year, and they paid these 48,000 employees approximately the sum of $68,000,000. That looks like they ought to be making money, but not many of us outsiders have any idea of the costs in operating a railroad. We heard the late Major John C. Winder, then of the Seaboard Road, say that after he had spent his life in railroading that he knew but very little about the business. It is no doubt complicated and most difficult to master. Just one proposition would stump the most of us for a lifetime, viz: what ought the railroad to charge for hauling 100 pounds of freight for 500 miles? You see in deciding such a question you must allow for the ordinary expenses, and then some allowance must be made for wear and tear and for wrecks which may occur in doing that hauling. The train carrying this freight might be wrecked and the freight destroyed. Then they must meet their own losses and at the same time prepare to pay the owner of the freight for the damage done him. Looking at it from these two standpoints alone, what would you say the road ought to charge for carrying 100 pounds of freight for 500 miles? We give it up; you may undertake it, if you like.

Question.—Who is considered the most useful man in the United States at this time?—Tarheel.

This is a hard question, for there are very many men who are considered very useful, some more and some less so. We see that Philadelphia has the distinction of having in its population a "penniless millionaire" in the person of Rev. Russell H. Conwell. This is the explanation as we read it in the public press:

A few days ago, the city of Philadelphia awarded the prize of $10,000 and a gold medal for serving best the city during 1922 to a man who is eighty years old. This means that he must have been very active last year at the age of seventy-nine. It was Dr. Russell H. Conwell who received the prize. He is one of the most remarkable men in America. As pastor of Grace Baptist Church and then of Grace Baptist Temple, as head of Temple University (which started with only two men), as a prominent lecturer, as a Christian humanitarian whose benefactions have been enormous, Dr. Conwell fills a large place in American life. He has delivered his most celebrated lecture more than 6,000 times. The proceeds have exceeded $10,000,000. But today he is known as the "penniless millionaire." He has given it all and much more to assist worthy young men to pursuing college courses. He has now no property except his home, which has been mortgaged. He never owned an automobile until a friend gave him a Ford. The value of such a man cannot be calculated in dollars and cents.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, this great personal effort must be rewarded. To compensate for the labor, if premiums are given, will require 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.

An institution, says some one, is the lengthened shadow of a man." If that is true, and in a certain sense we think it is, how many institutions represent the lengthened shadows of your life? Have you put your life in some durable form that will go on doing good indefinitely, or will the influence and fruitfulness of your life end when you die? Think that answer out and tell the truth on yourself. If you will really think it out correctly, you will find it a pretty serious business, but with all it may be profitable.

Our brethren down South are greatly in earnest about the work of Bethlehem College. It is good to see them getting to work so zealously for the establishment of that institution. It will mean great things to the cause of the Christian Church in Georgia and Alabama. Rev. G. D. Hunt, their new financial secretary, is very busy in raising the funds with which to put up their first building. They hope to have it open next September, and we sincerely wish that their highest purposes may be realized. God bless the brethren in their noble efforts. We wish every reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN may be able to give them a helping hand in their great and good work.

A Survey of the Life of Samuel.

It is a great thing to build a noble life. To achieve a godly character is the greatest attainment of man. The life of Samuel presents a picture of such an achievement. Standing before the people, an old, gray-headed man, he can fearlessly say: "I am old * * * and I have walked before you from my youth unto this day. Here I am." No man comes forward with a charge of injustice or oppression in reply to his challenge. His godly wisdom and justice is too well known. He has not given up to the temptation which success and power has been to many a leader. His public record is unblotted. He has not abused the trust of God, nor the confidence of men. In the purity of his own life, Samuel can stand before God's chosen people and call them to rally to their God, to think of His goodness to them, to call them to fear Jehovah and serve Him in truth. A survey of the life of Samuel presents certain elements in his life which bring him to this position of honor and influence.

Samuel's Religious Training.

The story of the life of Samuel shows the power of religious education to mold a character. Dedicated to God before his birth, his earliest days were spent with a praying mother. When Samuel was two years old, he came to the house of God, and lived there with the old priest Eli. His mother still thought of him and brought him an annual gift with her prayers. Eli taught him of Jehovah's goodness and commands, so that the child "grew on, and increased in favor both with Jehovah, and also with men." Who can estimate how much of Samuel's great service can be attributed to that godly mother and that faithful teacher? Through them a great leader of a great nation for a time of need was produced. Religious teaching is still the powerful force which will produce great leaders ruled by Christian ideals. The world is crying for men and women who are filled with the love of God and a desire to see His kingdom triumph. These leaders, these "Samuels" of the coming years are now all about us. "The ages are in their keeping, their training in ours." The Church which still honors the great judge of Israel of old must also honor, and use, the power which helped to make him great—his religious training from the very day of his birth.

Samuel's Answer to God's Call.

Samuel was about twelve or fourteen years old when God's call came to him. It was his priest and teacher who helped him to recognize the Divine voice, and Samuel gladly answered: "Speak, for thy servant heareth." The message from above was given to the lad, and from that day on "Samuel grew and Jehovah was with him * * * and all Israel knew that Samuel was to be a prophet." The lad was ready for the call of the Lord, and in the quiet of the night in the temple he heard. God is calling, but so often His children do not stop to hear. The spirit of the hour of prayer is "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth," for we need to listen for His voice, as well as to pray to Him. Out in His wonderful creations of the out-of-doors, we may exclaim, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth" and receive messages from Him. He is speaking in tasks to be done, in lives to be helped, in children to be taught. The important thing is: Do you hear when He speaks? Are you listening when He calls? The call does not come only to priests or ministers or leaders. The call comes to boys like Samuel, and to their sisters. The great work of the Church is to teach them that they may be ready to hear the call, and to answer with a life of service and devotion and loyalty as did the lad Samuel.

Samuel's Service to Israel.

For many years after he received that call in the night, Samuel was God's spokesman to Israel. "Serve Him only" was the message of his counsel. "Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life," and was the last of the judges, and the first of the prophets. The day came when the people demanded a king, in spite of the warnings of the prophet. When God commanded, Samuel annointed Saul and called the people to support him "whom Jehovah hath chosen," for he declared: "There is none like him among all the people." He advised King Saul, and rebuked him when he disobeyed. When Jehovah rejected Saul, Samuel anointed the shepherd lad, David. In his loyalty to Jehovah and to his nation, the life of Samuel was without blemish. He encouraged them and warned them. His prayers were unceasing for them. Here was one secret of his power. A man of prayer is a man of power. His life was one for public officials to copy. Not an act could be brought against his record. Learned in the things of God from his babyhood, Samuel was fearless, but always reverent; just, yet ever kind; a leader always concerned for his people. He lived his own precepts. He feared Jehovah. He served Him in truth with all his heart. He remembered constantly how great things Jehovah had done for him. As his name signifies "heard of God," Samuel carried through the whole of his life the spirit of the God of Hannah, seeing in Him the source of all that is good and right in life.

"Life of all that lives below!
Let thy spirit in us flow;
Let us all thy life receive,
From thee, in thee, ever live."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

May 6, 1923.

Subject: Lessons From the Psalms. The Prayer Psalm.—Ps. 86:1-77.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

The 86th Psalm is a prayer of supplication and trust by David to God. He feels his weakness and needs of Jehovah, and knows that God is able to strengthen and to help.

David does not say, "I am a king, therefore listen to me, O Jehovah." His plea is based on his needy condition. All men need God. None reach a station in life where they can be safe apart from Him.—Verse 1.

Jesus said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." How do you approach God in your prayers? What is your daily attitude toward your Ruler and your King?

David had been a servant of God, but he felt the need of God continually in his life in order to keep him. Is it possible to remain a Christian without God's keeping power? Are you trusting in Him so much that you constantly feel the need of His presence and guidance?—Vs. 2.

"All the day long." Do we not grow weary too soon in our prayers? We all need God's mercy, for we fall so short of the standard we have set, we neglect so many things that we should do for Him.—Vs. 3.

There is a longing for joy in the hearts of all of us. The psalmist knew the secret of true joy—joy in the Lord—Vs. 4.

"Good—forgiving—kind." These are the attributes which the psalmist assigned to Jehovah. His prayer was to express gratitude as well as petition; adoration as well as need.—Vs. 5.

Trouble often strengthens the life because it leads the individual to God. "As thy day, so shall thy strength be," is God's promise.—Vs. 7.

"All nations shall come." God made all nations, and the psalmist sees all coming to worship and glorify Him. God alone merits all this worship. His children have a part in bringing the world to Him.—Vss. 9, 10.

God teaches His ways through prayer, Communion, Bible reading, and service for Him. The chief concern of the Christian is to find that way, and then to be willing to follow the path, whatever the cost. God will heed the prayer, "Teach me the way."—Vs. 11.

Shakespeare once wrote:

"Let never day nor night unhallowed pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done."

David's attitude was the same.—Vs. 12.

Over and over again, David prays for strength, recognizing God's power to bestow the desire of his heart. In his "Universal Prayer," Pope prayed:

"Teach me to feel another's woe, to hide the fault I see,
That mercy I to others show, that mercy show to me."

Plans for the Meeting.

This is the fifth consecration meeting this year, devoted to a study of lessons from the Psalms. How, many of these psalms do you know? Recite them in the meeting in concert. During May let the Society memorize the 86th Psalm, which means four verses a week.

Open the meeting with the hymn, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," followed by a few moments of silent prayer. Then the Lord's prayer may be prayed in concert. Keep a spirit of worship and prayer as prominent as possible in the meeting.

The Prayer Meeting Committee may lead the meeting as a whole, or the chairman lead, with the members of the committee ready to take definite parts. Have a season of short prayers for the work of the Church, through the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Missionary Societies and other organizations.

Ask the members to come with a Bible verse on prayer to repeat in response to their name at the consecration meeting roll call, or to come ready to answer the question, "What prayer means to me." If the Society is not very large, the roll call may be varied by writing the list of members on the blackboard in front of the Society, and each take part as his name is reached, without the formal calling of the roll.

Urge every person present to take part in prayer, repeating a Bible verse, or in a brief talk. That is the spirit of Christian Endeavor.

Songs for the Meeting: "Open My Eyes that I May See," "Sweet Hour of Prayer," "Pass Me Not," "Trusting Jesus, That is All," "Just as I Am"

A one-hour community "sing" on the campus every evening, under the direction of Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, Va., is going to be one of the special features of the Chautauqua and School of Methods, July 30th to August 5th.

"EVANGELISM OF YOUTH."

"Evangelism of Youth" is the title of a book, written by Albert H. Gage, Director of Religious Education of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago, which should be read by every pastor, Sunday School superintendent and Church worker interested in this vital subject. Of the book, the Judson Press states:

"Mr. Gage bases his chapters on the fact of certain definite periods in youth—seasons of the soul—when responsiveness to the message of religion is as that of seed and bud to springtime. He writes to show the wisdom, and to outline the plan and methods of an evangelism that takes careful account of this law of God. By choice of the narrative form he has heightened the charm and effectiveness of his matter. The book is well adapted to use by study classes. Suggestions for additional reading are provided with each chapter."

The author has presented in this book his own actual experiences of years of successful working of the plans outlined, and as Dr. Stilwell declares, "The whole treatment is shot through with a flaming passion to see the souls of the young folks surrendered and dedicated to the service of their Lord."

The book is suggestive throughout, readable and inspiring. Dr. Gage is also the author of a most helpful book on "How to Conduct a Church Vacation School." Both books are published by the Judson Press, Philadelphia.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH.

By Rev. John M. Allred.

I am glad this afternoon to have the privilege to speak to you in regard to the virgin birth of Jesus Christ as the Son of God. When God saw that man had fallen from his first estate that it would take a great sacrifice, he said: "I will show him My love by giving My Son." Therefore, it became necessary to prepare a way for Him to come into the world.

Brothers and sisters, I want to refer you to some Scripture that will be found as follows, as evidence of the virgin birth: Gen. 3:15; Deut. 18:15; Isaiah 7:14 and 9:6; Ps. 19:1; Matt. 2:2; Luke 2:13, 25:26; 1 Cor. 10:4; St. John 1:14; 1 John 4:2; Num. 2:4, 17; Micah 5, 2:3.

"And this shall be a sign unto you. Ye shall find the baby wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." I wish to base my remarks upon this.—Luke 2:12.

And when the time had come that He should be born, it was necessary to give a sign. Then was fulfilled the prophecy of the 19th Psalm—"The firmament sheweth His handiwork."

When the wise men saw His star in the East and were led to inquire, "Where the King should be born." And it says: "The heavens declare the glory of God. That was fulfilled when the angels brought the good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, saying: "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men."

All this is evidence that He was the Son of God. But we must go further. When the angels were gone away, the shepherds said one to another: "Let us go now and see this which has come to pass." And they went and found it as the angel said. This shall be a sign unto you. Ye shall find the babe.

The star, the angel, and the heavenly host were to lead people to Christ. These all represent the Gospel of Christ that He committed unto men to preach to every creature. To do this, we must have the spirit of Christ and the knowledge of His birth and of His life and death and resurrection. "Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, He is none of His."

When we start off on a road that is new to us and leads to an object we are looking for, we need instruction, that we may know when we have found it. God gave the shepherds a sign. The Babe in the manger. When they had found it they were ready to go tell it to somebody else. So it ought to be with us when we have found the Christ. Go and tell it to others.

Simeon was waiting for the consolation of Israel. He was told by the Spirit to go into the temple and see the Lord's Christ. This was a fulfillment of Job 42:5. "But now mine eye seeth Thee." It is good to hear, but better to know and see for yourself. Simeon saw for himself.

Another Scripture fulfillment—Isa. 42:7: "To open the blind eyes." When Jesus began to preach He opened the eyes of them that were blind, and they did see. Something no other man has ever done.

May the Lord add His blessings to this message.

Do not forget the meeting of the extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention is less than two weeks off. Are you ready and will you be here on time? Have you notified the pastor of the Henderson Christian Church that you are coming? Remember, if you do not notify him that you are coming, he will not provide entertainment for you, as he cannot promise to make provision for such as do not take the time to notify him.

Elon's funds for the new buildings are booming, and that is one way to do the thing. All pulling together and soon we shall have a new building where the old one stood.

REV. W. T. SCOTT HONORED.

From the three contestants of the annual oratorical contest of the Philologian Literary Society here Monday night, William T. Scott, of Greensboro, N. C., a junior in the college here, was chosen as the winner, and will receive the oratorical medal given by the society. J. Dan Barber was adjudged as the second.

Entering this contest were W. B. Terrell, who spoke on the subject, "War Should Cease"; J. Dan Barber, whose oration was entitled "Beside the Castle Gate," and Wm. T. Scott, who spoke on "The Parting Ways."

Professors Kennett and Cotten and Dr. Lawrence acted as judges for the occasion. The selection of Mr. Scott as the winner was unanimous. Lloyd J. Bray presided over the contest as president, and Thomas E. Hanner acted as secretary. W. W. Woody, R. W. Utley, and Milton Wicker served as marshals. This contest was held in the graded school auditorium because the literary society hall was destroyed in the fire here.

IF A JOKE, ON WHOM?

The Watchman-Examiner has been sent a note for the joke column, but the editor calls it pathetic, tragic. Here is the whole story:

"One of our subscribers sends us the following, with the suggestion that we might use it in our 'joke column': 'This is what a good woman wrote to a minister's wife: "I wish you were here to give some hint to our pastor that he needs to get his clothes pressed, and put on a clean collar, and several other things that we can't say out loud. He is a good man, and can preach very good sermons, but—! And his wife is much the same." We publish the item, but not in our 'joke column,' because, as we see it, it is no joke. It is pathetic! It has in it the elements of tragedy! Here is a good man, an able preacher, who is making his people ashamed of him because of his slovenly and untidy appearance; who is discounting his work, handicapping his influence and lessening the appeal and power of the Gospel in the community by habits for which there is no possible excuse or palliation. A minister must first of all be a gentleman, and soiled linen, dirty hands, grimy nails, and spotted and rumpled clothes are not the marks of a gentleman. It may not always be possible for him to be well dressed, but it will always be possible for him to be clean. Soap and water are cheap, and neatness in dress and person will cover a multitude of defects. Cleanliness is not only next to godliness, as John Wesley said, but it is a good recommendation for godliness, particularly when it is characteristic of a minister of the Gospel."

Through Rev.. W. L. Wells, pastor of our Washington Street Church, Portsmouth, Va., we learn of the serious illness of Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, evangelist at large in the Christian Church. He is at his home in Portsmouth. He has been to Baltimore for operation, but the doctors declined to operate, and gave him little encouragement. His only hope now is in the healing power of the Lord, and he asks his brethren to join in prayer for him that he may be healed, if in keeping with God's will. He is now confined to his room and bed. Let the whole brotherhood join in prayer daily for the recovery of this dear brother, who has been so highly useful among us. He is just thirty-two years of age and ought to have many more years of usefulness if it may please God to have it so. Do not forget Bro. Eastes when you pray daily. Thanks to Bro. Wells for this information.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

THE COURAGE YOU PUT IN LIFE.

A writer in the Methodist Recorder, of London says: "On the gates of a chapel in the south of England I saw an unusual announcement when visiting the town not long ago. It was a notice board bearing in big pen-and-ink letters these words: "'Tisn't life that matters; 'tis the courage you bring to it.' The quotation was signed Hugh Walpole. It occurs at the beginning of that writer's book entitled 'Fortitude.' The idea, I gathered, was to provide for passers-by an excellent moral tonic. The circumstance that Walpole went to school in that locality imparted to the quotation peculiar interest." We remember to have seen only once any such striking notice on a church bulletin board, and that was in an Illinois down-State town. And yet these boards afford an excellent means of presenting truth in striking form.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

A CHALLENGE TO THE CHURCH.

At a recent meeting of a group of workers representing the leading Protestant Churches of North America a speaker presented a tabulation showing the extent of the circulation of tracts, pamphlets, and leaflets by the Mormon Church, the Christian Science Church, and the Russellites. She demonstrated that these three organizations, avowedly hostile to evangelical Christianity, circulated more propaganda literature in a year than the thirty-four Protestant Churches of the United States combined. It was stated on what seemed to be good authority that an organization in Russia had shipped four million tracts to America to promote the spread of infidelity and Bolshevism. It was also brought out that the only publications in pamphlet and tract form for free distribution to the blind are issued by the Catholic Church, the Mormon Church, the Russellites, and the Theosophical Society.—Missionary Survey.

MRS. WORTLEY A. KING.

Mrs. Wortley A. King, aged sity-five years, wife of C. C. King, died at her home near Holland Saturday, April 7th, at 12 o'clock, after an illness of several months.

Her funeral was held in the Holland Christian Church, conducted by Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, assisted by Rev. L. F. Paulette and Rev. W. M. Jay. The deceased is survived by six children—C. W. King and Mrs. J. H. Tyler, of Suffolk; Walter King, of Newport News; Mrs. J. H. Barnes, of Boykin; P. P. King and Miss Pearl King, at home. Two sisters—Mrs. George Holland and Mrs. Deborah Holland, of McCrae, Ga., and one brother, C. E. Sumner, of Atlanta, Ga. Mrs. King was a member of the Holland Christian Church.

WILLIAM QUINTON PEELE.

William Quinton Peele, one of the most widely known citizens of Nansemond County, died at his home at Holland early Monday morning. He was seventy years old.

Throughout a long life, Mr. Peele took a conspicuous part in the affairs of his section. For eight years he was a member of the County Board of Supervisors and was a member of the County Democratic Executive Committee at the time of his death. He served one term as Mayor of Holland, refusing to run for re-election last June.

When sixteen years old, Mr. Peele became a member of Holy Neck Christian Church, and took an active part in its affairs. Upon removing to Holland eighteen years ago, he transferred his membership to Holland Christian Church. Besides his wife, Mrs. Judith Peele, he is survived by a sister, Mrs. Missouri Gardner, of Holland.

The funeral was held at Holland Christian Church Thursday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, the Rev. James H. Lightbourne, the pastor, officiating, assisted by the Rev. L. F. Paulette, of Holland Baptist Church; the Rev. W. M. Jay, of Holy Neck Christian Church, and Rev. Dr. N. G. Newman, of the faculty of Elon College.

GRIMSLEY.

Mrs. Margaret Grimsley died at her home, near Ingham, Va., April 9, 1923, aged ninety-two years, six months and fifteen days. She is survived by three sons and two daughters, thirty-nine grandchildren, fifty-six great-grandchildren and two great-great-grandchildren.

Grandmother Grimsley had been a member of East Liberty Christian Church for about fifty years. She was a good old lady. Her funeral was conducted in the Episcopal Church at Ingham, on Wednesday, April 11, by her pastor, R. P. Crumpler, assisted by Elder Frank P. Comer. R. P. C.

RHINEHART.

Franklin Marion Rhinehart died April 11, 1923, aged sixty-two years, one month and three days. Brother Rhinehart was thrown from his horse on April 4th, causing his skull to be fractured, becoming unconscious a short time afterwards, and never fully regained consciousness. He had been a consistent member of New Port Christian Church for about forty-two years. His was a beautiful Christian character, and he was a generous, kind, neighborly man, who was a friend to every one and loved by all. His widow and eight children—four sons and four daughters—survive him. His funeral was conducted by his pastor at the home near New Port, Va., on Saturday, April 14th, and his body was buried in the family burying-ground near Stanley, Va.

May our Heavenly Father comfort the sorrowing loved ones.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

IN MEMORIAM.

J. Rollie Mathews.

Surely God's ways are not men's ways. The minds of men, "seeing through a glass darkly," cannot fathom the workings of an infinite God. Men are prone, from their very weakness in matters spiritual, to regard the events of life from a materialistic viewpoint. Thus it is not easy to realize that—

"In that land of light where no shadows rest,
Life's web complete, our labors ended,
We shall find our lives had not been blest,
Had the shadow ne'er with the sunshine blended."

Truly, these are words of comfort, but how hard, in time of affliction, do we grasp their full meaning.

Whereas, the grim messenger, Death, came to the home of our dear beloved brother and friend, J. Rollie Mathews, on the 24th of February, 1923, and took him to his reward:

Resolved, first, That in the death of Bro. Mathews, we realize that our Bible class has sustained a great loss, one that we deeply deplore.

Resolved, second, That his family has sustained an irreparable loss, the loss of a kind, loving and indulgent father and husband.

Resolved, third, that the community has lost a good and respected citizen, one who fully measured up to all the requirements and responsibilities of good citizenship.

Resolved, fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be spread with the records of the 1910 Bible Class of the Dendron Christian Church; that a copy be sent the Christian Sun, and that a copy be sent to the bereaved family.

The Supreme Court and the Liquor Traffic—

According to the decision handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States, intoxicating liquors, even under seal, cannot lawfully be brought in either American or foreign ships within three miles of the shores of the United States. In its decision, the court asserted the complete supremacy of the American laws within the three-mile limit. The court conceded that other nations had exclusive jurisdiction within their own territorial limits and should their laws so require, American ships visiting such ports would have to place liquor aboard. Under the present law, the court ruled that American ships could carry liquor on board when outside of the three-mile limit, but it pointed out that Congress had the right to pass laws prohibiting the carrying of liquor by American ships when without the territorial waters of foreign countries. Attorney Hayward describes the decision as a 99 per cent victory for the government.

Groundless Fears—

Whatever fear the "pork barrelers" in Congress may have entertained that the action of that body in appropriating $56,589,000 for work on rivers and harbors in defiance of the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget that $27,000,000 was insufficient would be thwarted by action of the President, who bitterly opposed the increase, directing, as he may do, any department not to authorize expenditures in excess of the amount recommended by the Budget Buerau, apparently has turned out to be groundless. Secretary Weeks already has allotted about $40,000,000 of the $56,589,000, and it is intimated that the balance will be distributed later. When the bill was under consideration it was reported that some members of Congress sought to obtain a promise from the President that he would not use his discretionary power in the matter; otherwise, they threatened to filibuster against the entire army appropriation measure, of which this item was but a part, when it came out of conference, and make an extra session certain. That they reasoned well in assuming that the President would not see fit to interfere with the appropriation by executive order, fearing that it would be unwise to take such action, since it might endanger congressional support for projects he considers even more important, is fully established by the announcement of Secretary Weeks' action in making the allotment above indicated and intimating that the balance will be distributed later. —Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Alcohol in Stove Good, in Engine Excellent, in Stomach—?

The effects of alcohol are becoming better understood by the workers of this country, though pulque, mescal, tequila, aguardiente and other forms of booze are still consumed in large quantities by the proletariat—as well as by the comfortable classes.

A recent issue of El Fronte Unico, the daily organ of the Tenants' Union (communist) of this city, carried the following statement in large type: Alcohol—

Consumed in a stove produces heat.

Consumed in an engine produces power.

Consumed in the stomach produces disease and death.

Workers, surely you do not wish to compete with the stove and the machine!

It is reported that the railway workers of Monterey have been instrumental in blocking a move of the saloon-keepers to repeal the law closing such drinking places on Saturday nights and Sundays. The keepers of the cantinas organized a demonstration through the streets to impress the municipal council with the sentiment behind their move. When the shopmen and railway yardmen heard of this they quit work and organized a counter-procession. The two groups met, and there was a battle royal for several minutes, resulting in the rout of the liquor sellers. The railwaymen then marched to the city hall and informed the councilmen that they were opposed to open saloons on Saturday nights and Sundays since the worker would be tempted to waste his wages and lower his effectiveness. The law was not repealed.—By CARL BRANNIN, in American Issue.

Mission Court—

Every Church that is doing work in foreign lands ought to have a home for its missionaries on furlough. On their return to this country they often find the homes of their parents broken up. Other relatives and friends are generally so situated that, much as they would like to have these devoted workers as their guests for a year, it is impossible. What are the missionaries to do? Without houses, without furniture, and with meagre salaries, how are they to provide for their year of "rest"? Various attempts have been made in the past to solve this problem, but always without success, because the method was wrong. It was reserved for the good women of the Church to devise the right plan and carry it out. They saw that what was needed was a rent-free building divided into a number of self-contained apartments, each comfortably furnished and conveniently arranged for housekeeping, where each family could make its own arrangements and live its own life at a minimum cost—a quiet, wholesome place, at some great center of the Church's life, with a pleasant social environment, where the children could have the benefit of the best day schools and Sunday Schools, where the missionary himself could have the assistance of some of the Church's great educational institutions in solving the problems of his own field and in freshening up on current theological thought and methods of work, where he could come into daily contact with large bodies of young men and young women who are preparing to work in foreign fields, and from which he could go easily as occasion demanded to visit and address the Churches.—Presbyterian Standard.

The Value of Education—

GEORGE WASHINGTON: "Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened."

THOMAS JEFFERSON: "If a nation expects to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be."

JOHN JAY: "I consider knowledge to be the soul of the republic; and as the weak and the wicked are generally in alliance, as much care should be taken to diminish the number of the former as of the latter."

JOHN ADAMS: "Laws for the liberal education of youth * * * are so extremely wise and useful that, to a humane and generous mind, no expense for this purpose would be thought extravagant."

JAMES MADISON: "Knowledge will forever govern ignorance; and a people who mean to be their governors must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives."

HORACE MANN: "The common school is the greatest discovery ever made by man. Other social organizations are curative and remedial; this is a preventive and an antidote. They come to heal diseases and wounds; this, to make the physical and moral frame invulnerable to them."

DANIEL WEBSTER: "On the diffusion of education among the people rests the preservation and perpetuation of our free institutions."

HERBERT HOOVER: "The nation as a whole has the obligation of such measures toward its children, as a whole, as will yield to them an equal opportunity at their start in life."

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES: "The American ideal is the ideal of equal educational opportunity, not merely for the purpose of enabling one to know how to earn a living and to fit into an economic status more or less fixed, but of giving play to talent and aspiration and to development of mental and spiritual power."

H. A. L. FISHER: "That nation which employs the best teachers with the highest pay and as a part of the best school system will be the best governed and therefore the greatest nation."

H. G. WELLS: "The teacher—whether mother, priest, or schoolmaster—is the real maker of history; rulers, statesmen, and soldiers do but work out the possibilities of co-operation or conflict the teacher creates."—Journal of the National Education Association.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Bro. J. Bird Ellington has just taken a position with Swift & Co. His work headquarters is Henderson. They are doing a big business in this part of the country. We wish him great success.

His many friends will be glad to hear that Dr. W. S. Long has so far recovered from his recent illness that he is expecting to be at the Southern Convention at Henderson, N. C., this week. That is good news, indeed!

"Captain Jack Blackley reported at last night's service here that the congregation at Liberty yesterday (April 22) was large, and the sermon by Dr. Barrett was a powerful one—good"!—D. A. Long, Franklinton, N. C.

Rev. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary of the General Convention of the Christian Church, and Rev. Omer S. Thomas, D. D., of the Home Mission Board of the same body, are attending the Southern Christian Convention this week in Henderson, N. C.

Paul said that he gloried in infirmities. Did you ever do such a thing? If not, why not? And if you have done that sort of a thing, why did you do it? Paul had a reason. Find out from his writings what his reason was, and then see if your reason is in harmony with his.

The many friends of Mrs. W. A. Newman, of the Henderson Church, will be glad to know that she is convalescent after a long and tedious illness. When in health she was one of the most regular attendants on the Sunday services of her Church. We wish she may be speedily restored to good health.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., delivered the address before the school at Drewry, in Warren County, N. C., last Friday night. Prof. Herbert Scholz is the principal of this school, and his wise management and good teaching, together with his associates, has given that school a fine name in this country, and it is going on to yet better things.

Bro. W. C. Whitaker, of the Liberty (Vance) Church, was painfully injured a few days ago by a fall of fifteen feet. Five ribs were broken and his arm and shoulder badly injured. He is doing well, however, and as we believe, on the way to an early recovery. Mrs. Whitaker is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Z. Atkinson, of Wake County, N. C. She is a niece of Rev. J. Lee Johnson, of Fuquay Springs.

We have the following good word from Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., Portsmouth, Va.: "We closed a very good meeting Sunday night, April 22. We are now in the midst of tearing up and moving into our new parsonage." That is fine. Just think of it—in six months after taking charge of that new field, a good meeting held and a new parsonage built and moving in! Well, that must mean better days for the Elm Street Church, Portsmouth, Va. Dr. Harward says he and Mrs. Harward are coming to the Convention.

"I have just seen what The Christian Sun said about James O'Kelly's burial place. It was in October, 1854, and I am the only minister living who was present and helped to place the stone. It was put there by the ministers. Will explain it all to the Convention. We are getting on well on the new buildings for Elon College. We are hoping they will be all ready for the opening next fall. Things look very different with a building going up some 200 feet right in front of the old building, and two more commenced."—Rev. J. W. Wellons, Elon College, N. C., in a letter to Dr. D. A. Long.

Miss Irene Barrett, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Barrett, of Isle of Wight County, Va., was terribly burned about April 1. She was a niece of the editor of this paper. For several days her physician and loved ones had great hope of her early recovery, but on Sunday, April 22, she passed away. She was in the beginning of a beautiful womanhood and had many friends. She was burned in passing too near a hot stove, and of course her suffering was terrible. She was a sister of Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett, of Defiance College, Ohio. To sorrowing father and mother and brothers and sisters and her many friends, we tender deepest sympathy. God bless the memory of this dear young woman.

Our brother, Mr. G. Sano, writing from New York on March 20, says: "On suggestion of Dr. A. D. Woodworth, through the consent of Mr. Minton, I was to leave for Japan next September, going through Europe. The main object was to visit the Holy Land. I anticipated going through the South to visit you, but now my plan is completely upset by the request of the Japan Mission that I should sail as soon as possible for Japan in order to attend the annual conference of the Japanese Christian Churches in the spring. So I am now almost ready to sail for my native country." This was in a letter to Dr. D. A. Long. Our Brother Sano is perhaps in Japan and at work ere this. We wish him great success in doing the Lord's work among his own people. We wish he may be of great service to our Japan Mission. He is well qualified so far as learning is concerned.

BIBLE INSTRUCTION ABOUT HADES.

Dear Editor:—Will you allow me a space in your paper? There are so many who do not believe in a hell. We just want to show what the Bible says about it. We want to notice that hell is a place of confinement or a place of torment. Psa. 9:17. "The wicked shall be turned into hell and all the nations that forget God." So we see that it is a place where the lost spirits go, a place of confinement. We want to notice the prophet Ezekiel in speaking of the great wicked warriors that had been slain in battle. "The strong amidst the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell." In this instance the prophet said that they would be able to talk in hell. Psa. 55:15. "Let death seize upon them and let them go down quickly into hell." So we see that hell is a place of woe, misery and agony. It is a place of no comfort. Some say that hell is the grave. Isaiah 5:14. "Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure to receive wicked spirits." So broad is the road that leads to destruction. So we need to look at the Bible instructions. Isa. 57:20. "But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. Verse 21, "There is no peace saith my God to the wicked." So we see that the wicked spirits must be confined in hell. We find many people who say that God is too good to put men in hell. Dear people we put ourselves there by false faith, by not taking the Word of God in on condition of repentance and be converted and be baptized in the spirit through Christ's blood. So we see those lost spirits are not in favor with God. Rom. 3:16-18. "Destruction and misery are in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known. There is no fear of God before their eyes." We see by reading God's Word and studying it. Prov.15:8. "The sacrifices of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord." Dear readers, let us be governed by the word of God. We see in Prov. 14:12, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man that the ways thereof are the ways of death." Now let us read Luke 16:23 up to the 16th verse. "And in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father have mercy upon me and send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in these flames. But Abraham said, Son remember that thou in thy life time received thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things, but now he is comforted and thou art tormented; and besides all this between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that they which would pass from us to you can not, neither can they pass to us that would come from thence to us." So let us rely upon the word of God. Matt. 10:28, "And fear not them which kill the body but who are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him which is able to destroy both body and soul in hell." Now dear readers, let us notice God's prophets. See what they and the apostles say about hell and torments of the wicked spirits not being prepared for the kingdom of God. We see the conditions of Rev. 20:12-15. "And I saw the dead, small and great stand before God, and the books were opened and another book was opened which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of the things which were written in the books, according to their works and the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works, and death and hell were cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death; and whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." Isaiah 57:9. "And didst debase thyself even unto hell." Let us read the word. 2 Peter 2:9. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation; and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." Matt. 25:41. "Then shall he say to them on the left hand, depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. So we see dear readers that there is a hell. Isa. 14:9. Hell is from beneath. We cannot deny His word. Rev. 21:8, "But the fearful and unbelieving and the abominable, and murderers and whoremongers and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone which is the second death." I want to say to all unbelieving people, "You must be born of the spirit." John 3:3, "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." So my dear reader, if you are lost and a sinner, listen to 2 Peter 4:18, "And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear." Do not listen to the devil any longer, but come to Christ and be saved. Now my dear reader, you see by the word of God, there is a hell of punishment to consume or confine through all eternity. There is never any end to the misery, and woe, and agony and death of darkness. So let us warn people to shun this place of woe. Let us give God our life, soul and body to do His will and make our peace, calling and election sure for heaven. This is my request to one and all. Jesus is a refuge for us, is my testimony day by day. He is my guide, my teacher.

Henderson, N. C.

THE CHURCH IS ONE OF THE INSTRUMENTS CHRIST USES TO SAVE THE WORLD.

THEN LET US KEEP ITS TEACHINGS TRUE TO THE BIBLE.

Reforms often have a hard road to travel, especially if the reform is in behalf of vital piety and true godliness. This is but natural as people do not like to give up what they have, till assured of something which is better. Sometimes it is not a reform of truth that clamors so vigorously for recognition. Because of this fact there are many persons whose sympathies are easily stirred in behalf of the new idea. This seems natural also, and yet it may be very dangerous to the progress of truth and righteousness. When such a clamor is raised in behalf of some erroneous teaching, it at once becomes a matter of grave concern to the men and women who really love the truth and do all they can for its advancement among men.

Some thirty or forty years ago a few men and women began to lay much stress on a certain phase of the gospel as of great importance, and from that day till this it has well nigh become a "hobby" on which they ride by day and by night, as they have opportunity to do so, till today many have joined in the clamor for its recognition. It may be too early as yet to determine whether the clamor has been for the betterment of the Church and the life of the common people. It may not yet have had the time that is really necessary to determine whether it is wise and Biblical or not. But one thing, as we truly believe, it is not too early to give some estimate of its character and work, so far as these have been shown as the outgrowth of its own fruitage. If this can be wisely done, it may in some large measure help us to determine if its promise is in the direction of the true prosperity of the Church and the uplift of humanity. Certainly the most radical of its advocates will admit that in the, say thirty, years it has been running its race, its fruit ought to begin to indicate something of what it will do for the Church, as Christ's agency through which He expects to give the truth of His Gospel to a lost world, and for its salvation.

We refer to the introduction of the Social Gospel, as having taken place some thirty years ago. Of course it had been introduced in some parts of Christendom long before that, but it was not general—it was till that time rather confined to certain parts of Christendom. It was about that time that it seemed to reach the masses and it is because of that fact that we count it as dating from near that period. Now if the cult, as thus brought forward, has in it real merit for the spread of the Gospel and the building up of the Church of Christ, within the time named it ought at least to be beginning to show something of the fruit it will bear in the cause of the Church of Christ.

What has it done so far? Is the cause of Christ showing more real vigor since the introduction of the idea of the Social Gospel? In answering such a proposition, facts ought to be allowed to tell the tale of the work which has been accomplished, whether it be good or bad—if it tends to build up or to tear down. If it is really building up the true piety and spiritual vigor of the Church, or is it doing the opposite for the Church?

Let us think. Let us lay down all prejudice, both for and against, as far as possible, and then get down to real business as to the truth of the situation. Has the Church been made more virile, more vigorous and aggressive in the great work of saving the world through Christ? Has its leaders become more truly spiritual since the introduction of this idea of the Social Gospel? Has the atmosphere of Christianity become purer and sweeter and richer in grace, under the Social Gospel idea.

In answering this question, let us see what the facts say. Let us call a witness. If we mistake not, the first witness we mean to call, is himself a modernist. We refer to Prof. W. H. Athern. He says:

"We are fast drifting into a cultured paganism, and, unless the Church takes important steps to stem the present tide of indifference, luxury and commercial greed, this country will soon cease to be a Christian nation, if indeed a country in which three-fourths of its citizens are without active church relations, can be said to be a Christian country."

Well, beloved, how do you like that testimony? The witness certainly ought to be acceptable to the modernists of our day, many of whom have been so sympathetic and so persistently industrious in promoting the modern idea of the Social Gospel. If Prof. Athern is to be credited with ability and opportunity to know what he is talking about, then the testimony of our witness speaks almost in thunder tones against the fruitage of the Social Gospel through the first thirty or forty years of its influence among the masses. Well, now let us be fair. Ought the Social Gospel to have accomplished much in thirty or forty years? Other reforms have accomplished great things in that length of time. Take the movement for prohibition. How long was it under way before its good fruits began to show for themselves? Prohibition had been talked for many years, it is true, but it did not get under way for real aggressive work so far back as that. The W. C. T. U. and the Anti-Saloon League made about the real beginning of aggressive work for prohibition, and long before these organizations had been before the public, so long as has this movement for the introduction and adoption of the Social Gospel as a special cult in Christianity, they brought forth great fruits for righteousness. No further proof is needed along this line because the history of these movements bears testimony of a most positive character and they cannot be disputed by truth. Now, if the cause of prohibition shows good fruits in so short a time, why should not the good fruits of the Social Gospel movement be showing in a period somewhat similar?

Take the reform for the abolition of slavery, and it had fought its battle and gained a glorious victory in even less time than has already been given to the Social Gospel. Slavery was abolished in less than fifty years after the reform got well under way. Now, what has the reform for the Social Gospel accomplished? Well, go back and ask Prof. Athern to tell us, if what he is quoted as saying above is true? If it is, then the reform for the introduction and establishment of the Social Gospel ought to be showing up much better than Prof. Athern says the Church is, under the influence and power of the Social Gospel. These seem to be the facts. Now, face them and tell us what is the promise of the present outlook as to the harvest of the Social Gospel in the Church?

Well, we have another witness. Rev. R. L. Russell, D. D., Secretary of Home Missions for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, after saying that his Church has the greatest missionary opportunity in this country, he faces the other side of this picture, as when he says:

"We are sleeping on our rights and privileges. Think of it! Three hundred of our pastors reported not one addition on profession of faith last year. More than one thousand congregations did not even attempt an evangelistic campaign during 1922." (Italics are his.)

That is testimony which must count, since his position as Home Mission Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, gives him a fine opportunity to speak the truth. Now, if the picture Dr. Russell gives of conditions in the Methodist Church is true, and we have no reason to dispute it at all, then this condition seems to have come about in the Methodist Church under the influence of the Social Gospel, for that Social Gospel idea has been agitated not a little in the Methodist Church in the last few years. Then the work of that Church seems to have been losing, rather than gaining, during the time that this cult has been prominent in that Church. Think of what it must mean for one denomination to have gone back so far as not to have a revival in the charges of three hundred pastors, not even one addition, on confession of faith, in a whole year. Then think of the one thousand congregations in the Methodist Church which did not have, or even attempt to have, an evangelistic campaign in a whole year. It is shocking, it is awful to contemplate. Of course, we do not pretend to say how far the Social Gospel has brought about this condition, but we do pretend to say this condition has come about during the time that this Social Gospel idea has been agitated among the people. That being true, the fact stands out quite clearly that the introduction of this Social Gospel idea among our Churches has not at least done them any good, since the more it has been preached, the worse has become the spiritual conditions of at least one of the largest denominations in the land, and the thing that makes it speak worse for this Social Gospel is that these conditions are in not only the largest denomination in the land, but withal, the most truly spiritual body among the larger denominations of our country, at least that is the general understanding.

Other reforms have been productive of much good fruit in less time than this idea of the Social Gospel has had among us. If it is to work such wonders among the people, why this failure as herein shown? Study the testimony of the two witnesses I have quoted and then say what you think of the situation.

THE TWO-FOLD NATURE OF SIN.

The Apostle John in his First Epistle (1:8, 9,) uses the term sin and sins. Is there significance in the singular in one case and the plural in the other? In the verses just cited we read as follows:

"If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."—1 John 1:8.

In that case John uses the word sin, but in the ninth verse he uses the word sins, thus:

"If we confess our sins He is just and faithful to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse from all unrighteousness."—1 John 1:9.

Now what is the difference between the use of the singular and the plural. John must have made a difference, or he would have used only one form. Is there any difference in the meaning of the two terms? We believe there is, and if so, it is important that we know what that difference is.

Jesus in John 8:21, 24, speaks of peeople dying in their sin, and then in the twenty-fourth verse of the chapter, He speaks of people dying in their sins. Is there any difference between these two statements? If there be no difference between the two, in other words, if He meant the same thing in each case, why did he not use the same form in each case? Jesus had no occasion to misuse language for He understood well the significance of each term. Indeed in our Authorized Version, the English uses the plural in both instances, but the Greek does not so use both forms. In the first Jesus used sin, and in the second, He used the plural. Again, we ask, Why so? We believe there is a reason why He did vary the form.

We believe the singular form has reference to the sinful condition of the human heart—the state of sin in which the unsaved live. When He used the plural form we believe He meant the actual sins of the individual, as he committed them daily. Evidently a state of sin is one thing, and most surely personal acts of sin is quite another. So John and Jesus are both careful in using the two forms. This seems to strengthen the claim that He meant two things and not merely one, when he used the singular form in one case and the plural in the other. Now if in verse 21 of John 8, Jesus meant one thing and then in verse 24 of the same chapter, He meant another thing entirely, it is certain that it is important for us, as disciples, to know just what He meant in each verse and the difference between the two.

Let me illustrate the difference in a familiar way. Suppose I own a ten acre lot. One day I conclude that I will cultivate that lot, but when I go out to begin work, I find there are many bushes in the way of the growth of a crop. What do I do? I take my axe and cut them down and plant my seeds. In a few weeks they come up, but in a few days they are hidden from view by bushes that have come up in their midst. But I cut down the bushes before I planted the seed. That may be all true, but when you cut down the bushes, you left the roots from which the bushes sprang, and so the roots have sprouted anew and your ground is again unfit to bring forth a crop. What can I do? If I cut them down, in a few days they will again spring forth anew and we shall have the same trouble with them again. But what can I do to save my crop from this growth of bushes? Why, clearly there is but one thing to do, and that is to take a little more time, and instead of cutting down the bushes, dig the roots up, and then the bushes will not come back, and your crop may grow unhampered, so far as these bushes are concerned. It seems quite clear, as we view it, that the roots represent the sinful state of the heart from which new sins are all the while springing up in one's life, while the bushes which were cut down, only to have them quickly return may fitly represent one's personal sins, the separate acts of sin which may come into one's life. There is a state of sin in which men are cast. Then there are personal sins which are the the outgrowth of personal transgression. You see the relation of the one to the other is much the same as the sprouts which spring up from the roots which are living in the ground. The roots represent the condition of the human heart, while the sprouts represent the personal acts of sin in the individual believer.

As confirming this view, I quote from The Devotional Commentary, as follows:

"And then last of all, let us not fail to notice that it is not merely from "sins"—that is, from separate and individual transgressions—that the blood of Christ cleanses us, but it is from "all sins"—that is, from the root and principle of all sin within the heart. This expressive and impressive use of the singular noun, "sin", is not accidental, for St. John uses both the plural and the singular in this Epistle, but in each case each word with its own special shade of meaning." See 1 John 1:9; 2:2, 12; IV 10, for the pural and then turn to the same Epistle 1:7; and III:8 for the singular." "This cleansing of the blood of Christ is so radical and complete that it extends far beyond the removal of the stains of any particular trangression; it reaches down to the root of all transgression in a sinful heart, and it purifies and sanctifies that heart. It is a blessed thing to be assured of the merciful forgiveneess of our God for all sins, but it is not less blessed to know that when God forgives He cleanses as well, and that in the blood of Christ we have the one and never failing power that by the Spirit of all grace creates a clean heart."

If this view be not correct, then what is meant when we sing: "Be of sin the double cure"?

A VERY POOR SOURCE OF COMFORT.

It is all right to tell the truth and so shame the devil, if possible, but when you come to offer us comfort, please do bring us something that is comforting. Even poor Lazarus got some comfort from the dogs licking his sores, and we do not despise the comfort that a poor dog could give, but we cannot accept the comfort which our beloved brother, Rev. Dr. T. N. Ivey offers us in a recent issue of The Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., in regard to a decline in Church attendance, which is especially noticeable throughout some portions of the country and possibly in all parts of the country, just now.

Dr. Ivey seeks to comfort his readers by a comparison between the attendance of the members of lodges and the attendance in churches. No doubt, we think, that his intentions were good, but we surely do feel that he failed to bring comfort to the thinking man. For instance, he tells of a lodge having 700 members, and on an occasion when it was visited for the purpose of ascertaining how many were in attendance, he found 35. Then he got the attendance of a church having 1,200 members and there were 445 present and he thinks the comparison between the church and the lodge shows up well for the church. Suppose that he is right as to that, but where is the comfort in a church having 1200 members, with only 445 present in the public worship, and then no doubt many of the 445 were not members, but visitors in the congregation. That might take down the number of members much. He also got comfort for ourselves in our church life when in fact there is no comfort. Think of a church of 1200 members having at the Sunday morning service 445 people and at night only 206. We do not see the comfort, but of course, if Dr. Ivey can get comfort out the facts he gave, we suppose he is entitled to it. Let our readers remember the difference between the standards of the Lodge and of the church. The standard of the church being so much higher than the lodge, the attendance ought to be at least two-thirds of the entire membership. If not, will some one tell us why it should not be so?

SHORT TALKS ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE

EXODUS, THE BOOK OF THE DEPARTURE.

Exodus, the name of the second book of the Bible, was given as expressive of the fact that Israel went out from Egypt under the protecting power of God. The word Exodus means departure. As the word is applied to the second book of the Bible, it means the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, bound for the Promised Land. Moses again and again sought to lead them out, but the king (Pharaoh) would not allow them to go. Of course, Moses could not force the king to consent to their going, but Moses had enough sense and grace to look to God for deliverance. Even when the Lord undertook to delivered them, it took ten plagues, each in succession growing more terrible to drive Pharaoh to yield. When the last of the ten plagues was given in which all the first born of the Egyptians were killed, then the king yielded. This event was so momentous it has been perpetuated by the Passover among the Jews till this day. It is known as the Feast of the Passover, because on that awful night when the first born in every Egyptian home was destroyed, in every Israelitish home where the blood was found sprinkled on the door posts, God's angel passed over without destroying a single soul. The passover signified three things specially: 1. God passed over the blood sprinkled houses; 2. He caused the passover to be set apart to Himself; 3. He made Israel in their escape from the cruel bondage of Egypt to pass over the Red Sea.

God sent ten plagues as judgments on Pharaoh for his refusing to let Israel go. The first and second of these plagues were against the River Nile which was one of the idols of the Egyptians. The third plague was against the earth-god, Seb, and the priests who could not officiate with lice upon them. The fourth and eighth were against Shu, the Atmosphere, son of Ra, the sun-god. It was against these that the ninth plague was directed. The fifth plague was against Apis, the Sacred Bull. The sixth plague was against Sutech or Typhon, the ashes of whose victims were flung to the winds. The seventh plague was against the Sacred Beetle, Scarabbaeus. The tenth and last of the plagues was sent against all the idol gods at once and the nation which had decreed the wholesale destruction of the Hebrew children.

Some one has said that the Passover is a pictorial parable of Sin and Salvation. There were five well developed features in the Passover:

1. Divine Judgement.
2. A life for a life.
3. Blood was put on the side and upper door posts, but not on the threshold, where it might be trodden under foot. See Heb. 10:29.
4. God passing over His people, wherever He saw the blood on the door posts as He had commanded. 5. Consecration of all first born, both of man, of beasts and of first fruits. Henceforth Redemption by blood and Peculiar Relation to the Redeemer become the keys to the whole Word of God. For the future the Pillar of God's Presence will lead the way for them in their journey to the Land of Promise. He pitched His Tabernacle among His people and makes Himself known to them by His name Jah, which means: "I am that I am"; or "I am He who am forever". See Heb. 13:8; John 8:58. The law was engraven on stone to indicate its perpetual authority and force.

On the human side Moses is the central person of this stirring narrative. His life is divided into three periods, each of forty years. 1. From his birth to his flight into Midian. 2. From his flight to the Exodus. 3. From the Exodus to his death.

Moses' first effort to deliver Israel failed because he depended on his own power. Later he succeeded in the power of the Spirit. Moses is considered a type of Christ, in the perils of his infancy, his voluntary surrender of royalty, his training in solitude and his leadership of his people, taking them out of captivity.

The book is divided into three sections:

1. From chapter I to XII shows Israel in Egypt.
2. From chapter XIII to XVIII from Egypt to Sinai.
3. From XIX to XL at Sinai where the law was given.

Here are some very interesting points showing us how Exodus is related to Christianity:

1. The Passover rite and the establishment of the covenant as shown in Exod. 24:3-8, are found most closely connected also with the Lord's Supper and the establishment of a New Covenant.

2. In the permanent dwelling of God in the midst of His people in the pillar of fire and in the Tabernacle, there is typified His dwelling among mankind in Christ Jesus. (Jno. 1:14.) The indwelling of the Holy Ghost in the Christian Congregation (1 Pet. 2:5 and Eph. 4:12) and also in the individual Christian. I Cor.. 3:16; 6:19; 2 Cor. 6:16; Jno. 14:23.

3. The Apostle John must have been acquainted with Exodus, as a book, and for that reason that he uses many rich thoughts which seem in part at least to have been suggested by the exodus out of Egypt. Unique thoughts in reference to the Old Testament are found in the conceptions that the law was given through angels. See Acts 7:53; Gal. 3:19; Heb. 2:2.

4. It seems quite clear that the rock mentioned in Exod. 17:6, was Christ. 1 Cor. 10:4.

5. From Heb. 9:4 seems to indicate that there was some connection between the altar of incense and the Holy of Holies.

But I must stop, as the lines of thought which run together in the Scriptures are so many that I cannot possibly give them here.

Let us learn just a few lessons here:

1. The accidents of life may have much to do with shaping our future. The placing of the Israelites in Egypt was a mere accident, and yet how it did shape the national history of Israel.

2. When God wishes us to move, if we are willing to move as he wishes, He will make a way for us to go. When the mighty king, Pharaoh, would not let Israel go, God made a way for that people to move out of the bondage of Egypt into the glorious liberty of the Promised Land.

3. The world, the flesh and the devil may seek to hinder, but when we are working in God's will and way, all difficulties must give way and make room for us that His purposes may be accomplished.

ARE YOU WILLING TO TAKE SECOND PLACE?

By Hilda Richmond.

(In Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.)

Often a man or woman does not know his or her own selfishness, and so they go along having little to say except it be to show their own greatness by not being willing to take the second place.

Hilda Richmond gives a fine lesson along this line, as follows:

Painstakingly, a young lady was practicing a solo for an entertainment, and a friend complimented her on her selection for the evening and also her delightful singing, but added that the invitation to sing did not deserve that much effort, as she had been selected only after several others had been asked and had found it impossible to comply with the request. At this, the singer laughed joyously and declared that it did not make a bit of difference to her whether she was second choice or twentieth, and that for her own sake as well as the sake of the audience she owed it to do her best. She realized that she was a young, almost unknown soloist, and therefore it was but natural that her name should not be mentioned until others and better-known musicians had been asked; but the friend did not see it in that light. She had made it the rule of her life, she said, never, under any consideration, to take second place in any public work, and that her friends, knowing this rule, were careful never to insult her by asking her to substitute for any one, no matter what the emergency.

Have you ever had the opportunity to deal with or live with those unfortunate individuals who are ever afraid their reputations will suffer if they aid in small tasks or accept the second-rate place in Church or social undertakings? Have you ever had to plan everything to suit one person in order to get that person to help at all? If so, you are in a position to appreciate those other sane and sensible souls who will cheerfully take the lowest place and do their best, no matter if they are qualified for the highest position. A young man who was clever at managing entertainments for young folks always decided to a certainty that he was the first person asked before lending a hand with the plan, and the humorous part of the whole thing was that he was ever urging his friends to accept the minor parts for the good of the cause, as he expressed it. That he should ever appear in a minor role never entered his self-satisfied brain.

To some young folks, the term "second choice" is as a red flag to an infuriated animal, an insult, a slight, or a mark of disrespect; while to others it is the incentive to do the best and, if possible, go beyond what may be expected of them. A young baseball player was reluctantly given a place on the team in an emergency, and he scarcely stopped to eat or sleep, so zealous was he to make good for the honor of "our team." A young woman who received twice each year the cast-off clothing of richer relatives always made it her aim to turn and press and contrive so that the garments she wore looked better than in their original state, as the city relatives always said. To her it was a matter of pride that, with her limited resources, she could call forth expressions of praise from those who had had the clothes when they were new and fresh and stamped with the name of a high-priced dressmaker. The sight of the forlorn things to some girls would have been the signal for a flood of tears and self-pity that they had to clothe themselves in things that other people had cast aside, but to her it was the opportunity to work as by the wand of a fairy and produce results that called forth admiration from all.

Can any one get through the world without having to accept second choice? Is it possible to be so highly favored, as the world looks at it, as to be first everywhere? Does it make any one happier to have to be favored and petted and catered to at home, at school, and in the social world? Verily, those who have learned how to take second choice are the happy people. Have you ever seen a spoiled child demand a certain helping at the table and kick and scream until the food is placed before him? That is what first-choice people do everywhere, and certainly they do not add to their own happiness nor to that of their companions by "standing up for their rights," as they term it.

But what shall be said for those delightful individuals who help out in emergencies, who make up the desired number at the dinner party at the eleventh hour, who give up their own ease and plans to help a friend in need, who take the things other people count worthless and transform them into the pleasant and helpful and useful, who offer their services to substitute in Church work, who fit in with good cheer and an honest effort to please when somebody is ill or absent in the business world, who preach and practice the doctrine that feelings should be elastic and not fragile when it comes to making up programs and plans at school, at Church, and in the social life, and who keep the wheels of life well oiled and smoothly running by their happy acceptance of the fact that second choice may be made as enjoyable as first choice if the individual so wills? Were it not for these wholesouled, happy, helpful young people, many Church organizations would go to pieces, and certainly the social world would lose half its charm. The great apostle Paul said, "I know how to abound, and I know how to be abased," and it is ever true that the people who know how to take second place cheerfully and well always know how to adorn the first place when it comes to them.

"NAKED AND YE CLOTHED ME."

How The American Churches Can Help Russia Now.

By Samuel McCrea Cavert, D. D.

The Russian famine is far from over; it is still an appalling calamity.

"A fair estimate of the number of people in Russia who will starve before August, 1923, if not fed by Russian or foreign relief is 8,000,000." So reported, on February 9th, the special commission sent by the National Information Bureau to make an investigation of the famine needs of Russia at the present moment. Last year's famine left the peasants weakened and destitute, depleted their livestock, limited their spring plowing and made adequate crops impossible. A new drought destroyed large portions of even those crops which they were able to plant.

They need food, medicines and equipment for children's homes and hospitals and horses and implements for agricultural reconstruction. But especially do they need clothing. Clothing for men, women and children is needed, particularly warm garments of all kinds. Clothes for children of school age, 6 to 16, are in special demand. Many children are unable to attend school because they have nothing to wear.

The Federal Council of the Churches is therefore issuing an appeal to the churches of America to collect good second-hand clothing which can be shipped to the Russian famine sufferers. Money is still urgently needed but if one hesitates to ask for money he has no ground for hesitation in appealing for second-hand clothes. It is a need which can be met with comparatively slight effort. Every family has clothing which is hanging useless in closets. By sending it to Russia it will serve to clothe those who otherwise will suffer beyond words.

All contributions of clothing should be sent, prepaid, to the Storeroom of the American Friends Service Committee (Quakers), 15th and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia, Pa. This organization has generously agreed to serve as the distributing agent for all clothing contributed by the churches of the Federal Council, and will assume the expense of shipments to, and distribution in, Russia.

Care should be taken to see that the clothing contributed is good for at least six months' wear and that it is clean and well mended. Cotton stockings should not be sent. Shoes are in great demand, but to be useful they must have broad toes and low heels. In addition there is great need for all kinds of uncut material, which can be made into garments by the women of the famine zone, many of whom are sewing for the benefit of the community in return for their relief rations.

"The quantity of clothes which we have to distribute is so appallingly small, and the need for clothing so universal, that the famine of clothes is for many as bitter as the famine of food." So writes an American relief worker from the Russian famine zone. Another worker writes: "Whole villages are thrown into a turmoil of excitement when the news goes out that we have American clothing for them. I do hope that the folks back home will realize how much good warm clothes means to these peasants who must live through such extremely cold winters under such great difficulties as the famine has now brought upon them."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There are many ways to estimate human values. It may be done in terms of character, without which all other values are useless in human affairs. Counterfit coin is worthless. It is the stamp of the government that gives value to money; and paper has the same value as gold when based on gold and bearing the stamp of government. Counterfit money is a hypocrite in the world of finance. A human being who is a deceiver or a cheat is a hypocrite, and there are as many hypocrites in the world as in the Church. People who pose as honest, virtuous, truthful, and are not, are hypocrites as surely as false Church members. Social standing has a human value, and it carries with it social responsibility. All values contain responsibilities. Capacity in any department of human endowments is under obligation to use that talent for society. The musician, the painter, the inventor, the mechanic, the physician—all of them—are indebted to society, and can pay only by the proper use of their gifts. Human society is complex, and individuals are links in an endless human chain. It is the broken chain of progress that checks human progress, for new links must be put in the place of broken links.

After all is said, the common view of possessions expresses itself in terms of money. History contradicts this view. Moses had no property, though he might have been rich; but he emancipated two million slaves and gave the greatest laws to men. Jesus had not where to lay His head, but He laid the foundation of an Institution that saves and civilizes men and nations. Men give value to money and to property. The value of land depends upon the men who dwell upon it. Take the people out of a great city and the property would not have as much value as trees and land in the country. Values increase with the increase in Christian population. The denser such population, the higher values rise. But the lower values do not raise the higher values; the higher values raise the lower values. Money does not increase the value of men, but men increase the value of money. The great possession, after all, is manhood and womanhood. This proposition, examined on the lowest scale, discovers the value of man. The man whose income from investments takes care of the family is considered in good circumstances, while a wage-earner thinks of himself as being poor. Let us see. A man with a net income of $1,000.00 would require $25,000.00 well invested. Yet, it is true that a man who can earn $1,000.00 is himself worth $25,000.00. In the one case the possession is in notes, bonds, or whatever the investment may be; in the other it is in the man. The man who is able to work and earn the $1,000.00 is really the richer of the two. The man who can earn $2,000.00 is worth $50,000.00, because he has the earning capacity of $50,000.00. A man with a salary of $3,000.00 is worth $75,000.00. There are many men rich who think of themselves as poor. They think in terms of property and of money, instead of in terms of men. The men of large means become the creators of business that puts into activity the human energy that would otherwise be idle and without earning capacity; that surplus capital thus helps all. What the nation needs most of all is Christian men whose relationships are not disturbed by the false views of possessions. The capitalist and the wage-earner are laborers together in the great field of human interest. The spirit of Boaz and his reapers is the true spirit. "The Lord be with you," said Boaz; and they answered: "The Lord bless thee."—Matt. 2:4.

ELON LETTER.

I am thinking this morning as I write of the final chapel service in our hallowed old administration building. On Wednesday morning, January 17, I could not get my mind off words spoken of Jesus as He was leaving Jerusalem for Capernaum—"He must needs." And so I spoke on that theme briefly, little thinking what meaning those words, within twenty-four hours, would have for me in the way of tremendous responsibility or for our Church in the necessity for meeting a critical situation in the spirit of heroic sacrifice.

I remember that I referred to President Harding's "liberty under law," and expressive of the highest political ideal he knew. But liberty under law may be a legalized method of perpetuating organized selfishness, of advancing one class at the expense of another, of recognizing certain practices incapable of justification on moral grounds. It depends altogether on what the law is that is to set the bounds of the liberty and as to whether liberty is thought of as a personal or a social matter.

Jesus did not hesitate to modify the law when moral and ethical considerations warranted. Higher than law, in His judgment, was the occasion calling for service, and higher than liberty is His law, and practiced it was the categorical imperative of a brother or sister needing assistance.

He who refused to obey the law as abridging his liberty is an anarchist. Society soon makes an end of his insubordination. He who obeys the law against his will because he fears the consequences is a coward and a slave. He is not free, because perfect freedom casts out fear and is based on loving service. The only true man is he who acts according to moral compulsion. He has to do because he ought!

So it is entirely true that Jesus became entirely free when He decided to go through Samaria because "He must needs." A woman in distress of soul awaited His ministry there, and a whole town's fate hung in the balances. He achieved freedom, and joy too, in meeting his moral obligation.

Not doing what we want to do constitutes us free men and women. Not doing what the law requires or permits makes us possessed of liberty. Only as we do what we ought to do can we be truly free. Such were the thoughts advanced at the final chapel service, with one application or two to the problems and situations of student life and conduct.

And then, the fire! And the testing time for me in the face of a compelling duty, and also the testing time for our people. Our friends have rallied to Elon in her affliction—nobly rallied to her! They are still rallying. I have faith to believe that the advocates of Christian education in our Church will rise to meet the "oughtness" precipitated by Elon's misfortune and that they will say with consecration of life and means and heart in the spirit of our Master, "We must needs put our college in position to serve our Church and the kingdom as she has not been able to do heretofore. We must, and we will"!

Come on, friends, let's go.

W. A. HARPER.

IS THE EMPHASIS MISPLACED?

Both religious and secular journals have been presenting most interesting and encouraging statements recently concerning the large additions to churches during the past year. It should be, and is a matter of deep interest and real inspiration to recieve such information. Men in every department of life have been thinking and speaking in larger terms during the past few years, and led on by larger visions have undertaken larger tasks than ever before. Then we have unprecedented opportunities in wealth, education, facilities for travel and communication, while the world-war greatly enlarged our community of interests. At the introduction of Christianity there was one universal tongue and one great universal empire, and both intellectual and physical conditions seemed most favorable for carrying the gospel to the very finger tips of civilization, and beyond it. Not the same, but in principle, similar conditions obtain today. May the very remarkable and unusual growth in Protestantism during the past year give to the church a yet larger vision, new courage, a quickened faith, and an inspiration to measure up more fully to the opportunities of the times in which we live. I have just turned from a little journey through the Acts, and history of the early church and her marvelous growth. There were, as we know, one hundred and twenty waiting on the promise to those who would "tarry". Peter preached and three thousand were converted, as we learn in Acts 2:41. Then in Acts 2:47 we find that there were daily additions. Then in Acts 4:32 multitudes were added. In Acts 5:14 we find that there were multitudes. In Acts 6:1 we are told that they "multiplied", and in the sixth verse that they "greatly multiplied". Now you would hardly multiply by less than two. Go back to the three thousand and as you follow the growth apply your rule of multiplication, even by two, and the numbers swept into the Kingdom make indeed a very remarkable growth. It is most interesting to study. With such a growth it did not require the grospel very long to overturn the old Empire and to make it nominally Christian. But there was a power at work, so much needed at present with the evangelistic effort to the church—the power of the Holy Spirit. The story of the Spirit in the Acts is the story of power. When the church was told by the Lord to "Tarry at Jerusalem" it was, "until ye be endued with power from on high". Organization has power, but as a means of regeneration for the world it is powerless without the sanction and work of the Holy Spirit. Organization has its place in the church, an important place; human means and agencies are necessary, and are coming more and more into the service of the Kingdom, but we fear that we are placing the greatest emphasis at the wrong place—on organization and material agencies instead of that which only can make such means effective. The Book tells us that, "Five of you shall chase a hundred, and a hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight". That was done, not only in Old Testament times but during the early days of Christianity when the church was directly and consciously under the power of the Spirit. We hear much about Sabbath desecration, and social corruption and impurity. But our social life (God pity it) is a stream of purity as compared with that which existed at the time Christianity was making such wonderful progress. Sabbath desecration at present sometimes looks like the premonition of a mighty cataclysm of judgments to tear down the very framework of our civilization, but taken at its worst it is far ahead of the bull fights—the torturing of innocent Christians by angry bulls in the amphitheater to amuse the Sabbath throng—the gladitorial contests and the like, at the time Christianity began its march across the world of human needs and suffering. We believe in the final triumph of the gospel of Jesus Christ. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil". We need the helmet of salvation to protect the head, which often goes wrong; the breastplate of righteousness to protect the heart, the seat of motive and desire; gospel sandals to protect our going, and the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. With this equipment under the presence and power of the Spirit, the church may hasten the Kingdom.

FIRE AND DEMOCRACY.

There is nothing more pleasant on a cold, winter evening than a crackling log fire in a huge fireplace. How many hearts have been made happy at such a sight! How varied and numerous the stories that have been recounted before such a fire! How varied and numerous the pictures the imagination has created in such a fire! Fire has been, is, and always will be man's best servant. Fire affords man comfort, inspiration and happiness. But at all times fire must be kept under control, or it becomes man's worst enemy. Fire, not under control, has destroyed more property and, therefore, impoverished more people than all the storms, tornadoes, volcanic eruptions and earthquakes combined.

Fire's only equal, both for good and evil, is democracy. So long as these two indispensable things are kept under control, all is well; when they are not beset by non-combustible barriers, or become the means by which the incendiary or the anarchist executes his malicious designs, their destruction cannot be equaled.

Fire is the principle of combustion as manifested in light. There was a time when fire to man was unknown, yet fire has always existed; it was no doubt the means by which the world was created. There was a time when democracy to man was unknown, yet democracy has always existed; when God created the earth, he had already planned a great democracy for His highest created being—man.

Fire, then, was no doubt the means by which God created the earth (study the three great scientific theories as to how the earth was formed), and democracy is one of God's greatest gifts to man.

Of the two, fire has had the greatest usage. Fire has served all nations through many ages; democracy has served only the godly. The ungodly it destroys.

The greatest friend of democracy of whom history speaks was Christ. 'Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets."

This utterance of Christ is sufficient proof that He came to earth not only to save us from eternal hell fire, but to establish on earth the democracy that had been planned by His father at the beginning of creation. Notice the force of "law." "This is the law and the prophets." The law of what? The supreme law of human society; the law spoken of by the prophets; the law that Thomas Jefferson implanted in the hearts of the American people; the law for which thousands have been brutally butchered; an indestructible law—a law which will some day rule the world. The devil will not always be able to debar from man the great federation of the world. The world will be purified by fire, and then democracy will reign.

The fiery eloquence of Christ's ambassadors will consume the selfish ambition of the tyrant and bring out of chaos, yea out of seeming impossibility, a grand and glorious international democracy. The supreme law of human society cannot always be abused. The extremist (the Bolshivik) who uses democracy to execute his damnable designs, will some day be destroyed. He cannot transgress the greatest law of society with impunity. The fire of transgression will consume him. He has already put the torch to the platform upon which he stands. The great international turmoil of today is merely consuming the rottonness of governments. Think of the Israelites that God slew because they would not carry out His plans. Was the government of Israel growing more corrupt during this process of cleansing? Is the world today growing worse? The pessimist would have you believe it is. But he is wrong. The world is not growing worse; it is growing more pure. It is being purged of its dross. The world was not created for impurity. Impurity is as foreign to the earth as iron ore is to diamond. Just as all material filth is oxidized, or, to express it differently, is consumed by the invisible fire of purification, so will all immaterial filth, hatred, envy, avarice, blasphemy, jealousy, adultery, fornication, murder, selfish ambition, theft, falsehood be consumed by the fire of God's wrath.

"And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees; therefore, every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire."

Every tree that does not grow and bear fruit according to the laws of nature must be cut down and burned. There is no room in the world for the unfit.

Listen to the next verse:

"I indeed baptise you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear; He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire."

We mortals baptize with water because we think of water as something that can cleanse us. All very well so far. We can destroy the material filth about us, but the filth of our souls we cannct destroy. We must submit ourselves unto God, for He can baptize us—or, in other words cleanse us—with the Holy Ghost and with fire.

Listen to the next successive verse:

"Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

Science and religion work harmoniously together—one never contradicts the other. It is comforting to know that God's laws are nature's laws, and that nature's laws are God's laws. It is not necessary to graduate in a great theological seminary in order to know God and His laws. Go forth into the hills and forest and study nature. If you will but do this, you will learn five great fundamental facts, namely: that the natural world (which is itself a great democracy) destroys, without mercy, anything that habitually transgresses its laws; that you must attribute the existence of everything in the natural world to God; that the Bible, which teaches us how to live in order that we may inherit eternal life, is the greatest teacher of science known to man; that man must bring into existence a world-wide democracy in order to establish peace on earth; and that the great cleansing power spoken of so often in the Bible and employed by man, is fire.

Fire and democracy! Fire, the emblem of purity, and democracy the result of purity.

TO A POET.

What though sad Dante traced the sin-wrecked soul
Past Stygian flood, and hell-swept region pale,
Forever echoing to the damning wail
Of those forsaken? Or if Milton's roll
Angelic born, kenning no earth control,
Sped to its home in that unchanging vale
From Patmos glimpsed; where Justice dwells, and frail
Earth-born shine adorned in heavenly stole?

Though many seers, bay-crowned, through centuries
May join with Shakespeare in the master sweep
That wrings high plaudit from these hearts of ours;
Still, some sure note else dead within the keys
Awaits thy touch; oh, minstrel dare not keep
The chorus waiting longer for thy powers.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LIFE OF WILLIAM H. BARNES.

Whereas, it pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom to call from the Church militant to the Church triumphant the soul of our faithful brother, Deacon William H. Barnes, in the early morning of March 21, 1923, be it resolved by the Board of Deacons of the Suffolk Christian Church:

First, That we, in faith, humbly bow in submission to the will of Him who is too good to be unkind and too wise to err.

Second, That we emulate the example that has been left us by our brother deacon, in his faithfulness to his work, as a man, as a soldier of his country, and a soldier of the cross. At no time in his life did his country or his Church need and call for help that he did not give a quick and ready response. As a young man, he was a faithful soldier under General Lee, returning home he became one of the honest and faithful men who worked hard to build up the ruined South, and many are the monuments now standing to mark his work as a builder. When this Church, which he loved so well, needed a master builder to erect this building he threw his very soul into the work, and did and saw that it was well done. Even in his evening of life, when the call of his country came, in 1917, for men, he was one of the first to offer his services wherever they could be used. But these things all dwindle when we consider him as a member of our board. He was faithful as long as life lasted, regularly attended her services, and bringing something to each service—a loving heart for her altar. His family life was rich, he was a devoted husband, an indulgent father and a good neighbor. His faith was large and sound. No new ideas of religion troubled him, for his soul was safely anchored in Jesus Christ.

Third, That we extend our deepest sympathy to the family in their bereavement, and commend them to the Father, whom our brother loved so well in life, and point them to the blessed time when we shall all meet in that realm where there shall be no more sorrow and death.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be placed in the Church records, that a copy be sent to the family, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

A PICTURE OF GOD.

There is a proverb which we have said so often that we almost forget how true it is—"First impressions are strongest." How hard it is to wipe out of our minds the first bad impression of a person! However well and highly we think of the person afterwards, the first unpleasant picture of him is apt to slip back into our minds and make us doubt and mistrust him. We know, too, that when age clouds and darkens the mind it is often only the scenes and memories of childhood which remain clear and undimmed. It is, therefore, essential for us teachers to remember that it is the impression of the person of God received in childhood which is the most vital, the most deep and the most lasting. Surely, then, we should first give to the child the perfect picture of God, His beauty, His love, His joy, His tenderness revealed in Jesus Christ.

The aspect of God which attracts the little child and best answers his need is that shown by Jesus of the loving Father and Friend. The very helplessnesss of the little child calls out for a protector and provider. Of the love and care of God, we cannot tell too much. And what a wonderfully tender picture of God we can give the little child by telling of the Father's care for His great family of children—brown and black, and white and yellow. He gives corn and apples to white children, and pineapples and yams to brown ones. Flowers and trees, rain and sunshine He lavishes on all His children alike. He knows Chinese and Indian children need fathers and mothers to look after them, and brothers and sisters with whom to play. There is no better way of picturing God as Father and Friend than by telling of His love and care for boys and girls in every land."

Elsie H. Spriggs, in her fine book entitled, "The Missionary Enterprise in the Sunday School," wrote the above, and it teaches a very vital and vigorous truth. What sort of pictures of God are we hanging up before the minds of our children in their early and tender years? Is it possible to paint or present a proper picture of God to the minds of the children save as we picture Him to be a God who loves with equal intensity and devotion all the children of all the lands? John tells us that God so loved the world that He gave His own Son, and Paul tells us that God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth. Yes, first impressions are strongest. Let us see to it that these first impressions which our children in the Sunday School are receiving are right impressions, particularly their impressions of God. We must carry the missionary message and the missionary facts into our Sunday Schools; that is, teach the children there that God is love, and, therefore, loves all children of all lands and wants them all to know of Him and be saved.

ONE-DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AT DURHAM.

A one-day School of Missions was held with the Durham Church April 17th for the Durham Orange District, with Mrs. W. H. Boone as leader and Mrs. Robert Neville, of Chapel Hill, acting as Secretary. Quite a good delegation from the Chapel Hill and Durham Churches attended, but we were unable to secure a delegation from Mebane, Mt. Zion, Damascus, O'Kelly's Chapel and Martha's Chapel (these Churches are in our district). Will the ladies of the above-named Churches who read The Sun and are interested in missions, begin now to make plans to come to our rally next year? We need you and believe if you will attend one of these inspirational meetings you will feel the need of just the co-operative work we are trying to do. We were grieved, of course, that Dr. Atkinson could not be with us, but felt that it was best he did not come, as the day was cloudy and cold. A sincere prayer went up from this body of Christian women for this good man's speedy restoration to health. The following ministers were present and added much to our service: Revs. Stanley C. Harrell, J. S. Carden and J. B. Howard, and Rev. S. K. Emurian, of Norfolk, made a thrilling talk on Armenia and sang some beautiful songs.

Mr. Alfred Shumate also delighted the audience by one of his lovely solos; he also led the music for our meeting. If our Churches only knew what a wonderful singer Mr. Shumate is and what an addition to evangelistic services he is, we should endeavor to keep him in the Southland.

Miss Morey, of the Elk Spur School, made an address on our mountain work. She felt so encouraged over the work and told how appreciative those good mountain people were of our schools and how the Lord's cause was prospering in that beautiful country, in such a way as to interest and delight her audience.

A delightful luncheon was served at the noon hour. The Willing Workers of the Durham Church, under the leadership of Miss Susie Riddick, presented a charming dramatization of the story of Jonah, which was much enjoyed.

Mrs. McCauley, of Chapel Hill, was elected leader, and Mrs. E. H. Bobbitt, of Durham, Secretary for the 1924 rally, which will meet in Durham Christian Church. W. H. B.

A REJECTED CHRIST.

"The whole city came out to meet Jesus, and whe nthey saw Him they besought Him that He would depart out of their coasts."—Matt. 8:34. Pilot said to them, "Behold your King." "Away with Him; give to us Barabbas." It is 1,800 years since these things took place, but the multitude have not changed their minds yet regarding Christ and His kingly government, "this man shall not rule over us." We are called a Christian nation, but we are not followers of Christ. We know all about religion, except how to get it. To live with Christ will make us Christ-like—that is, Christians. We, as a nation, are far from a Christ life.

In the days of Whitefield and Wesley, the pulpit controlled the nation. It is not so today. The pulpit pulpit of today is making but little impression on the life and character of our nation, because it has not behind it the power and influence of the pew.

They asked Charles Spurgeon the secret of his power and wor kin London. He said: "It is because of the 300 praying members I have in the amen corner of my tabernacle."

We have fine Sabbath Schools, with hundreds of children; fine Christian Endeavor Societies, with thousands of young men and young women. Is Christ with them? Let us visit their homes. Is Jesus around their breakfast table Mondays and Tuesdays? If we have any of Christ in us, it will show at home and in home life. If you find none at the table and the fireplace, the home has none. Let your light so shine that all around the table can see it. In many of our so-called homes we have rejected Christ.—Rev. Jas. Russell, in Presbyterian of the South.

FROM CENTRAL LEE COUNTY PASTORATE.

After about five months in this field we find that there are many encouraging features of the work. The people are kind, sympathetic and helpful. Especially are we encouraged by the interest the young people take in the work. They seem responsive to every call that is made to them for service, and seem happy to be active in the work of the church.

The One Day's School of Missions was held at Shallow Well on Friday, the 13th of April. And it was not an unlucky day, though it was rainy early in the morning and there came a downpour in the afternoon. We regretted very much that Doctor Atkinson could not be with us, and also that Miss Alice Barrett also failed to be there, on account of a belated train. Miss Morey was with us and gave us two very interesting addresses. She impressed her hearers with her earnestness and consecration to the work. We feel that she is doing a great work there.

A special prayer was offered for the speedy and complete recovery of Doctor Atkinson. I find that he is held in great love and esteem by the people of this community.

It was a pleasure to have with us at Shallow Well, 4th Sunday evening, Brother Underwood who served the church twelve years. He brought to us a strong and very much appreciated message. I should be glad to write concerning other phases of the work in the various churches of my charge, but find that this is already too long. We crave the prayers of the brotherhood for the success of the work here.

LIFE'S SLOGAN: "DO IT TO A FINISH."

Our mission in this world is to do. In this expression I am aware that I am taking issue with the commonly accepted idea, that being is the end of life, that the measure of success is determined by what we are. I shall risk the charge of heresy, and declare that doing, and not being, is the true aim and purpose in life. Being is for the sake of doing, it is the means to an end. I am, that I may do, not that I may merely exist. Character is not a mere passive posession, a sort of quiescent state, but is largely the result of our doing. My riches consist of deeds, I own the things I do. Deeds are the only coin current in heaven. "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was hungry, and ye gave me meat". Mere goodness would decay before the throne of God in a state of inactivity. What you are may determine in a sense what you do, but the doing is the end, and being without it is a failure. Friends said of a man who could always be found sitting around the fire, and who never harmed any person in the world, when he died that he went up higher; but if he is doing what he did down here he is sitting around the fire. No life is worthwhile until being is translated into doing.

Young people are often advised "To get knowledge for its own sake; for the pleasure it will afford." Knowledge should never be regarded as an end, or sought for its own sake; it should be acquired for the sake of doing. We are here for deeds, and the only justification for seeking knowledge will be found in the things we do. If we fail to do good we will deserve no praise for what we know. He builds upon the sand who knows and does not. This world has no place for self-seeking in any form, it is filled with drudgery and routine, a place of muscle, brain and heart exertion, but withal a world where noble deeds and heroic actions are grandly possible, and this is the heritage by virtue of knowledge and culture to be acquired.

I will say further that the acquisition of material things is for the sake of doing. How easy it is to make the mistake that we do in order to get, and get in order to have. How natural to think, that the farmer works in order to get more land, the lawyer to get more property, and the doctor to get more money. Will the students of Elon go out from the walls of their alma mater with this idea in mind? Before they came there, they could get three dollars a day for their labor as its pecuniary reward. Did they come in order to increase their earning capacity? Is this why the faculty is laboring so hard in their behalf? Is this why benevolent men have given so freely of their money to sustain this school, and perpetuate its good name, that, they might get five dollars a day instead of three? No; perish the thought! They go forth to work; incidentally they will get, but what they get in turn means work for them, greater work for them, more work for others. They get in order to impart, but they do not labor in order to get, as a good in itself, if they did the purpose of the institution would be frustrated, and the purpose of God thwarted.

We live in a day of organizations. Organization is in the social, political, religious atmosphere we breathe. There is danger of our coming to believe that organization is the "Ultima Thule" of life. If they continue to multiply it may not be long, until every one can be a president. Now do not make a mistake in supposing that organization is a good in itself; that the organizer becomes a public benefactor, entitled to the everlasting gratitude of men and an appropriation besides. But keep this principle in mind, that organization is for the sake of work, and no organization has any right to live, that does not fill a present or future need. In the midst of the multiplicity of organizations, the Christian Church should study the whole problem of organization in order to determine which are rendering substantial service to the Church and encourage them.

On the other hand if organizations are found to exist in our church, supplying no natural demand, meeting no real want, but simply furnishing employment for those who run the machine, in short, if the organization is an end in itself, that organization should die. I take off my hat and make my bow to any person or organization that can do something useful and do it well.

The thought that meets us here is the importance of carrying through to the end our chosen work or whatever task is assigned us; not half done, bungled nor shirked, but completed its execution. The history of the human race is full of the most horrible tragedies caused by carelessness and the inexcusable blunders of those who never formed the habit of accuracy, of thoroughness, of doing things to a finish. Everywhere over this broad earth we see the tragic results of botched work. Wooden legs, armless sleeves, numberless graves, fatherless and motherless homes everywhere speak of somebody's carelessness. The worst crimes are not punishable by law. If everybody put his conscience into his work, did it to a complete finish, it would not only reduce the loss of human life, the mangling and maiming of men and women, but it would give us a higher quality of manhood and womanhood.

We are so constituted that the quality which we put into our life-work affects everything else in our lives, and tends to bring our whole conduct to the same level. The habit of precision and accuracy strengthens the mentality, improves the whole character. Everywhere we see things selling for a song because the maker put no character, or thought into them and everywhere do we see religion cheapened for the same reason. "Made to sell and not for service", would be a good label for the great mass of manufactured articles in our markets today. "Building for time and not for eternity", would be a good label for a large per cent of the activities of the church today. If we put no more time, thought, interest and principle in our daily vocation than we usually do in the work pertaining to the Master's Kingdom, we would be bankrupt and go "over the hill to the poor-house" in less than a year; and the only valid reason why we have not done so in religion, is the unbounded grace of God and the internal power it carries with it to adjust itself to meet all conditions and emergencies. Thoroughness and reliability should characterize our every undertaking. How seldom do we find young men and young women willing to prepare for life-work. A little education is all they want, a little smattering of books, and then they are ready for business. "Can't wait" for a high-school, seminary, college or university education—"haven't time to be thorough".

America is full of half-trained medical students "practicing" on their patients and performing bunglesome operations, because of unwillingness to be thorough in preparation. Half-trained lawyers stumble through their cases, and make their clients pay for experience which the law school should have given. Half-trained clergymen bungle away in the pulpit, and disgust their intelligent parishioners. Education of some sort, and even a pretty good sort, is possible to practically everyone in our land. Failure to get the best education available whether it be in books or otherwise, is sure to relegate one to second rank.

The world does not demand that you be a preacher, physician, lawyer, farmer, or a merchant; but it does demand whatever you do undertake, you will do it right, with all your might and with all the ability you possess. It does demand that you be a master in your line. Graham and Tampion, on finishing any of their timepieces, could say: "There I am willing to stand for that piece of work; it is not pretty well done; it is done as well as I can do it; done to a complete finish. I will stand for that; I am willing to be judged by it".

These men lie in Westminister Abbey today because they put character and accuracy in their work. "Made for eternity" was the stamp which Stradivarius placed on his violins, and not one was ever known to come to pieces or break. No patent was required on his violins, for no violin maker would pay such a price for excellence as he paid. Every "Stradivarius" now in existence is worth from three to ten thousand dollars, or several times its weight in gold.

We should never be satisfied with "fairly good", "pretty good", or "good enough"; it should be our life-rule to give our best to whatever passes through our hands, and then our services will be sought for, when others are unemployed. Emerson said: "If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse-trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the woods, the world will make a path to his door".

The Bible calls for patient continuance in well-doing". The "quitters" are impeding the progress of all religious and material activities. The world and the church always suffer when the workmen quit their jobs, but what will become of the future generations if the beginners of worth-while tasks do not carry their God-given intentions into execution. Visions of beauty, bright hopes, holy thoughts and purposes, high resolves on entering many souls never grow into more than beginnings. The ministerial ranks are still unfilled because not more than one in ten of the vast number who have declared their intentions to the church, to become God's ministers have ever carried their purposes into effect. There is a great shortage in leadership because students stop short of their graduation. Men and Millions forward movement could not do its best work because many who pledged stopped short of the goal. Church treasuries are often empty before the close of the year because the people who pledged do not feel it their religious duty to carry the work through to a finish. No one who has begun to build for Christ should leave an unfinished, abandoned lifework to grieve the heart of the Master.

Perseverance and persistence should characterize every good intention and undertaking. Perseverance built the pyramids of Egypt's plains, erected the gorgeous temple at Jerusalem, scaled the stormy, cloud-capped Alps, leveled the forests of the new world, and reared in its stead a community of states and nations. It has reduced nature in her thousand forms to as many sciences, taught her laws, prophesied her future movements, measured her untrodden spaces, counted her myriad hosts of the worlds, and computed there distances, dimensions, and velocities and has carried the Gospel of the Son of God to the ends of the earth. Doing our work to a finish requires patience to the end. Bulwer says, "Patience is the courage of the conquorer; it is the virtue par excellence, of Man against Destiny, of One against the World, of the Soul against Matter. Therefore, this is the courage of the Gospel; and its importance in a social and religious view—its importance to races and institutions—cannot be too earnestly inculcated".

If everyone would adopt this as their life-motto: "ONLY THE BEST IS GOOD ENOUGH", it would revolutionize the commercial, civil and religious activities of the world. Hang it in your bed-room, in your office or place of business, put it into your pocket-book, weave it into the texture of everything you do, and your life-work will be what every one's should be—A MASTERPIECE.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—What is the advantage of keeping Sunday as a day of rest and worship? Would it not do just as well to keep another day?—Benn.

Maybe I can help you more by illustrating my answer to your question. If you wish to see the advantages of keeping the Sabbath, or our Sunday, go find a home where Sunday is observed carefully and religiously and see what effect it has on the family. See how it shapes the life of the whole family, and especially the children. Then go look for another home in which Sunday is not regarded as a day of rest and worship—where they desecrate it and make all selfish uses of it—and see what influence for evil that has upon the family, and especially upon the children. If you will find two such families and note what influence the way the observance of Sunday has on the family, we think you will get the true answer to your question. I think the observing of another day would not do well, and for two reasons I think it would not do as well:

1. Some other day appointed would have no authority behind it but man's authority, and that would mean but little. The first day of the week has the sanction of God's Word behind it, and that makes it count for much.

2. If some other day were appointed to serve as Sunday, it would turn out that the same day would not suit all; and if one could appoint another day, then soon another would appoint a different day so as to suit him, and then another, and another, and the result would soon be no Sunday at all. At best, you would only have a holiday each week, and then all the blessings of the Sabbath would be lost. When people desecrate Sunday, that act alone tends to harden and to drive the people on to other acts of desecration, till, by and by, we would have not even a holiday. It would soon be a day of carousals and frolics. We cannot afford to give up the Christian's Sunday. It is one of the great moral and spiritual influences that God has given to us for our moral, physical and spiritual development. Disregard it, and we go back into deeper darkness and sin. Sunday is a great bulwark under the blessings of God for the protection of the life of men and women and boys and girls from the ways of the world and the sins of the flesh. A family which keeps Sunday will find it an uplift, but the family which desecrates it to all unholy influences will soon find itself going down the way to ruin.

Question.—What is all this talk about the spirit of Tut Ankh Amen killing Lord Carnarvon because Carnarvon dug up the remains of that ancient king?—Inquirer.

Well, there is such a talk, sure enough, but of course it is all nonsense. It is the outgrowth of superstition, although some would possibly not like to admit that, but as a matter of fact it is nothing else. It is said, so some are claiming, that that old king, or some other king, had pronounced an awful curse upon any one who should in the coming ages disturb his bones, and because Lord Carnarvon died soon after he dug up the remains of this old king, why now they are saying that the spirit of the old king came and killed Carnarvon because he had disturbed his rest. We advise our readers not to believe any such nonsense. The truth of the matter is this: Some time after Carnarvon had dug up the remains of that old king a mosquito bit him. It poisoned the man bitten. Inflamation set in, and soon killed the gentleman, so it was the bite of an insect that killed Lord Carnarvon and not the ghost of the dead king. What a pity, and yet that is just what has happened to many others in modern times—a bite from an insect and death follows. They had not disturbed the grave of any ancient king or any one else, and yet no one thought of saying that the spirit of some dead person had killed these people. It is a fact that some intelligent people are trying to encourage the people to believe such stuff. What a shame! A. Conan Doyle, the well-known writer, who in late years has embraced spiritism, says he thinks possibly this is true—that the ghost of the old king killed Lord Carnarvon for disturbing his rest. That is nothing strange, since Mr. Doyle has accepted spiritism. If it could be shown that the old king's ghost did kill Lord Carnarvon, no doubt Mr. Doyle would claim that it was more proof that the spirits of the dead can and do communicate with the living; but, alas! who believes any such stuff? Lord Carnarvon died from the bite of an insect, and the ghost of Tut Ankh Amen had nothing to do with it whatever. It would be a good thing if the people could have enough sense to listen to no such stuff. Why, the old king, doubtless, never heard of Lord Carnarvon, and of course could have nothing to do with killing him.

Question.—Is there anything in all this talk of "a wave of a dancing craze" sweeping over this country? If so, how do you explain the coming of such a wave?—Christian.

Well, yes, there seems to be something of it, but it is a very poor something. Some foolish woman undertook to dance fifty hours, we believe it was, and did it, and the equally foolish press of the country reported that fact and called it setting a record—yes, a world record! That set some foolish one to the task of wresting that record from this poor foolish woman. Then some one else danced sixty-two hours, and almost before the ink was cold that sent the message out, some other foolish woman had danced sixty-eight hours, and then quickly came the news of another who had danced for eighty-two hours, and the last report that has reached us up till this day (April 21) is that some one else has danced ninety hours and ten minutes. And even before you read this, you may hear that some other poor foolish creature has danced 100 hours. Pity the poor creatures! They call it "a craze," and we think it is rightly named, for we cannot see how any person of real sound mind would undertake to do such a foolhardy thing. It is foolishness gone to seed, and soon you will hear that it has gone to nothing. We say, let it go and go quickly, or some of these foolish ones will dance themselves to death. Pity the poor ignorant creatures who thus waste their strength and time. We hope no Christian man and woman will be guilty of undertaking any such thing. People who are living in darkness may do such things because they do not know any better, but people who are walking in the light of God ought to have no part in any such signs of weakness and darkness. God pity them!

Question.—Is it true you think that Armour & Co. and Morris & Co. have combined their great businesses and made one big company of meat packers?—J. T. B.

Yes, that is the latest news from Chicago in this line. It is said that our Department of Agriculture at Washington seriously objected, but the merger was effected in spite of the opposition of the government. It is said that these two companies have in recent years lost immense sums of money in their business, and it is supposed that they are adopting this plan to stop losing money. The new firm name is to be Armour & Co. The Morris Company's capital stock had been $30,000,000 common, and $10,000,000 preferred outstanding. Now they have only $3,000,000 stock in the company. They (the Morris Company) received $27,500,000, but only $2,500,000 was in cash. The new concern is now considered the largest meat-packing business in the world.

Question.—What is meant by the personality of God? We are told by the preachers that God is a person. I want to know in what sensse He is a person, and in what particulars?

A person is one who hears, sees, knows wills, acts and feels. An idol is a thing. It has not life, knowledge, or will, or feeling. It cannot see, it cannot hear, and is only a thing; but God is a person. He sees, hears, feels, knows, wills, acts and saves people from ruin. God is a person, and hence He is said to have personality.

Question.—What is jealousy—when people are spoken of as jealous?—Tom.

Jealousy is suspicion, based on fear, producing an uneasiness because the jealous one fears another, a rival, may take his place and win something or some one from him. When it is used of Jehovah, it indicates God's sensitive regard for the true faith of His people, lest they go away and into sin.

A Valuable Booklet.

Dr. D. A. Long is getting some very encouraging words for his new booklet on Jefferson Davis, some coming even from the northern part of the United States. One is from Dr. Arthur T. Hadley, New Haven, Conn. Dr. Hadley says: "Please accept my thanks for your interesting address on Jefferson Davis. I am very glad that anything which I said to the Yale Alumni at Washington was of use to you in this connection." This came from Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va.: "I have received your complimentary copy of 'Jefferson Davis' and have read it with pleasure. It is the best ever written on that subject. It clears the field of many grounds of ignorance and prejudice and opens up a new path for thought in the domain of history." And this comes from Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C. He says: "I have read with much pleasure and with deep interest your address, 'The Place of Jefferson Davis in History.' To me, it is well conceived and strongly wrought out. The facts that you set forth show very clearly the fundamental position held by our fathers and the cause for which they bled and died. In the address, you have rendered the North and the South a service, and placed a tribute, justly deserved, upon the grave of Jefferson Davis and the graves of those who fought with him."

We met a very sensible man a few days ago. He was a stranger, and as such he came to our door. After the usual salutation, he asked for a drink of water, and when I had given it to him he explained why he wanted it, saying: "I have just smoked, and I wish to wash my mouth out." I said: "I do not blame you for wanting to wash it out." We doubt that he grasped our meaning, but we hope our readers may do so readily.

NOTICE.

Our memorial meeting will be at Antioch Christian Church on Wednesday before the third Sunday in May—May 16, 1923. All who are interested in the Church and cemetery are cordially invited to come. Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., will deliver the memorial address.

FROM ORANGEPORT.

The people of our section are welcoming the return of spring. Our winter has been severe and most of the time has been cloudy. Very few days for about three months that we did not have some snowfall. But now spring seems to have come and it is a delight to have the bright sunshine.

Last Sunday, April 22, was a beautiful day and a bright day in the history of our Church. Seven young men were received into the Church. There were 104 present at Sunday School. We had a good attendance at our Endeavor meeting in the evening, and a good meeting.

Our Church has suffered quite a loss from death in the last few months. Our beloved Bro. John B. Pease was suddenly called away from us, and in his death the Church lost one of its very best members. On April 16th his mother, Mrs. Ursula Hathaway Pease, was also called home. She had reached the ripe age of 88 years, but was faithful in Church attendance and Church work as long as she was able. Her father, Rev. Levi Hathaway, one of our pioneer ministers, received her into the Church and baptised her at the age of 13, and so she spent seventy-five years as member of the Church. Eighty years of her life were spent at the home where she died.

Six sons and three daughters are living. The interest which these children take in Christian work is a living monument to her Christian example and teaching. Her brother, Rev. Warren Hathaway, was a minister in the Christian Church.

While she was interested in all lines of Christian work, she took special interest in the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and was president of the local union in her own Church for forty two years.

It was an inspiration to talk with her of her Christian experience. Her faith in God was strengthened by the many experiences in seventy-five years of service.

Funeral services were conducted by her pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Sweezy, pastor of the Calvary Presbyterian Church of Lockport, N. Y., and by Mrs. Graham, of Lockport, State musical director for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who sang two beautiful solos. Her body was laid to rest beside that of her husband, who died several years ago.

While we regret the departure of such a loyal person, we feel that heaven is much richer because she has been called home. May we have many such loyal Christians and mothers.

REMARKS AT THE FUNERAL OF MRS. SUSAN RAWLES.

Mrs. Susan Rawles, daughter of the late John Byrd and Esther his wife, was born in Nansemond County, Va., May 26, 1839, and died at her home near Liberty Spring Church March 29, 1923, at the age of 83 years 10 months and 3 days. She was married twice—first to Jeremiah Peel, in 1859, two children survive this union: Mrs. Emily O. Parker and Rev. R. H. Peel, of Gasport, N. Y.; Mr. Jeremiah Peel died during the year 1866. On January 28, 1868, she married Deacon John T. Rawles, who survives her. For 55 years 2 months and 1 day they have traveled life's road together, and their devotion, their companionship has been beautiful; and as they have walked and prayed and looked toward the glorious sunset of life, they have been as two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that beat as one. Three children survive this union—J. Wallace Rawles, of Glenwood, Col.; P. L. Rawles of Los Angeles, Cal., and Sheriff E. B. Rawles, of Nansemond County, Va. There are also nineteen grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren who survive her.

In early life, Sister Rawles united with Cypress Chapel Church. She, with her husband, became one of the charter members of Liberty Spring Church when it was organized.

It is worth our while to pause for a few moments to emphasize some of the strong, outstanding features of her life. We are reminded first of all that her children are loyal and devoted members of the church—and are prominent in the work of the kingdom. But there is to me a striking example of her religious influence when we recall that from her knees two strong men of the ministry have gone forth to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I think a large per cent of ministers give to mother the credit for religious training—which impressed them with the thought of dedicating their lives to the Christian ministry. I do know that in this home there has been an unusual emphasis laid upon the Bible—upon prayer—and the great fundamental things of the kingdom of God. This religious spirit has been equally honored and shared by both the father and the mother in the home as well as at church.

In Proverbs 31: 28 we find these words: "Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." The typical woman in the Scriptures, is a wife and mother. In the 31st chapter of Proverbs the typical woman is described. Her chief field of labor and love is her home with her husband and her children. But that home is not selfish in spirit, or narrow in its interests. Trust, industry, thrift, truth, religion—all pervade the spirit of such a home—and the mother carries this spirit into all the activities of her life. In her home she is understood. They know her better than any others. "Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." I am sure that I can say this of her children and her husband. They knew her best. Our sister was industrious, thrifty, trustworthy and deeply religious. She was a good neighbor, a kind friend, devoted to her home, loyal and faithful in her Church. Well may they call her blessed and praise her. In the fifty years—her quiet influence will live in the memory and character of those who knew her best. She has lived long and well. May her home circle and her Church be sustained and strengthened by an unfaltering trust in Him who was her Saviour and Redeemer.

Funeral at Liberty Spring Church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley.

A Survey of the Life of David.

The name of David signifies "Beloved," and the story of his life is one of the favorite Bible stories for young and old. The story is told in two ways. His unparalleled career from shepherd boy to Israel's greatest king is described in Samuel, Kings and Chronicles. Here we read of his victories and achievements. But in the Psalms we see the real David, his inner life revealed through his matchless poems.. In prayers of penitence and songs of thanksgiving, he expresses his great trust in Jehovah, who called him when but a lad to look forward to a great position in his country. For centuries these psalms have been the comfort and inspiration of men and women who have faced sin and trouble, and joy and life. It was a great man who declared: "Let me write the songs of a nation, and let who will write its laws." Few laws have had the effect on lives which David's psalms have had.

We see David first of all as a youth, when God has chosen him, without his knowledge, for a future which he would never have guessed. Imagine his wonder, and that of his father and brothers, when it was only the boy that the aged prophet had come to find, and to anoint! They had not even thought of him, but God knew where he was. Is He not still calling boys, and are not older people too often just as careless about thinking of their preparation for responsibility? And "the spirit of Jehovah came mightily upon David from that day forward."

We see David as the matchless warrior. From the day when he met Goliath and freed a whole army from the dread of a giant bully, he was Israel's soldier. "Saul has slain his thousands and David his tens of thousands." David was "a man of war," and for that reason God said: "Thou shalt not build a house for my name." But in all of his martial victories David acknowledged that he conquered not in his own power, but in the name of the Lord of Hosts.

We see David as a youth in the King's palace, an intimate friend of Prince Jonathan. This was a friendship so close and faithful that the names "David and Jonathan" have come to be synonymous with friendship during the years. This friendship saved David's life from Saul's wrath, as well as crowned his whole life. Religion is, after all, a matter of friendship of the highest type—friendship with God and friendship with man.

We see David as the greatest King of Israel. He began well, and he ended well. Through his powers as a statesman and ruler, the kingdom was united, and came to a position of power and wealth and glory. He prepared the nation for the erection of the great temple, although God did not permit him to witness its building. After his death, under the reign of his son, King Solomon, the kingdom was split up into Judah and Israel.

We see David as a poet, and love his poems. They express his sincerity. David sinned and sinned grievously, but he was ready to confess his guilt and to crave forgiveness. "I know my transgression and my sin is ever before me." "Against thee, and thee only, have I sinned, and done that which is evil in thy sight." In its spirit of humble penitence (Psalm 51), the life of David is a help to the fallen, to lead them to see that God forgives and leads to the higher life. To all, the life of David is a warning to walk carefully, for any man may fall, no matter how high his position or rank. The psalms of David express his trust in God—"The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want." They express gratitude: "I will sing praises among the nations." They express the deepest emotions of the human being, and so appeal to all men. David was a poet for all people, and all times.

We see David, the man, whom Jehovah sought "after his own heart"; a man who served his nation, a man who made mistakes and repented bitterly for them, a man who loved God's handiwork and told men of His goodness, a man whose virtues may well be copied by rulers of modern days, and whose vices must be shunned by all. His parting advice to Solomon may come as a message from David to all of his successors: "Keep the charge of Jehovah, thy God, to walk in His ways, to keep His statutes and His commandments and His ordinances and His testimonies that thou mayest prosper in all that thou doest."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

May 13, 1923.

Subject: Why do we believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God?—John 20:24-31.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Christ's appearance to His friends after His resurrection proved to them His divinity. He alone had power over death. He is the living Christ whose spirit enriches the life of men.

Thomas will always be thought of as "The Doubter." He was faithless until Jesus came especially to him, and rebuked him for not believing. But Jesus said: "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed." God's world is so full of revelations of His power and goodness to His children that it is difficult to see how any of them can reject His greatest gift, the Lord Jesus Christ.—Vs. 29.

Faith is a necessary factor to promote Christian growth. "In faith, believing" is the attitude of the devout follower of Jesus.—Vs. 28.

"Peace be unto you" is the great message of the Master.—Vs. 26.

The Scripture lesson gives just one instance to prove the divinity of Jesus, as revealed in His resurrection. There are many others, according to John. His birth, His boyhood experience in the temple, His teachings and miracles, His sinless life—all these and "many other signs" unite to make us believe that truly He is the Son of God.—Vs. 30.

The great purpose of the whole Bible is to show forth Jesus as the Son of God, and that "believing ye might have life through His name." "The Scripture is sufficient to salvation." The Bible is our only creed. When it brings such a message, does it not merit more prayer, careful study and consideration?

Plans for the Meeting.

This is "Mothers' Day." Invite all the mothers in your Church, and honor them by special seats and the gift of a flower. They will appreciate the topic of the evening as few others, and, doubtless help in its discussion. Have the social committee ready to make your guests feel welcome. Ask your music committee to prepare a special musical number in their honor.

Christian Endeavorers may give two-minute talks on the following topics and answer the questions (assigned before the meeting):

"Old Testament Records of the Coming of the Son of God."—Isa. 42, 53.
"Christ's Own Claim."—John 10:22-33.
"Christ's Wonderful Teaching."—John 7:45.
"The Effect of Christ's Life on Peter."
"The Effect of Christ's Life on Paul."
"Personal Experience the Final Test."
"What has Jesus Helped Men to do"?
"What Lines of Life Have Been Influenced by Jesus"? (Art, literature, history, science, music, etc.)
"Does the Conversion of Men Show that Jesus is the Son of God"?

Ask some one to tell Margaret Eggleston's story, "The Living Christ." If desired, the Field Secretary will furnish a copy of this story, or it may be found, with many others, in Miss Eggleston's book, "Stories for Special Days in the Church School."

Suggested hymns: "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," "My Jesus, I Love Thee," "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," "I've Found a Friend, O Such a Friend," "The Son of God Goes Forth to War."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

The second annual session of the Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention was held at Rock Stand Church Saturday and Sunday, April 21st and 22nd. The Saturday session was devoted to reports and conference hours, and addresses. Mr. J. W. Payne led the Sunday School discussion, and Miss Myrtle Pinckard led in Christian Endeavor. Addresses were delivered by Rev. G. D. Hunt, Rev. J. D. Dollar and Rev. C. W. Carter. The Saturday night session was held in the Rock Stand school-house, when a pageant was well rendered by the members of the Christian Endeavor Society of Rock Stand. The pageant was followed by an address by the Field Secretary, who also spoke at the Sunday morning service. The outstanding and encouraging feature of the Convention was the presence and interest of many young people.

Christiana Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society are both growing and doing good work. Mr. Duck is the newly elected Superintendent. Plans are being made for a special "Mothers' Day" service on May 20th, under the direction of Miss Croff Fuller.

Rock Stand Sunday School observed "Orphanage Sunday," April 22nd, with a special message from Dr. W. W. Staley, read by Miss Mable Hughes. Mr. T. C. Harris is the efficient Superintendent of this school, which is well organized and has a good program planned for every Sunday morning.

Every Sunday School Superintendent should arrange to attend the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College July 30th to August 5th. How much importance do you place on your work? Is it great enough to cause you to want to know how to do it better? Come to the Chautauqua!

Valley of Virginia folks are looking forward to a great gathering at Dry Run May 16, 17 and 18. Those who attend are promised a good program for this 1923 session of the Valley Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. Be there!

The opening night of the Chautauqua and School of Methods is to be "Burlington Night." Dr. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the Burlington Christian Church, will preside.

PAGE VALLEY LETTER.

We held our special meeting with Mt. Lebanon Church this year from March 7 to 24. The pastor did part of the preaching, but the most of the preaching was done by Bro. John W. Henderson, a fireman and extra engineer on the Shenandoah Valley division of the Norfolk and Western Railway, who is a member of East Liberty Christian Church. Brother Henderson has only a limited education, but he reads a great deal and is a deeply consecrated man of God. All of his neighbors and fellow-laborers love him and have the utmost confidence in his Christianity. He is intensely spiritual, and whenever he preaches or conducts the singing or other preliminary services God wonderfully blesses his efforts and uses him with telling effect.

While, as we said, his education is meagre and he has done only a little preaching, he is a good preacher and his sermons thrill his audiences. As a result of the meeting at Mt. Lebanon, thirty-two united with Mt. Lebanon Church and one united with East Liberty Church.

Our special meeting at New Port (for this year) was held during the week March 19 to 25. Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, was the evangelist in these services, conducting the singing and doing the preaching through Friday night. Brother Morgan is too well known among the brotherhood of the Southern Christian Convention to need any introduction or special mention in this letter. Suffice it to say that he was at his best and was greatly used by the Lord in his singing and preaching during this meeting—and all SUN readers know the rest. He deeply endeared himself to all of the New Port people of the various denominations in the five days he was there.

As a result of this meeting, six splendid young persons connected themselves with New Port Christian Church.

We held our series of special evangelistic services with East Liberty Church April 6 to 18. Here, the pastor was again assisted by Bro. John W. Henderson, of the East Liberty Church. During this meeting there were thirteen professions of faith in Christ, and eight accessions to the Church. East Liberty Church is the only Church in the Page Valley pastorate that has heretofore had no Sunday School since the present pastor has been on this field. A Sunday School was recently organized there and is progressing very nicely.

The work of the entire pastorate is in a fairly good shape at this time.

A TRIBUTE.

William Quinton Peele was born in Nansemond Co., Va., May 17, 1853, and died at his late home, Holland, Va., April 10, 1923. At the age of eighteen he united with Holy Neck Christian Church and fifteen years later became a deacon. In 1905 he was transferreed to Holland Christian Church where he served as deacon till his death. He was married on Jan. 4, 1880 to Judith Anne Holland of Nansemond Co., Va., with whom he spent forty-three years of happy wedded life and who survives him. A full account of the late funeral has been published. This is a personal tribute to a friend with whom for more than thirty years I enjoyed a fellowship unmarred by friction or misunderstanding. My friend has now passed beyond the reach of blame or praise. I speak of his virtues for the emulation of those who come after.

Industrious, frugal in his habits, and wise in management, he worked his way from hard labor, he retired at the age of fifty two with an estate ample for all his future needs and for large gifts to the church he loved.

These habits of industry and economy soon enabled him to provide a comfortable home of his own, and the large circle of friends and family relatives. His hospitality was free and abundant, and I don't think I ever saw him happier than when at some week end his home was filled with gay young people, or when he sat at the head of his richly laden table surrounded by his friends.

Mr. Peele was a man of delicate sensibilities and not always understood. I treasure as a precious memory his last words to me: "I think you understand me better than other folks do".

His feelings were deep and tender and he suffered severely under any friction or misunderstanding, but was responsive to the smallest acts of kindness and appreciation and nothing was too good for his inner circle of tried friends.

As his pastor for fifteen years I was much in his home and came to the inner side of his life. He loved his church and was never too busy to stop and attend the business meetings. During his deaconship at Holy Neck for nineteen years it was said that only two things ever kept him from the quarterly conferences—sickness and a flooded swamp.

His religious faith was simple and genuine and deepened with the passing years, and so did his love and devotion to his church. He gave largely in the latter years to Elon College which he loved and in which he believed and also to his local church in the erection of its handsome and expensive building. As his strength failed and he saw the approaching end he faced it with an unwavering faith and trust and calmly assured his faithful companion that all was well.

Christian Orphanage

CALL FOR HELP FOR ORPHANS.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The weather has been fine for the last ten days and things are humming around the Orphanage. We can hear the Fordson Tractor humming from early in the morning till late in the afternoon. The horses, too, are busy helping the tractor to get the corn land broke and in shape to plant.

Garden time is here, and we are getting started off nicely on it. We had three thousand cabbage plants set out some time ago, and they are growing nicely. Our garden peas are up two inches high and ready to work for the first time. Our garden beans are also coming up. Mustard and lettuce will soon be large enough to work. We planted twenty-two bushels of Irish coblers and bedded twenty bushels of sweet potatoes. It keeps everybody busy.

We are giving the Orphanage building a general overhauling. Nothing of any note had been done to it since it was built. The floors in much of it had worn out, and the walls were dirty and unsightly. So, for the last two weeks, the hammer and saw have been keeping us music putting in new floors, screen doors and windows. The painter's brush has been slipping over the walls and making them look clean, neat and inviting.

When you come to see us after the next two or three weeks we believe you will think more of us, as we will have a clean house.

The good and faithful women in our Church keep sending sheets, pillow-cases and dresses. Up to this writing we have received 180 sheets—just lack twenty being to our goal.

We wanted 200 dresses, and we have received 165 already. We just lack thirty-five. When we called for 200 sheets and 200 Easter dresses we had faith in the good women, and we feel sure the sheets and dresses will come in.

Ten ladies, two sheets each, will reach the goal. Thirty-five ladies, one little dress each, will reach the goal. I am depending on you.

Don't forget the Easter offering in your Church. We need it.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Miss Sadie E. Boyd, Richmond, Va., 4 pillow-cases, 1 spread; Mr. and Mrs. Carlton, Richmond, Va., 4 sheets, 4 pillow-cases; Ladies' Aid Society, Semora, N. C., sheeting for ten sheets; New Lebanon Church (N. C.), by J. N. McCollum, 1 dozen cans fruit; Ladies' Aid Society, Ramseur Church, Ramseur, N. C., by Mrs. T. A. Moffitt, 29 sheets; Circle —, Burlington Christian Church (N. C.), by Mrs. J. A. Hall, 5 pairs pillow-cases, 8 sheets.

WALKING WITH GOD.

By Howard W. Pope.

If we, like Enoch, would walk with God,
We must go the same way, and not abroad;
And we must keep step, and not go before,
Lest we walk alone, with hearts sad and sore.

That road means Salvation from sin and shame,
Through mercy bestowed in Jesus' name;
Complete deliv'rance from sin's guilt and power,
And grace sufficient for every hour.

It's the road of Service to every man,
For Christ died for all, and we all can,
At least—in devoting ourselves to their good,
And praying for all men, as Christians should.

And Sacrifice also is on that way,
Denying ourselves for Christ, day by day,
Our only desire, to know His will,
And do or suffer it, and keep still.

And Satisfied hearts walk along that way,
For God blesses richly from day to day;
And grants unto each this great reward,
That his life has been well pleasing to God.

Down "the long, long trail" we go, hand in hand,
My Lord and I, towards the Sunset Land;
Though the shadows deepen along that road,
It leads at last to the City of God.

There's nothing so sweet as to walk with the Lord,
For we talk as we walk, and in perfect accord.
Before we know it we find we have come
To the end of the road—to our Heavenly Home.

WANTED—WANTED

Five thousand (5.000) members of churches in the Conferences of the SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION during the evenings of one week to study carefully and prayerfully their Bibles on the subject of Tithing, to see whether it is right, Biblical, unerring Word, and, To Learn whether Tithing is God's method of teaching His supreme sovereignty, asserting His ownership, and financing His Kingdom.

If tithing is not a law of God and a command from God to man, then a halt should be called and a stop made to this teaching and preaching. Let's Appeal to the High Court of God's infallible Book and rest our case there. Christians should all do this since they preach and teach that "The Bible is our only Creed and is a Sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice." Then to our Bibles to settle this vital and all-important question. To Tithe or not to Tithe.

CHANGED CLEAN THROUGH.

During a visit to St. Marks, in Venice, Dr. Chapman noticed the alabaster pillars beside the great altar. They were dull and lifeless—strange they should be there. The guide took a lighted taper and held it before one of the pillars. Then its beauty appeared, color radiated from it and filled a great circle with light. All that happened was that light had fallen on its dullness and it had answered with light. No less thing than that is planned by Jesus Christ for His followers. No less thing, a vastly greater thing! The change He works is not upon them, but within them. He would make the king's daughters and sons all glorious within. He would not shine on us as the taper ray falls on alabaster; He would be a blaze of glory in our lives that shall transform them throughout. Some one tells of a countryman going into the capitol at Albany, and hearing it said that certain columns were Scotch granite. He tapped them thoughtfully. "Scotch granite," he said; "is it polished that way clean through"? A Christian ought to be changed clean through—in the secret life, in the open life, in the whole life. —Selected.

HOW TO SEARCH SCRIPTURES.

Have you ever been in a life-and-death hunt? Have you ever searched for something, upon the finding of which everything worth while in your life depended? It is in this spirit that God wants us to "search the Scriptures." Nothing that we might find elsewhere can possibly be as vital, for our life, as that which we find in God's Word. In a comment in last year's Keswick Calendar, on our Lord's word in John 5:39, "Search the Scriptures * * * they are they which testify of Me," these words are quoted: "Search the Scriptures, know them thoroughly, get into their meaning, labor to understand them. They are worth more to you than the chart to the sailor, or the will to the pauper. Oh, what riches the Scripture sets forth! Will you not search it? Search it as you would a list of royal pardons if you were under sentence of death; search it as you would for a door of escape if you were in a besieged, famished garrison. Search there for life; search there for Christ. Full and thorough knowledge is only got by searching." Have we entered upon this new year with the daily habit of that sort of searching out the treasures in God's Word? If not, let us commence it today, and continue the daily search which shall mean such "findings" as will rejoice God's heart and our own.—S. S. Times.

BETTER THAN WORKING FOR GOD

Those who would rather work for God than do anything else have a needed lesson to learn. A missionary was recently called back to the homeland from her greatly beloved field abroad. She wrote to a friend: "It was hard to leave China again so soon when the need is so urgent and the opportunities are so great. But years ago I learned that to do the will of God is far, far sweeter than to do the work of God.. So I rejoice to do His will in returning home now."

We cannot work for God as He would have us work until we have put His will first. Mary learned this lesson earlier than Martha. God tells us to "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work for His good pleasure. Do all things without murmurings and questionings, that ye may become lights in the world."—Phil. 2:12-15. It is to be noted that God works in us, first to will, and then to work for His good pleasure. If it is His will that we should be silent and still, that is better than working for Him. It is sweet indeed to accept His will "without murmurings and questionings." Only the child of God that is willing to put God's will ahead of God's work can be sure to be, as Mary Was, a "light in the world." When we have shown our surrender and our faith by our willingness to "be still, and know" that he is God, then indeed he can trust us with His work.—S. S. Times.

MARRIED.

Mr. Leonard B. Printz and Mrs. Rhoda Estep were united in marriage on the evening of April 18, 1923. The couple motored to the home of Mahlon Clem, at Edinburg, Va., and there I met them and performed the ceremony in the presence of a few friends. They are from the Woods Chapel neighborhood and will make their home there.

BEAL.

James B. Beal, of Pittsboro, N. C., was born November 30, 1856; died April 15, 1923, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. W. G. Field, Pittsboro, N. C., aged 66 years 4 months 15 days. He was the son of Edward W. and Lundy Beal. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Hart, who preceded him three years to the spirit world. To this union were born six children, three of whom survive, as follows: Mrs. W. G. Field, of Pittsboro, N. C.; Mrs. Frank Green, of Pittsboro, and Ira C. Beal, of Asheville, N. C. He is also survived by three brothers—C. D. and L. K. Beal, Asheville, N. C., and D. P. Beal, of Canton, Texas; and three sisters—Mrs. B. H. Oldham, of Cumnock, N. C.; Miss Jane Beal, of Carbonton, N. C., and Miss Emma Beal, of Bear Creek, N. C.; also six grandchildren, besides many other relatives and a host of friends.

He made a profession of faith and joined Antioch Christian Church, at which place he was buried beside his companion, in the presence of a large congregation. Funeral services at Antioch Church April 17th, conducted by Rev. Gordon. A good man has gone from us. DONAH OLDHAM.

DIED.

Mr. Hugh B. Kelley, of Suffolk, Va., on April 11, 1923, while visiting his niece, Mrs. Annie Brinkley, of Cypress Chapel, Va., aged 81 years 4 months and 4 days. He was a good man and greatly beloved by all who knew him. He was a member of Cypress Chapel Christian Church and was faithful in the various duties of life. He served through the four years of the Civil War, and was in most of the battles fought. He belonged to Captain Brinkley's company (Company I, 41st Va. Regt., Mahone's Brig.). The Lord was with him all the way, and he came out without a wound or being hurt. He leaves one son, Mr. A. C. Kelley, of Suffolk, Va.; one grandson, Mr. Sunny Kelley, of Suffolk, Va., and many relatives and friends. His funeral services were conducted at his Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, Va., and his remains were laid to rest in the Church cemetery. The Lord be with and bless the dear bereaved ones. H. H. B.

CALLED HOME.

Early in the morning of Wednesday, April 18th, Samuel M. Pickard, of Chapel Hill, N. C., was found to be dead on his bed. He had been in his place of business the previous day and retired at night complaining of indigestion.

Bro. Pickard embraced religion in his youth and joined the Methodist Church. Later he withdrew and connected himself with the Christian Church at Providence, in Alamance County, N. C. Afterward he came to Chapel Hill and had his membership transferred to this place.

Bro. Pickard was a good Christian gentleman. Devotedly attached to his family and his Church, loyal and true to his friends, and beloved and honored by his neighbors and acquaintances—this was shown by the large crowd that came together when he died and the vast number of floral wreaths that covered his grave.

Many persons came from Burlington, Graham, Saxapahaw, Mebane, Ephland, Hillsboro, Durham, etc., and attended the funeral. This was conducted in the Christian Church in Chapel Hill by the Pastor, Rev. B. J. Howard, assisted by Rev. Stanley Harrell. These services were very appropriate and impressive.

Bro. Pickard leaves his wife and four children—a son and three daughters; four brothers and one sister.

W. S. LONG.

DIED.

Alfred S. Anderson was born November 25, 1839, and fell peacefully asleep in Jesus on the evening of March 28, 1923. His age was 83 years 4 months and 4 days. For more than sixty years he was a consistent and devout member of the Timber Ridge Christian Church, and for many years a deacon in the Church there. His life was a beautiful and Christian life, and his character above reproach. He will be greatly missed in the Church and community, but his influence for good will live on. It is always with a feeling of sadness and loss that we lay to rest these faithful old soldiers of the cross who have borne many a burden for the Church they so truly loved. Brother Anderson is survived by one son and four daughters. A large congregation of sorrowing friends attended the funeral service at Timber Ridge April 1, 1923.

A. W. ANDES.

GUNTER.

Bro. T. W. Gunter was born June 26, 1856; died April 21. Surviving him are his wife, two daughters—Mrs. M. M. Covert and Miss Margaret Gunter—two brothers, J. K. and A. B. Gunter, and one sister, Mrs. D. R. Wicker.

Funeral was conducted by the writer from Zion Christian Church, of which the deceased had for many years been a member. A large congregation was present to "weep with those who weep" and to bear testimony to their esteem for their friend. May the Lord comfort and bless the bereaved.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

LLOYD.

Alfred Lee Lloyd, infant son of Bro. and Sister Isaac Lloyd at Woods Chapel, was born November 12, 1921, and died April 13, 1923, aged 1 year 5 months and 1 day. Funeral services were held at Woods Chapel April 15, 1923. May God's blessings be upon the bereaved.

Russian Cruelty.—

News is coming into this country from Russia to the effect that they are now even torturing other priests in an effort to make them yield to the Government's demands, but so far they seem to have found a body of men who would not for the sake of saving life commit themselves to the support of the most dreadful form of Government known in any civilized country. These are times that are trying men's souls sure as you live. The Bible tells us such days will come and they are here even now.

The President Seems to Have Struck a Snag.—

Recently President Harding came out boldly in favor of an International Court of Justice, but before the ink which carried the message was dry, or nearly so, leaders in his own party had risen against him and declare war on his policy. So it goes. If we go much further in this direction, it will likely become impossible to do any co-operative work even in the sphere of politics, and for the reason that every man is so anxious to be a leader that he will not accept the policy of any other man—he is so anxious to be the one leader himself. When the world gets too full of leaders then something is going to happen. We are not a politician, and above all are not a partisan, but we believe the little game some of the leaders played on Ex-President Wilson just before his second term was out, will yet come home to roost.

Refugees in Great Distress.—

The public press is saying that the present condition of affairs in Constantinople is most deplorable. There are something like 30,000 refugees, and they are crowded into quarters that are well-nigh intolerable. In one place, 500 men are crowded into quarters so small that it is practically impossible to give them any comfort. To make matters much worse, it is said there is an epidemic among these refugees of smallpox, typhus fever, pneumonia and typhoid fever, and they are dying rapidly. The outlook is anything but encouraging. Flytime is at hand and filth is abundant, the sick being crowded into small quarters. One writer said that he saw seven men on one blanket, all very ill. At the end of the first day three were gone—dead, of course. At the end of the next day, two more were gone—dead—and then at the end of the third day all were gone. They get little or no medical attention, and of course there is practically no hope for saving the greater part of this great throng. The world seems to be in a pitiable condition indeed.

The Foolishness of the Foolish!—

Hurrah for Norfolk and her level headed City Manager! Why? Oh, because he had the moral courage to make the people of that city who were trying to commit suicide by continuous dancing, quit the miserable pastime. What a pity that society must be burdened with men and women who have nothing better to do than to throw their lives away in such tomfoolery. Mr. Ashburner, we congratulate Norfolk that she has a City Manager who has back bone to do his duty in such situation, and if in that situation, then in others, which are unwholesome and for the good of no one. Isn't it a strange thing that in so many places it takes law and the officers to execute them to keep men and women from killing themselves as a sort of pastime. It is nevertheless true—it takess the law and men to execute it to keep a good many people from killing themselves just for fun! It is said that it takes all sorts of people to make a world. Whether that is so or not, we have got them and some of them do not mind showing themselves in the role of reckless simpletons.

Encouraging Figures.—

To those who have become depressed over the usual published sayings that people no longer hear preaching and that the Church is near the point of death, we would commend to their attention the statistics for the year 1922, which prove that a greater percentage of persons per thousand now belong to the Church than ever before. The total number of congregations is now 238,681. During 1922 an average of nearly 3,000 joined the Church daily. For every day, twelve ministers were licensed or ordained. For every seven, congregations were established. While these figures are far from justifying an expectation of the near approach, yet they make all talk about the "dying Church" mere "buncombe." It is a significant fact that the prosperity of the Church in a growing membership began during the same year that national prohibition was made a part of the Constitution. Certainly it can be said that prohibition has not hurt the Churches.

The Constitution of the United States.—

We had supposed that every man who lives under our flag as a citizen of the United States had to be loyal to the Constitution of the United States, but it seems that in this supposition we were mistaken. However, we are quite sure that we ought not to be mistaken, for what we had supposed to be true, ought to be true, even if it is not. We had long ago believed that a man who would not support the Constitution of the United States could not have the protection of our government, and we see no reason why it should not be so. There is quite a little company of men who refuse to support the Eighteenth Amendment, and yet they are living among us and receiving the protection of our laws. They seem to be living for but one thing and that is to break the law against whisky and if possible again flood our homes and cities and country places with whisky. It is true they have undertaken a big job, but they are doing their best to open the flood gates of the liquor business and so turn loose the awful stuff upon an innocent people. We can see how it is possible for some men not to like the Eighteenth Amendment, but we do not see how it is possible for a man who is a citizen of our country to oppose the law and not only so, but do his or her best to bring back the awful curse upon the people contrary to the expressed will of the people by a tremendous majority—all of the States of the Union except three of the smallest in the Union voted for the Prohibition of the liquor traffic, and yet these law breakers are hanging around trying to get a hold that will help them to open the terrible curse again in the midst of the people.

Interesting Facts about Virginia Crops—

Virginia produces approximately 50 per cent of the early Irsh potato crop of the United States, according to figures compiled by George W. Koiner, State commissioner of agriculture, and Henry M. Taylor, statistician of the Federal Department of Agriculture. More than 18,000 cars from the 1922 crop were shipped, and the value of the crop was nearly $14,000,000.

This State is the largest shipper of sweet potatoes, consigning 6,500 cars of the 1922 crop, or more than25 per cent of the total shipment in the United States.

Virginia produces more spinach than any other state, and during the 1921-22 season shipped 2,217 cars, or approximately half the carlot shipment of the country.

The State is the third largest shipper of tobacco, the 1922 crop being valued at $38,000,000. Virginia also ranks third in apple shipments, more than 6,000 cars having been shipped from last year's crop, although the production was only about one-third normal.

Virginia usually ranks fourth in peanut production, but owing to an unfavorable season dropped to fifth place last year.

Only three states produce more cabbage than Virginia. This crop was valued at $1,125,000 last year. In production of strawberries Virginia ranks fifth, and received $2,203,000 for the 1922 crop. The State's snap-bean crop, which ranked fifth, was valued at $700,000. Large quantities of onions, sweet corn, tomatoes, lettuce and other varieties were grown for market.

Virginia's large production of truck crops, fruits and vegetables, it is pointed out, is due to its favorable climate and ready accessibility to the leading markets of the country. Large increases in acreage in these crops are predicted for the next few years.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. S. Long's many friends who were in the Convention were delighted to see him so recovered from his recent illness as to be able to attend the Convention and take an active part in its proceedings.

Rev. J. W. Holt was not able to attend the Convention this year—the first time he has missed in many years, if we mistake not. We hear, however, that he is somewhat improved since our last report in these columns.

The many friends of Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., will regret to know that he has been quite ill of late. He failed to get to the Henderson Convention, but it was not till the Convention was in the closing hours that we learned, through Rev. J. G. Green, a son-in-law of Bro. Clements, that he was considered seriously ill. Bro. Clements has for more than forty years been one of the true and hard-working servants of the Church, and richly deserves the sympathy and prayers of the Church.

The Henderson Christian Church entertained the Convention in such a whole-hearted way as to gain the high appreciation of the brotherhood. The members of the little Church came to their labors in earnest, and they won the approval of the entire delegation, so far as we heard. Notwithstanding the small membership, we had some fifteen or twenty homes to whom no delegate could be sent because we did not have enough to go around. The weather was fine and the attendance was good. The speakers did themselves and the cause they represented full credit. The coming of the Convention to Henderson was a blessing to the little Church and the community. President Smith presided faithfully and pressed the business to schedule time. When it comes time to entertain the Convention again, we believe the Henderson Church will do its part again.

VALLEY CONVENTION TO MEET.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Valley Conference opens at Dry Run Christian Church on next Wednesday night, and continues through Friday afternoon. The program, prepared under the leadership of President Roy A. Larrick, of Winchester, is a splendid one, including reports and round-table discussions, and addresses by Rev. W. C. Hook, of Harrisonburg; Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, of Richmond; Rev. A. W. Andes, Rev. J. F. Morgan, and Mr. Page McK. Etchison, Secretary of the Department of Religious Work, of the Washington Y. M. C. A. Devotional services will be in charge of Rev. R. P. Crumpler. All Churches in the Valley should be represented at this important gathering.

EVIDENCES OF THE NEW BIRTH IN INDIVIDUAL EXPERIENCE.

By Rev. Jack Spratt.

"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth Him that begat, loveth Him also that is begotten of Him."—1 John 5:1.

This is a great text, setting forth the relationship between man and God. Its importance may be readily grasped, in part at least, if we but stop to consider that it involves the eternal destiny of man and the glory of God in the Salvation of the lost. There can be no salvation without the New Birth, and there can be no New Birth without the work of the Holy Spirit.

According to the teaching of the Word of God the work of the Spirit is to impart life, to implant hope, to give liberty in Christ, to testify to the character and saving power of Christ, to guide the people of God into all truth, to teach us all things which are needed in the Christian life and experience to comfort and help believers, and to convict the world sin. What a marvelous work is that of the Spirit!

Jesus once said:

"But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God. even to them that believe on His name."—John 1:1:12.

Do you wish to become a child of God? Then you must receive Jesus in mind and heart in order to receive power to become a child of God. So far as we are informed, you can get into the family of God in no other way. That is what the Holy Spirit does for us—He admits us into the family of God. Now if you believe truly on Jesus as the Son of God, He must give you power to become a child of God. That is not the must of human authority, but it is the must of the Word of God. "Ye must be born again." When one has received such power, there must be evidences of the fact, not merely in theory, but there will be unmistakable evidence of it in the life of the individual who has received the New Birth.

Now what are the evidences in the life of a man which declare plainly that such an one has been born of the Spirit? There must be such evidences, and if so, the children of men ought to know what they are and how to apply these evidences to their own lives as a proof that they have passed from death unto life. The change is often seen in the face as well as in the life. One of the homeliest faces I ever saw was that of a young girl, but when she was born of the Spirit her face was transformed till she did not look like her former self. We are told that the Fiji Islander through his conversion to Christianity has lost the savage face of the days of his heathenism. Receiving Him gives us power to become the sons of God. The change is real and vital.

But what are these changes, these evidences, of the New Birth?

I. Righteousness in the Life.

"If ye know that He is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of Him."—1 John 2:29.

That is not merely the outward form of righteousness, but the righteousness which is given of God in Christ. In the New Birth that righteousness is imputed to the believer, the Holy Spirit having worked into the life of the individual the divine nature. So genuine righteousness in the life is one of the marked evidences of the New Life.

II. New Born Souls do not practice Sin.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin because he is born of God."—1 John 3:9.

The New Birth takes out of a man a love of sin and puts within him the love of God. This cannot sin is not the cannot which means the lack of power, but the cannot which means that the disposition of the individual is changed till he has no disposition to work sin. The difference between the two is marked, indeed. A truthful man cannot lie, not that he has not the power to lie, but his whole disposition is set against it. An honest man cannot cheat. He surely has the power to do so, only he cannot do it because his life is set against cheating. Then is it anything strange that a man who has been born of the Spirit and made to be a partaker of the divine nature cannot indulge in sin, cannot work sin, cannot love sin. That is plain enough. If an honest man cannot cheat and truthful man cannot lie, how can a Christian, a man who has been born of the Spirit and made after the likeness of Christ, sin?

III. Men and Women who have had the New Birth love one another.

Jesus said in John 8:31—"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed."

That is a very sure evidence that the Holy Spirit has been at work in the human heart, when one continues in the Love of God. In another place John says: "Beloved, let us love one another, for God is love."

IV. Genuine Faith in Christ is Evidence of the New Birth.

If a professor of faith in Christ is constantly wavering, not steady in his devotion to the Master, that is sure evidence, ordinarily, that such an one has not been born of the Spirit. John in his First Epistle (5:1) asserts that "whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." So a firm and unfaltering faith in Christ is an evidence of the New Birth.

V. Victory over the world and its allurements is Evidence of the New Birth.

"For whosoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—1 John 5:4.

So faith is an evidence of the New Birth. Men stand by faith. When men build a lighthouse off the coast of a storm-tossed ocean, they erect a structure that is sufficient to withstand the storms. When God builds a Christian, He builds for Eternity. He expects great things of him.

VI. The Believer in God is Kept by the power of God.

John says in His First Epistle (5:18): "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not."—1 John 5:18.

The translation given in our Authorized Version does not seem to bring out the meaning of the original. Instead of reading: "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not."

The clearer rendering is as follows:

"We know that whosoever is begotten of God sinneth not, but the begotten of God keepeth him, and that wicked one toucheth him not."

This shows that it is not the power of the one who has received the New Birth, but the power of the only begotten Son of God that is to keep the believer so safely that the wicked one cannot touch him. Do not trust to your own power to be kept from the wicked one, but trust yourself to the keeping power of the only begotten Son of God—He will keep the trusting soul safe from the touch of the wicked one. The one who is born of the Spirit is safe from the touch of the devil and all his imps. It is Jesus who keeps the believer safe from the touch of the wicked one.

What a blessing that poor weak man can find a hiding place from the work of Satan, where the wicked one cannot touch him. Did you say that you do not believe that statement? The fact that you do not believe it will not change it at all. You may believe it or not, but the truth will stand and you will have to face it in the judgement.

VII. Through the New Birth Men is made a Member of the Family of God.

"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be made partakers of the divine nature."—2 Peter 1:4. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Romans 8:14.

The evidences of the New Birth seem abundant.

THE RELIGION THE WORLD WANTS.

By Gipsy Rodney Smith.

"I spake to Thy disciples that they should cast it out, and they could not."—Mark 9:18.

[The following sermon by Gipsy Rodney Smith was one of a series delivered during the opening meetings of the great campaign in Great Britain not a great while ago. It was specially reported for the Homiletic Review of New York City. We commend it to our readers not merely for a careful reading, but also for a close and prayerful study. It is a message suited to the times and to the needs of the Church today.—Editor.]

The reason why many people do not believe in our religion is that you and I are such poor specimens of it. The reason why the world leaves the Churches is that the world is disappointed in the Church. Just as soon as we reintroduce Jesus into our lives, as well as into our songs, the world will come back.

The world needs Jesus. There are no substitutes. If the spiritual life of a city is low, it is what the Christians have made it. You will begin to work miracles if the love of Christ constrains. You could not keep a chrysanthemum in the ground if you tried if the root was healthy. When God kisses the place, it bursts forth in all its magnificence and beauty. If God had kissed your heart into sympathy with Jesus and Calvary, you would burst forth. You could not help it.

I was traveling once with two hard-working mission sisters. We were talking of what heaven would be like. "Oh"! cried Sister Daisy, a frail, delicate woman, "just think that when I get there I can work and work for Jesus and never feel tired." A great many people are getting tired jazzing and playing tennis. Social life nowadays is getting to be very hard work. Do you overtire yourself out in work for Jesus?

If there was a political election on, how you would bring out your motor cars and knock at the doors of people's houses! How you would press them and coax them, and fondle them, and pester them until you made sure of them! Why are you not just as much in earnest to get people to vote for Jesus Christ? That is our business. Believe me, I have almost got to the place where I preach to professedly Christian people and nobody else. I will tell you why. The key to the situation, to the salvation of the world, lies in the Church of God. We have the key, but we do not know how to put it into the lock. We have to learn how. We can only learn how by a deeper spiritual life.

If we are to help others, they find in us a surprise packet all the time. I say the world gets disappointed in us, and that is what makes it so pessimistic. Do you know what a pessimist is? A person who sees a difficulty in every opportunity. Do you know what an optimist is? A person who sees an opportunity in every difficulty.

Now, read that a complaint was made to the Master that the disciples had failed to cast an evil spirit out of the boy. Is there any one who complains that he came to you for help, and that you failed. Remember, Jesus did not excuse the disciples. I will be perfectly plain with you. Religious demonstrations may become religious dissipations. If you are not a channel of blessing, you are a hindrance. If you are not saving people, you are cursing them. There are those who know that you go to Church and that you profess salvation. What do your business associates think of you? If we are simply playing at religion, then, in God's name, let us burn our Churches. It is the Church's business to cast out devils. If she is not doing that, she has no right to call herself a Church. We talk about intellectual preaching, we talk about poetic preaching, we talk about cultured preaching. The only preaching the New Testament recognizes is the preaching of Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

Listen! Failure on the part of the disciples created doubt in the heart of the afflicted boy. If you Christians are intoxicated and saturated with the love of pleasure, the world will laugh at your religion. You used once to have family prayer. You never have it now. You used at least to have a blessing at the table. You never have it now. Some parents can hardly find time to teach their children a prayer. Oh, we border on the esthetic, we talk eloquently, we sing better than ever, we can fill our lecture-room and schoolrooms with lectures and entertainments and dramatic performances and any trumpery thing that is not spiritual; but, oh my God! where is the prayer meeting? You applaud. Then put a chalk ring around yourself and pray, Lord begin in the ring!

The question is not "What Church do you go to"? or "How much do you know"?

It is a Question of What You Are.

Is God first and last in your life? People come to me sometimes and say: "I have been a backslider." It does not take two minutes to find out that you have never been a "frontslider." We are trying to draw in the outsiders. I want to say something to the insiders. Jesus, "as was custom," went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day. Yet there are professing followers of His who partake of the Holy Communion in the morning and then go off to the golf links, or the picture house, or the bridge party. The Lord save us from such humbug! If you do that you are a walking fraud, and it is time that somebody had the audacity to tell you so. Preachers, both here and in America, tell me that it is increasingly difficult to get men of prominence and influence to take office in the Church because they do not want to be tied down on Sundays. They want to go out in their automobile for week-ends. The result is that in time they become nothing but weak ends.

It is sincerity the world is crying out for. It is the prayer of the righteous man that does things. If you pray and you are not a good man, your prayer will rise no higher than the ceiling. I think that must be why some Churches are so badly ventilated. The ventilators are stuffed with musty petitions that never get anywhere. I am tired of reading in the religious newspapers that the Rev. So and So sustained his reputation as a preacher. I want to hear this: "He is a good man." I never forget what General Booth wrote to me when I was in the Salvation Army: "Remember, my boy, that your real power for service will depend on your goodness."

I fear that in the Churches we have lowered the standard. We have been too ready to compromise. I fear it is still true, as Prof. Drummond said of one of Mr. Moody's visits, that the inquiry room reveals the awful fact that the vast majority of Church members know no more about free grace than a hottentot. We bolster up our Churches with a sickly sentimental crop of so-called believers who will work with enthusiasm for nothing more spiritual than a Church social or a fancy fair.

The Flabby Thing.

The thing we have been calling the simple Gospel is not to be found within the covers of the New Testament. The only Gospel which the New Testament recognizes is the Gospel of Jesus Christ and Him crucified, and salvation by complete surrender, repentance toward God and faith in Him.

I was never born to be a preacher. The love of Christ simply forced its way out. The day after I was converted I was in the timber trade—selling clothes pegs—and I went to the house of a lady just outside of Cambridge. She bought all I had. Then I felt I must sing, "Who'll be the next to follow Jesus"? As I sang, the lady and her daughter were in tears. I was frightened and ran away. Twenty-five years later, when conducting a mission in Brighton, I met that lady in a swell drawing-room. She said: "After you ran away, my daughter said: 'If a poor gypsy boy can love Jesus like that, I must.'" It appeared I pointed her to Christ that morning.

I will tell you what boys and girls have said to me all over the world: "Father and mother used to go to Church twice on Sunday. Now they go only once." If your boys and girls see your religion cooling off as you get older, will they think it worth while beginning? I have known people who, when they had shawls over their heads and clogs on their feet, were saints. I have seen the same people riding on their motor cars, wearing dainty headgear and footwear, but with their souls in clogs.

Have You Drifted from God?

What do your children think of your religion? A beautiful girl, a graduate of one of the universities, said to me: "Gipsy Smith, my father and mother are members of the Methodist Church, but I have never yet seen them pray, and they are the last people in the world I would go to about my soul." When a boy or a girl feels like there is something wrong with the religion of the home, there is not much chance to reach them. If you want your children to believe in home religion, you must make it appear at its best in yourselves. Let your life be as beautiful and winsome and as full of music as the woods are full of song on a spring day, as full of sweetness as a field of clover on a May morning, as full of brilliancy as the glowing sunbeams on a June day at noon.

I was won myself by a father who knelt in a gypsy tent and prayed with his five motherless children. I saw his life unfold like a magnificent June rose. He went to heaven last January. Life will never be the same to me again. I saw him last when I left for America. He lived next door to me at Cambridge, and he got up early in the morning to give me his parting blessing. If I have been able to do anything for God it is all owing to him. Father, mother, your child may be won to become a great preacher, a great statesman, a great missionary. Give your children a chance.

Once, twenty-seven years ago, I was conducting a month's mission in an American city. I was feeling homesick and lonesome. Somehow I touched the heart of a little girl and brought her to Jesus. She came up to the pulpit, put her arms around my neck and kissed me. On the last night of the mission she broke the stillness of the great congregation by walking up the center aisle, bringing me a parting present. It consisted of four beechnuts and a little China doll, wrapped up in a piece of paper. I have kept them all of these years. I never expected to see her again, but last night she sat on my platform with her husband, a successful business man. She is now one of the most influential Christian women in a city of 250,000 people. She still loves Jesus. Bring a little child to the Saviour and you may be building better than you know.

IS THE CHURCH PROSPERING UNDER THE AGITATION OF THE SOCIAL GOSPEL IDEA?

We may always judge a tree by the fruit it bears. If that be true, as undoubtedly it is, what has the agitation of the Social Gospel idea done for the fruitage of the Church? In our last issue we showed something of the drift of the Church in the last forty or fifty years under the influence of that kind of a gospel, and we must confess that the prospect, as we presented it in our last issue, is not assuring as to the help to real Christian life which this sort of a Gospel seems to be giving. Now we come again with some facts which are at least worthy of consideration. In our last, on this line of thought, we presented two very capable witnesses, and if you read what what we had to say, you will no doubt recall the outlook for the cause of Christ under this kind of teaching, if its work in the past is to be regarded as an index to its future fruitage. We again assert that if this new phase of the so called Social Gospel is capable of such work as it has been getting credit for at the hands of its friends, then it does seem that at least it ought to have shown some fruitage as the result of its influence through the forty of fifty years in which it has been given a new emphasis and a double opportunity for doing things. For one, if the Social Gospel has in it real power for good, then we hold that so soon as that fact is established, it becomes us all to give it a hearty support. If on the other hand, its forty or fifty years of opportunity has brought no sign of an increase in the usefulness and fruitfulness in the work of the Church, we believe we shall be fully justified in at least keeping hands off till it can establish a better record of its influence for good in the Church. We are not charging that the Social Gospel is necessarily responsible for all failures in the Church for the last few years, but we are claiming that not withstanding the promise of such great things to come to the usefulness and the thrift of the Church under the teaching and influence of the Social Gospel idea that it has made a poor show for itself, as during the time of its unusual emphasis by its friends, the facts now seem to show that the Church has not gained but rather lost heavily. It therefore seems to say that whatever else may be true of its influence, it has at least failed to add much to the thrift and larger usefulness to the Church.

In our last we introduced two very capable witnesses and the testimony was practically a unit against the fulfillment of the promise that the Social Gospel would do great things for the cause of Christ. We now wish to introduce other witnesses, not for the purpose of defeating the Social Gospel, but for the purpose of making an unbiased investigation as to what the Social Gospel has done for the cause of Christ in the years in which it has had so much emphasis and teaching. If it is the great handmaid of Christianity and has so proven itself in the last forty or fifty years, then let us give it a fair and yet further trial. On the other hand, if it has not proven itself a blessing to the cause of Christ, it is time it were getting itself out of the way of real aggressive Christianity. We are living in a day of dreadful opposition to the cause of Christianity, and if the Social Gospel cannot help us, to meet this opposition successsfully, we will be better off without it than with it. Now let us hear another witness on the present situation as to the prosperity of the Church.

The Rev. A. T. Howell in a recent issue of The Biblical Recorder had an article on Baptist Tragedies in which he told of some of their notable achievements, after which he said: "But there are some embarrassing, humiliating, heart-crushing facts. Then he mentioned these:

1. Two million of the Baptist people are practically unenlisted in any phase of Baptist work. That is more than half of their whole number. Think of it, out of a body of 3,500,000 people 2,000,000 are not at work. Would you call that a healthy and growing condition of the Church?

2. He further declared that 5,200 of the churches of the Baptist of the South have no houses of worship of their own. That does not look like prosperity. Evidently the Social Gospel has not helped these churches much, if any.

3. He then added: "More than 4,000 of our churches are all the time pastorless. More than 15,000 are served by absentee pastors."

4. He says it takes twelve Baptist a whole year to baptize one convert. That is the average, but the fact speaks poorly for the effectiveness of the Church. Has the Social Gospel helped it any? If so, we pity the conditions which existed before the Social Gospel came into action a few years ago.

5. They have hundreds of pastors who have no church. He says Baptists will not call a man if he is over fifty years of age. That of itself shows a bad state of the Church from some cause.

6. He says for the year 1921 the United States Government shows that the people of this country spent $340,000,000 for dogs, but spent only seven millions for the support of the ministry. That is an awful comment on the Christianity of this day and country.

7. He says the wealth of the Southern Baptists is $6,000,000,000, that their annual income is $1,400,000,000, that a tithe of this would be $140.000,000 but that as a matter of fact they gave only one-fourth of a tithe. How far off we are from what we ought to be giving? Then he adds, many of their buildings are inadequate, and the endowment of their schools is badly behind and their orphan asylums are not equal to the demand on them, as they turned away nearly 3,000 orphans last year from their orphanages because they did not have room for them. Further comment is unnecessary.

Our Presbyterian brethren are running short in ministers. A recent statement said if all the ministerial students in their seminaries were to graduate this year, then they would not have enough to fill vacancies now in need of pastors. As illustrating the situation among them, they gave the names of certain of their wealthy churches which are vacant—no pastor, as follows: First Church, Montgomery, Ala.; First Church, Pensacola, Fla.; First Church, Birmingham, Ala.; First Church, Columbus, Ga.; First Church, Macon, Ga.; First Church, Selma, Ala.; Central Church, St. Louis, Mo.; First Church, Lexington, Ky; First Church, Roanoke, Va.

Thats only nine. The list includes some of the strongest and most important churches in the Southern Assembly. The list could be enlarged. Now how are these churches to be supplied with preachers? By creating vacancies in other churches.

Does that look like the Social Gospel has put the work of the Presbyterian Church ahead? Not if we can see straight.

Here is another important witness, the Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., Baptist. In a recent issue of the Religious Herald, he says:

"The Baptist people of the earth are at present in sad confusion, and their fellowship is torn by increasing controversy." I have some knowledge of conditions in America, Great Britian, France and China, and I believe there is scarcely a church, whose members read the religious or secular papers, in which there is not strife over the relations between Modernism and Evangelistic Christianity. The strife is largely caused by the conflict between church and school. Our faithful pastors have been preaching that the inspired Bible teaches the creation of man in the image of God, the virgin birth of Christ, His bodily resurrection, salvation through His vicarious suffering on the cross, and His second coming in glory, either for judgment or to establish His reign of righteousness and peace on earth.

This is a situation to be deplored, and it does not help up the thought that the introduction of what is called the Social Gospel has helped the situation. Has it not rather gone backward than forward?

Did some one question Dr. Dixon's statement that the strife is largely caused by the conflict between church and school. Here is Dr. Dixon's answer:

Our young people, who have gone to college or university, and in some places to high school, are taught that man was not created in God's image, but came up from beneath through the beast and the jungle by a process of inherent forces which gives the strong and fit the scientific right to destroy the weak and unfit, and build themselves up on the wreck. In this scheme there is no place for miracle, the virgin birth, the resurrection, the new birth, or the second coming of Christ. The young people inform their parents that they no longer believe these teachings of the Bible, because "science" has proved them untrue. If they go to Sunday-school at all the strife begins in the Sunday-school class, and the teachers find themselves confronted by aggressive unbelief in vigorous young minds. A young woman in Los Angeles came home from the public school to inform her parents that every teacher to whom she had recited that day ridiculed the Bible as effete and out of date. A young man and a young woman told me that they were returning home after their first year in the university without a particle of faith in the Biblical teachings which their parents loved better than life. I was in a Southern community to which a young man had returned from a Baptist college to tell his parents that he was done with the church and the superstitions for which it stood. I heard of another young man in a Northern town who had returned from another Baptist college and in deference to his parents' wish he attended church, but gave as his reason for not bowing his head in prayer, that he no longer believed in such things. And he said that three-fourths of the students in his college now held his views. There may be some communities in central Africa or distant parts of China, untouched by daily newspapers, religious weeklies, magazines or books, in which there is no such strife, but even they are becoming fewer every year.

Yes, my brother, the battle is on all over this earth, between evangelical Christianity which teaches the fundamentals of historic Christianity and the Modernism which denies these fundamentals on the ground that they have been superseded by the new knowledge which has come to us through Darwin and his followers. Among Northern Baptists and in England organized, evangelical Christianity has its back against the wall fighting for its life, and I stand ready to join any organization formed by earnest, trustworthy men who are willing to "contend for the faith once for all delivered."

That is Baptist testimony and what do you say to it? Dr. Dixon is a well informed man. Do you think that the Social Gospel has helped the Baptists much?

RUSSIA IS DOOMED BEYOND A DOUBT, UNLESS SHE REPENT.

Poor Russia! What is to become of her? She has committed many acts which condemn her in the estimation of the nations of Christendom, but she has committed one act, which we feel must bring upon her the displeasure of God. She is taking a stand against God and His people. Only recently she put to death a priest of the Catholic Church, and so far as we know, the only crime the man had committed was in taking a brave stand against the wild extravagances of the Soviet Government. He had the true interests of his country at heart and believing the Soviet Government was wrong, he dared to say so, and for this he was put to death by the Government. Then there was another priest of the same Church who had the courage of his convictions and he stood up and declared against certain acts of the Government, and for this he was condemned to death, and was expecting to lay down his life for the right as he saw it. Just then, he stood under sentence of death, the Government seemed to relent in some measure and so they commuted his death sentence to imprisonment for ten years at hard labor. The civilized people of Christendom were astounded at such a course and many of the Governmen's of the various countries entered strong protests against such murder by the Soviets, but nothing availed and the priest paid for the right with the price of his life. It is generally understood that Russia has undertaken more than she can manage now in that she has set herself aginst God and the religion of Jesus. She is doomed to an awful failure, for no nation has made it a point to fight against God without meeting a dreadful defeat, as we believe, Russia will do. Till she repen's and turns unto God she will travel a hard road and fight a conquering enemy—Russia must fail—she is doomed, and sooner or later she will find it out, for no nation which has defied God in its madness can hope to stand. One exchange puts it this way:

The attitude of the Soviet Government of Russia toward the Christian Church of the world, as manifested in the recent execution of Vicar General Butchavitch and the condemnation of Archbishop Zepliak, is the subject of an indignant protest issued recently by English clergymen, representing every Christian denomination in Great Britian. The protest is signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York, Cardinal Bourne, Rabbi Hertz, General Bramwell Boo'h, and other prominent religious leaders. Addressed to "all men and women of good will," this appeal exhorts those who have at heart the well-being of the world and the maintenance of religious liberty to register their condemnation of the Soviets' actions. "Hundreds of thousands of religious people," says the protest, "and the ministers of religion of all ranks and creeds, have been subjected to savage prosecution, the express purpose of which has been to root religion out of the land. The Central facts for which religion stands have been systematically outraged and insulted. The most sacred of religious festivals (Easter) has been made the occasion of blasphemous travesty." The appeal is made for the sake of the whole people of Russia, and for the preservation in their hearts of their faith in God, according to the signers, who then go on to say: "We represent many religious communions and many political opinions, but we are united in the indignation and horror with which we regard the present policy of systematic persecution of religion in all its forms. Such a policy cannot be tolerated in silence by those who value religion or liberty. Our protest will, we are confident, evoke a response everywhere on the part of those who have at heart the well-being of the world." It is strange how helpless the powerful Christian nations of the world seem to be in these days in the face of the most barbarous atrocities perpetrated upon their Christian brethren in Armenia, Russia and elsewhere. When the Boxer uprising against the Christians occurred in China some years ago, the great Powers of Europe, and the United States, very promptly and vigorously took hold of the situation and saved the lives of hundreds of Christian missionaries, as well as multitudess of Chinese converts to the Christian faith. But recently, while Armenian Christians are butchered by the thousands, and the Soviets carry on a cruel and relentless persecution of the Church in Russia, about all we seem able to do is to adopt resolutions and send forth appeals. To be sure that is about all the clergy of England, or any other nation, can do, and we honor them for this earnest protest which comes with such ringing emphasis from our British brethren. We would do well to raise our voices with theirs against such an intolerable situation. But what shall we say of our Governments? Is there nothing they can do to remedy these conditions? Shall Turkey and Russia be permitted to terrorize the world, while the mightiest nations of earth do no more than register a feeble diplomatic protest? If so, it would seem that the time is ripe for another crusade, to save the Church, and the world, from the powers of darkness. Otherwise, we may look for the coming of the Anti-Christ and his fiendish hordes of iniquity.

WHO MAKES THE PREACHER?

Many ask the question of certain preachers: "What is the secret of his power as a preacher?" There are many answers given, but in fact we believe few get the answer just right.

The Christian Guardian says:

"You cannot have a great preaching from a ministry trained by small audiences which habituate themselves to small occasions. We have felt this many times. Indeed, we never watch a great preacher in action before a large audience without feeling any man who cannot be a great preacher today has not got it in him. He is hopeless. Then we have thought of all the pastors over the country who have ambition to be preachers of Christ's Word. We recall what they are up against. Their inspiration on a Sabbath morning from the little group that gathers to hear them would not be enough to inflate a pocket balloon. And yet they are expected to grow eloquent, to display all their faculties in action under the most remarkable inspiration. They are expected to be imaginative, their language to flow with chaste diction and beautiful imagery, and over all must appear a heart-power that fires with enthusiasm all those who hear them. What a pathetic thing is the preacher straining to produce a great sermon over a little gathering of uninteresting men and women! He prepares for a camel and swallows a gnat. He strains for a mountain and brings forth a mouse."

We think that it will be generally conceded that there is an inspiration in a large audience, and there can be no doubt that continual ministering to a sympathetic and large congregation will have a reflex action upon the preacher stimulating him to his best endeavor; and there is just as little doubt that there is an intellectual frost that chills a man to the bone when he must face a host of empty benches and a dispirited handful of worshippers, knowing all the while that some, perhaps most, of his audience blame the empty benches upon the poor preaching. We all know something of this, and yet we are not prepared to admit that the great preacher is the product to any great degree of the congregation.

If this were true it would surely mean that the small audience would always be sure of a preacher of small calibre, and the large audience would always be sure of an ecclesiastical Demosthenes. Is it not rather true that while an audience may greatly stimulate a preacher yet greatness in the preacher depends upon the greatness of the soul within him and its reaction to the influences of the divine Spirit? Lincoln's great speeches were, in the early days, delivered to crowds of unlettered and uncultured men. Whitfield's peerless orations were addressed in the main to the unlettered and ignorant. The greatest Teacher of all preached some of His mightiest sermons to a handful of men or even to a solitary woman of low degree.

And the Methodist Church all over the world finds some of its most appreciative audiences in the little backwoods' meeting-house, where scarcely more than a score gather to worship God. And when the preacher knows that some of his congregation have come miles to church and will think over his sermon all the week; and when he realizes that these men and women on civilization's rim would do anything for the preacher they love, he would surely be less than human if he did not feel inspired to do his very best. Thank God inspiration is not restricted to the crowd. The greatness of a congregation cannot be estimated by the number of heads, but rather by the kind of men and by their need.

And yet when we have said this we revert to the first thought that there is inspiration in numbers, for there is a certain element of truth in it. When the congregation should number 200 and there is a scant fifty the 150 absentees have done their best to spoil the sermon. Preachers are human and it happens only too often that we forget the fifty faithful ones, and grow disheartened as we think of the 150 absentees. If we have a preacher it is up to us to stand by him. If we want him to preach good sermons it is our business at least to provide him with good congregations. These empty seats have broken many a preacher's heart. Regularity in pay is a good thing, but regularity in attendance is also a good thing. We are persuaded that if our people realized just how much it means to a preacher there would be few absentees.—Christian Guardian.

May we have just a word also? We think all the reasons given above may have in them parts, and minor parts, of the answer, but the real question of the preacher's power, or rather the secret of his power has not yet been presented. The answers above will do pretty well for the human side of the question, but that is the small side of the question.

What makes a great preacher? Other things being equal, that is to say, the human qualifications being good does not make him a great preacher, but the human qualifications being good, then two other things go largely into the matter of making a great preacher: Viz: The man with good human qualifications if he keep full of the Word and full of the Holy Spirit will be a great preacher.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Monday night, April 30th, the Philathea Class, of which Lieutenant Governor J. E. West is teacher and Mrs. Emma Barbee president, gave a reception to the Baraca Class, the officers and teachers of the Sunday School, the Church choir and the orchestra, of which Miss Nina Oliver is leader. There were about three hundred present, and the evening was filled with music, addresses, reading and refreshments. The orchestra tendered several interesting pieces. Mrs. Barbee made a splendid welcome address, and W. H. Burchett, president of Baraca Class, responded. Mrs. Ray Saunders and Mrs. J. D. Twitty sang a duet; L. P. Holland spoke on "Co-Operation"; Omar Parker sang a solo; Col. J. E. West spoke on W. B. Wellons, D. D.; Mrs. I. W. Johnson gave an amusing reading; W. S. Beamon, superintendent of Sunday School, talked on "Sunday School"; H. Woodward, on "Call of Abraham"; S. E. Everett, on "Hatch-Patch"; quartet by Mrs. Telza Miller, Miss Julia Brinkley, W. W. Ballard and R. J. Brinkley; J. M. Darden spoke on "Influence of Woman's Organizations," and Dr. J. E. Rawls on "Woman." Mrs. W. S. Beamon, Mrs. Telza Miller and Miss Julia Brinkley sang "Angel Voices." At the close of the exercises, ice cream, home-made cakes, nuts and mints were served to all present. The ladies had decorated the Sunday School room with wild and cultivated flowers, and the big crowd enjoyed the hours from 8 to beyond 11 o'clock.

Altogether, the occasion was social, religious and inspirational, as well as hospitable. Social life finds its highest expression, as well as its deepest joy, in religious exercises and associations. Entertainment does not require the coarse, the sensual, or the doubtful for human enjoyment. The nature of man is such that enjoys the best things most, when he has the opportunity, and such joy is not followed by regret or remorse. The test of any experience is its satisfaction and duration. The Scripture represents the "pleasures of sin for a season." If people would spend as much time and as much vitality and money in religious exercises as they do in worldly amusements they would find more lasting enjoyment.

"Rejoice in the Lord always: again I say, rejoice." Religion was never intended to reduce, but to increase, human enjoyment. Long-facedness is no sign of regeneration, and a sad countenance is no sign of real piety. "A merry heart hath a continual feast." It is within the scope of Christian experience to be happy in this present life as a foretaste of that bliss that awaits the faithful in the world to come.

On the occasion which this letter reports, those who enjoyed it most were the women who gave the entertainment. They had worked for days decorating the Sunday School room, baking cakes, getting the speakers and singers together, serving their guests, and thinking of how their guests enjoyed the feast. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." All action reacts, and hence what we do for others acts upon us; and such reaction is of the same moral quality as the action itself. The hosts and the guests enjoy together.

ELON LETTER.

The Elon letter this week is the report on Education adopted at the extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention. The report was as follows:

"Christian education—Christ through education—is the hope of the world. A nation that has separated education and religion must find a solution to the problem such separation has entailed. A democracy cannot exist without a citizenry of character, and character apart from religion, all experience teaches is impossible.

"This means but one thing for the Christian Church—the strengthening of her agencies of education. The home, the Church, the college, with all their auxiliary organizations and institutions, must be federated into a unified program of Christian education. Our young people should be educated in our colleges, and our colleges must be made in every way worthy of their support and patronage.

The Crisis at Elon.

"In view of these great principles, the crisis precipitated at Elon on January 18, 1923, demands of our people a full measure of sacrifice and loyalty. The burning of the administration building and records, together with the library and auditorium, was a blow well calculated temporarily to close down the college. But we are happy to record that only one day was lost by our college in adjusting herself to the new situation, and that not a student left on account of the fire. This is a situation calling for satisfaction and congratulation on the part of our people.

"On January 24th the Board of Trustees assembled in extraordinary session and faced the crisis with heroic determination. They voted to rebuild on a $300,000 basis, being challenged to do so by the citizens of Alamance County, who proposed to pay one-third of such an amount. In addition, they voted to raise $300,000 for endowment. Both decisions seemed absolutely necessary in view of the situation confronting the college.

"What has transpired since has gratified every heart. We are yet some distance from our goal, but we are facing the future heroically, hopefully, confidently. We urge our people to sacrifice as never before for our college, that a disaster which seemingly threatened Elon's very existence may prove a blessing in disguise. Many have expressed the conviction that it would be so, but unless our people support such a conviction with sacrificial giving it will not be so. Again, we urge them to sacrifice nobly for our college and full endorsement of the trustees' action is hereby recorded.

Bethlehem College.

"The Board of Trustees of Bethlehem College have let the contract for their first building for the sum of $14,000 and plan to open the institution to students this fall. The plan permits the basement to be used for dining-room, kitchen, furnace, and storage, with the first floor for offices, recitations, library, president's home and laboratory work, with the third floor as a dormitory for lady teachers and lady students. The men students will room in homes nearby, but dine in the boarding-department.

"Bethlehem College is to be of junior college grade, with a full standard high school course preceding. It will fill a large need in our educational work, and we should give it every encouragement.

College Day.

"College Day was celebrated in our Churches during the summer of 1922. The people enjoyed the programs and great good was accomplished. This is a custom that should be kept up perpetually. Some Churches can use one month to better advantage than another. We, therefore, suggest that June, July and August be considered college months and that Elon and Bethlehem Colleges both be represented in the programs from now on.

Elon Trustees.

"We recommend that the Secretary of State of North Carolina be requested to amend the charter of Elon College so as to permit a total of thirty trustees instead of twenty-four as at present, with a quorum of ten instead of eight as at present."

The Convention Adds Two Items.

The Convention added two important items, as follows:

1. That every member of our brotherhood be given opportunity to make an offering for Elon and Bethlehem Colleges during the "College-Day" period this summer, and the members are urged to make the offering average $1.00 each, 25 per cent to go to Bethlehem and 75 per cent to Elon.

2. That the Boards of Trustees of these two colleges be authorized at an agreed time in the future to arrange for a "Library Day" in each Church for their libraries, and that the goal be 25,000 books.

A WORLD-WIDE CHALLENGE.

WANTED: A MAN.

There is a standing advertisement over the door of every profession, occupation or calling and even in the matrimonial papers we meet with the same—"Wanted: A man." In the time of Israel's national decline, Jeremiah cried out: "Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem and seek in the broad places thereof if ye can find a man." In ancient Athens where every new thing was sought and reason was crowned king, Diogenes could be seen standing in the market place at noontide with a lighted lantern in his hand, crying: "Hear me, O men"; and when a crowd surrounded him, he scornfully said: "I called for men, not pygmies." Not every suit of clothes you meet, clean and pressed, has a man in it; no, it takes more than dress to make a man. The world and the Church are ever looking for men—men of character, men who are not for sale, men who are true to the core. The objects for which these ancient prophets were seeking, seemed to be scarce in their day, and they are not too numerous in our day and time. While we resided in Tampa, Fla., a young man was brought before the court for grand larceny, and it was clear from the evidence that he was guilty of the charge, but his father had the money and the jury rendered the decision: "Not guilty." The next morning could be seen, painted in large letters of red, by an unknown hand, on the concrete in front of the large custom-house and post-office this inscription: "God, give us men for jurors." And believe me it took some scrubbing to get it off, and as I saw the workmen at their job I wished in my very heart that this sentiment could be so deeply impressed upon every American's heart that it could never be erased.

It is hard to find the right man for any department of life, although millions are out of employment. A man whose individuality will be maintained in the crowd, with the courage of his convictions, to say "No," though the world say "Yes." A man who is not cursed with some small defect, which neutralizes his powers and curtails his usefulness. One who sees self-development, education and culture, discipline and drill, character and manhood, in his occupation, or in other words, "A man who is larger than his calling." Wanted, a man who is symmetrically rounded out in his education and development, who has not brought all of his powers in one channel, who is broad-minded, not taking half views of things, one who mixes common sense with his theories, a man who prefers substance to show, and one who regards his good name as a priceless treasure. The world and the Church want men who are educated all over, whose nerves are brought to their acutest sensibility, whose brain is cultured, keen incisive, broad; whose hands are dexterous; whose eyes are alert, sensitive, microscopic; whose heart is tender, magnanimous and true.

In one religious denomination there are a thousand vacant pulpits, a thousand preachers standing idle, while a thousand Church committees look in vain for men to fill those pulpits; this is an indication of the largeness of the opportunities of the age, and also a crying need for good men with the best training possible.

Men need to be found who are strong and stalwart, with highest hope and purest honor, who will trample self underfoot, who will not shame their mothers, nor fail their brothers. We should not look too far away, for the men who may go far beyond us in character and achievements may be in our own home, or community or in Elon College today. Sir Humphrey Davy's greatest discovery was Michael Faraday, who went far beyond him in scientific research and achievement. Andrew's best day's work was when he brought Peter to Jesus; although he was cast into the shade by the great achievements of his brother Peter. Those who labored to reform Gough, Reynolds and Murphy have rendered inestimable service to mankind and will surely be rewarded.

In the education of our youth, our colleges should keep in mind that the common vocation of all is the profession of humanity, and bring everything to bear upon this one objective: How they can best prepare them for this service. In the celebrated essay on education by Rousseau, we find: "According to the order of nature, men being equal, their common vocation is the profession of humanity; and whoever is well educated to discharge the duty of a man cannot be badly prepared to fill any of those offices that have a relation to him. It matters little whether my pupil is designed for the army, the pulpit, or bar. Nature has destined us to the offices of human life antecedent to our destination concerning society. To live is the profession I would teach him. When I have done with him, it is true he will be neither a soldier, a lawyer, nor a divine. Let him first be a man—fortune may remove him from one rank to another as she pleases, he will be always found in his place."

Nature, too, demands that man be at the top of his condition. There is an inherent love in the human mind for wholeness, a demand that man shall come up to the highest standard; and there is an inherent protest or contempt for prevertable deficiency. Stand upon the shore of any sea while the tide is coming in, and you will see one wave reaching higher than any other, then receding, and for some time none that follows comes up to its mark, but after a while the whole sea is there and beyond it. So, now and then comes a man head and shoulders above his fellow-men, showing that nature has not lost her ideal.

With all the evils, imperfections, and incompleteness that have been set down to our account as a race, the fact remains the same that, so far as we have any record, God has never lacked a man to "stand in a gap" where the common good of humanity was at stake, in any dispensation of the world. In the event of the flood, Noah became the seviour of the race; Abraham was called the "Father of the Faithful" because he obeyed God and went out to make a mighty nation; God directed the selling of Joseph into Egypt, that he might be the preserver of his people; God found in Moses a great liberator and lawgiver; in David a great king who should never want for a man to sit upon his throne till Christ should come; God found in Esther the highest type of womanhood, and a preserver of the royal seed; John the Baptizer shut the door of the old dispensation and opened the door of the new; Jesus came to redeem the race in the "fullness of the times"; Paul opened the door of the Gospel to the Gentiles; Martin Luther was the father of the Reformation. God raised up Washington to be the "father of this country"; E. P. Lovejoy to champion the abolition of slavery; Neal Dow to espouse the cause of prohibition of the liquor traffic; Lincoln to steer the ship of state during the dark days of the Civil War; and Woodrow Wilson to carry us safely through the awful struggle of the World War.

That our Church might do her duty in the wake of the World War, during the reconstruction period and throughout the years to come, God put it into the hearts of Dr. W. H. Denison, Dr. J. O. Atkinson and a few others to launch the greatest movements that have ever taxed the energies and attention of the Christian Church—the Forward Movement and Men and Millions Forward Movement.

Persons who may not have seen before that it was God's plan to have Dr. W. A. Harper remain at the head of our educational institution at Elon College, through its dire calamity and perpetuate its good work and name, can do so now with eyes half open, for the progress already made for a bigger and better Elon is far greater than what we suspected, for the short period of time the work has been going on.

"Wanted: men—not systems fit and wise, not faith with rigid eyes, not wealth in mountain piles, not power with gracious smiles, not even the potent pen. Wanted: men"! All the world cries, Where is the man who will save us? Will some man vested with civil and religious power and authority forthwith step forward and make his bow, expounding a feasible program, that the nations will, beyond any question, adopt, and when carried into execution will make this "everybody's world"—one universal brotherhood? Who will step forward with a plan that will snatch victory from apparent defeat and bring about order and harmony out of the chaotic conditions existing in Europe today; that will cause Germany to meet her just obligations and France to see that she is imposing on the good will and commercial rights of other nations by her armed occupation of the Ruhr? Who will endeavor to cope with the international, social and economic civil and religious problems of our times? We need a uniform marriage law, which will, if enforced, develop the race and reduce divorces to a minimum. Since this country alone spends annually two hundred times more money for mere luxuries than for missions, and one-half of the race is in dreadful need, waste and extravagance should be reduced to the lowest quantity. Governments are tottering because of incompetent rulers, others are weak because controlled by the money powers, while the one great drawback to world-wide evangelism is denominationalism. The Church will never fulfill her mission in the world until she answers Christ's prayer—"that they may be one."

Who will advance with a scheme that will keep the machinery set in motion by the Forward Movements of the Christian Church running and with still greater efficiency after the expiration of the time limit—five-year subscriptions? The world and the Church are looking for supermen. Who will be the men of the hour? May God give us men a time like this demands, with ready hands, strong minds, great hearts, true faith; those whom the lust of office will not kill and the spoils of office cannot buy. With faces that never turn pale at the accuser's voice, with bosoms that never throb with fear of exposure, with hearts that might be turned inside out and disclose no strain of dishonor. To have done no men wrong, to have put their signatures to no paper to which the purest angel in heaven might not have been an attesting witness; to walk and live, unseduced, within arm's length of what is not their own, with nothing between their desire and its gratification but the invisible law of rectitude—this is to be men.

THE BIRTHDY OF A VETERAN OF THE CROSS.

On the 24th of April, at his home, near Roanoke, Ala., Rev. C. M. Dollar celebrated his seventieth birthday with his relatives and friends. Eight of Brother Dollar's ten children were present. The youngest daughter was detained at home, and the youngest son, Jesse Dollar, a ministerial student at Elon College, could not be there. Brother Dollar has fifty living grandchildren, forty-seven of whom spent the day with him. Other guests were Rev. G. D. Hunt, Rev. J. H. Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Keeble, Mr. Chewning and Miss Lucy Eldredge.

After a morning of visiting and the delicious birthday dinner, Brother Dollar spoke of what the day meant to him, of his joy in welcoming his children home and of his heart's greatest desire that some day they might meet in a great reunion when not one would be missing and there would be no parting. At his request, Miss Lucy Eldredge read a letter from Mr. Jesse Dollar, of Elon College, bringing his message to his family on this day. Following the reading, as the letter requested, Rev. J. D. Dollar led in prayer. Splendid addresses were delivered by Rev. Hunt and Rev. Hughes, and a number of inspiring hymns were sung.

This birthday reunion was a great event. It was a day of joy to Rev. Dollar and his good wife. It was a day of inspiration to all who were permitted to enjoy it with them, to see their splendid family and to think of the great work which has been done through them and will be done through their children for God and the Church.

The Christian Church in Alabama owes much to the services of this "veteran of the Cross," and his friends will unite in wishing for him many more happy days with his children and friends.

THE DURHAM CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Durham Christian Church has recently experienced a delightful revival season. The meetings began on April 8th. Mr. Alfred Shumate, of Lima, Ohio, conducted the singing during the entire series. Mr. Shumate has a charming personality, as well as a voice of unusually fine quality. His solo work is fine. He knows how to get folks to sing with him, and, best of all, he knows how to lead folks into a spiritual frame of mind through song. His services added much to the meeting. Dr. C. H. Rowland came Monday afternoon and did the preaching for two weeks. Dr. Rowland's sermons were in his accustomed forceful and appealing style, and were greatly enjoyed by the large congregations that came out to hear him. The attendance and interest manifested throughout the meeting was fine. A large number entered whole-heartedly into personal work. There were about forty professions of faith, about ten reconsecrations, and forty-one to unite with the local Church. The Church was built up and strengthened in faith. We appreciate the fine work done by the visiting brethren. And we thank God for the gracious manifestations of his Spirit in our midst.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

DEAR DR. ATKINSON:

While teaching a music school at New Harmony, I felt it my duty to try and organize a Woman's Missionary Society at that place, as I felt it would be a great blessing. I began to talk to the kind women and girls about it and told them what a good work it was. They became interested in it, and I wrote you for the literature, which I received a few days after writing for it. I thank you very, very much for the literature and your early reply.

We had the pastor, Rev. C. W. Carter, to announce that we would meet to organize Saturday, April 7th. We met Saturday A. M. and, by the guidance of our dear Lord, we organized the Woman's Missionary Society at New Harmony Christian Church. How wonderful it was to see the interest and spirit of God manifested there that day. Devotional service was conducted by the writer. Subject, "The Work of Women." Scripture reading, Romans 16:1-3; Mark 16:15-20. Prayer. After this a business session was held and officers for the year were elected. Miss Etta Lashley was elected president; Mrs. Edna Orr, vice-president; Mrs. Rada McCormick, secretary and treasurer. Program committee: Mrs. Annier McCormick, Mrs. Lara Devaughan. Membership committee: Miss Montana Lashley, Mrs. Edna Orr and Mrs. Etta Edmondson. Dues were paid in, also a special offering. Program was provided and read for the next meeting, May 5, 1923. The society closed with a chain of prayer by all present, and a hymn, "Revive Us Again." There being no further business, the meeting adjourned.

I am certainly thankful for the opportunity that women and girls have now in working for Christ, the upbuilding of His cause and kingdom. Am trusting Him, and asking Christians to pray that we may do greater things for Him in the future than we have ever done.

Very sincerely,
MISS SIDDIE LATHAM.

THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION IN EXTRAORDINARY SESSION.

"Christian Union" was the engrossing theme at the morning session of the Southern Christian Convention during its second day.. The Christian Church has always stood for Christian union, and this fact was emphasized by President Smith in his annual address to the Convention concerning the report of the Commission on Christian Union and the discussion following it.

The report of the Commission on Christian Union was submitted through its Secretary, Dr. W. A. Harper. This report set forth the status of the question of closer federation and co-operation of the Christian and Free Will Baptist Churches in the South. On February 12th, a commission from these two Churches met in the city of Raleigh, N. C., and drafted a series of ten agreements. These agreements were submitted to the Southern Christian Convention session today, and were fully ratified.

These agreements were as follows:

1. That Jesus is the Head of His Church.
2. That the Bible is the sufficient rule of faith and practice.
3. That Christian character is the proper test of fellowship in the Church of Christ.
4. That the right of private judgment or the liberty of conscience is a privilege and duty of all.
5. That the reciprocity of ministers and members between our Churches is desirable.
6. That the name of the Church of Christ is a matter for His followers to determine, though Christian is a proper name for all believers.
7. That the local Church should be autonomous.
8. That fraternal delegates should be interchanged for our public assemblies.
9. That we should write for each other's periodicals and visit and use each other's institutions.
10. That a united Protestantism is the goal of our Churches.

Following the report, addresses were delivered by Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va.; Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., and Rev. Thomas E. Beamon, of Goldsboro, N. C. Following general discussion, it was decided to continue to cultivate closer relations and the co-operation of all denominations, to send fraternal delegates to the general gatherings of sister denominations and to invite sister denominations to send fraternal delegates to the general meetings of the Christian Church.

The address of President Smith was entitled "Our Denominational Honor." In the very opening of his address, Dr. Smith declared "The Christian Church stands for some very definite things—it stands for union, it stands for the union of all the followers of Christ, it has never been what you would term a narrow denomination, and yet it has always been a denomination: a denomination with the broadest and most evangelical principles possible."

Following his address, President Smith made the following definite recommendations to the Convention:

1. That we meet in biennial session as heretofore.
2. That the Convention officially appoint an official board that shall meet in annual session and whose business it shall be to transact the business of the Convention in the interim and seek to put into effect the plans of the Convention.

This board shall be constituted by the President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, President and Secretary of Mission Board, Chairmen of the Boards of Religious Education, Temperance, Superannuation, Woman's Board of Missions, Publications and the Chairman of the Board of Trustees for the Orphanage, the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the Presidents of Elon and Bethlehem Colleges, the Presidents of all the Conferences constituting this body and five members at large to be elected by this Convention, two to be elected for two years, two for four years and one for six years.

3. That Elon College shall be designated as the permanent meeting place for the Convention. That the traveling expenses of all delegates, living within the bounds of the Convention, be prorated; the laymen prorating their expenses, and the ministers theirs. That the college be asked to give free lodging to all delegates and to provide meals at actual cost. The Convention to meet on the day following commencement and remain in session as long as may be necessary.

4. Be it further resolved, That, inasmuch as every Conference will know the number of its delegates and the approximate traveling expenses of these delegates, that each Conference be asked to add a sufficient amount to its Conference fund to pay the actual traveling expenses of its delegates to and from the Convention.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session was given over to the subject of Christian education. Reports were submitted by the Board of Education and the Board of Religious Education. Elon College received cordial and sympathetic support from the Convention because of its recent disastrous fire, and full endorsement given to its program for rebuilding and enlargement. Bethlehem College, of Wadley, Ala., was also highly commended and provision for its future financially was made by the Convention.

The Board of Religious Education recommended an additional Field Secretary for Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work, and the coordination of this board with the college boards of the Convention.

Tuesday's Session.

The Convention opened at 3 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, with worship conducted by Dr. C. H. Rowland, and a service of welcome conducted by the local Church, with Dr. J. P. Barrett, pastor, in charge.

Tuesday evening's session was given over to a sermon on "The Ministry of Pain," by Rev. E. B. Flory, of Norfolk, Va. Dr. Flory took issue with the pleasure economy of our day. He considered pain an essential principle for progress in Christian civilization. He felt that international bootlegging was a blessing in disguise, because it would make it necessary for America to set forth on a crusade to make the world dry.

Missions, home and foreign, engaged the attention of the third day of the Southern Christian Convention in session here. The report of the Board of Missions was submitted by Lieutenant Governor J. E. West, of Virginia, and showed progress in all lines of missionary effort. Particularly gratifying was the outlook reported from the mountain work in Virginia, and the evidences of progress in Porto Rico and Japan.

The Christian Church in Raleigh was voted $25,000 in its enlargement program by the board, and other substantial gifts were made to other Churches in various parts of the Convention.

Addresses were made at the morning session by Rev. T. E. White, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, John King, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein and others, particularly emphasizing the financial and life recruit service of the Church. Large emphasis, too, was given to the consideration of evangelism as basic in the development of the Church and its enterprises.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session was given over to the consideration of stewardship and the Christian Orphanage. Dr. Warren H. Dennison, Stewardship Secretary, gave a powerful oration on "Stewardship and Tithing." Mr. W. K. Holt, of Burlington, President of the Orphanage Board, and Superintendent Charles D. Johnston, of the Orphanage, were heard by the Convention.

Wednesday Evening Session.

The Wednesday evening session was featured by an address by the Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, entitled "Applied Christianity." Dr. Harrell said that the problem of the Church had always been how to apply spiritual power to material substance. He declared that in the best sense of the word God is a materialist, and that the finest instance of materialism in the world was the incarnation, wherein God Himself united with flesh in the person of Jesus Christ. Dr. Harrell declared that it is useless to hope for Pentecost or to expect it to return until the membership of the Church is ready to sacrifice all for the growth of the Church, as the early disciples gave all that they had for the spread of the cause in their day. He also suggested that the unpardonable sin might be the declaration on the part of a professing Christian that he had done all that he could for the kingdom, whereas he had not. He instanced Ananias and Sapphira as illustrating this point.

Following the address by Dr. Harrell, Dr. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary, gave an illustrated lecture on Porto Rico. Preceding Dr. Minton's lecture, Mr. G. C. Donovan, Alumni General Secretary of Elon College, gave a few slides illustrating the recent disaster there in the burning of the administration building.

Permanent Meeting Place.

The Convention has also decided to make Elon College the permanent meeting place for its biennial sessions. The Convention will meet on Wednesday after the fourth Sunday in May, beginning with 1924, which is the day following the Elon commencement, and will remain in session throughout the week. The expenses of the delegates attending the Convention will be pro rated, so that all who attend will pay the same thing, and the Conferences have been asked by the Convention, through a formal vote, to provide funds to pay the pro rata expenses of their delegates.

It is also proposed to amend the Constitution in 1924 in such a way as to permit a general board, which will meet in the years that the Convention is not in session, to carry out the recommendations of the Convention through a unified program.

The closing sessions of the Southern Christian Convention were crowded with business to the very last minute. The Convention has made definite plans toward the raising of $50,000 a year for Convention purposes. This is a great forward step, making possible larger work for the future, necessary to meet the tremendous demands made by the growth of the Church. The opportunities are larger than ever before for the Christian Church to be of service and to extend its borders. The report on the future financial program was made by Mr. John King, of Suffolk, Va. This new plan of work will place a definite assessment per member upon the whole Convention, rather than to permit each department make its own appeal.

Lieutenant Governor J. E. West, of Virginia, in a stirring appeal, reviewed the failures of the Church in the past as it neglected to enter the cities, but that the Mission Board has been changing that condition very rapidly and is now placing much of its effort toward putting adequate and beautiful buildings in the cities, such as Richmond and Norfolk, Va., and Raleigh, N. C. This is but the beginning of a new program for the Christian Church.

The Convention has planned that every Church within its bounds shall have an opportunity to make an offering during the summer for Elon College, N. C., and Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala. Of the funds raised in this manner, 75 per cent will be given to Elon College and 25 per cent to Bethlehem College. In addition, a "Library Day" will be observed in every Church in the early fall, in which every Church member will be asked to contribute one book to replace the library recently destroyed at Elon, and to begin a library at Bethlehem.

At the evening session, Miss Lucy Eldredge, Secretary of Religious Education, presented the program of the Summer Chautauqua for Christian Workers, to be held at Elon College, N. C., July 30th to August 5th. This Chautauqua is to be a combination of class periods on all phases of Christian work in the morning. The afternoons will be devoted to recreation, and the evenings to community sings and popular addresses. A large delegation is expected to be in attendance at this Chautauqua, and Christian workers from all denominations will be most cordially welcome to make this their place of vacation. The teachers for this summer school are of excellent reputation, coming from many States.

The evening session of the Convention was addressed by Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Del., who spoke on "The Denomination's Responsibility in Evangelism" and pleaded for a continual program of soul-winning, and stated that every Church could and ought to double its membership every ten years if pastor and people both hand in hand do their work. He stated that if the Church members believe what they say they believe—that those who do not confess the Lord Christ are lost—that they would be compelled to expend every effort to reach the unchurched, and that a revival season should only be the climax of perpetual evangelistic effort throughout the year.

The other address of the evening was made by Dr. W. D. Parry, pastor of the Raleigh Christian Church. Dr. Parry's congregation is now erecting a handsome building to replace their old one. His subject for the evening was "The Responsibility of the Local Church in Evangelism" in which he pleaded for a real and consecrated devotion to the powers of the Christ.

It is most likely that the next Convention session will be held in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. Dr. L. E. Smith, President of the Convention, is pastor of Christian Temple, which is now erecting a new building at a cost of a quarter million dollars. The Convention is looking forward with great pleasure to that session in this wonderful plant in the city of Norfolk.

MARY ANDREWS,
Asst. Secy. & Press Reporter.
Henderson, N. C.

Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Del., is to deliver three lectures on "Evangelism" at the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College July 30 to August 5.

THE TRINITY.

SUBSTANCE, FORM AND FORCE.

(Series III.)

Everything in the universe, so far as we know, exists substantially; that is, everything is made of some sort of substance, and every substance has some sort of form, and also a force. This is what we call substantial existence. We can conceive of nothing, and certainly we know of nothing, which has not these three elements. Everything is substance, and substance has form, and it also has attributes of qualities or energies which it exercises and which we call "force." Everything we may call to mind is exhausted in these three elements. As it is true of any particular thing, so also is it true of every atom of that thing; and if it is true of every atom of everything, it is also true of every atom of the universe.

The atom is a very small thing; it cannot be divided, and no microscope has ever enabled man to see it, but it is substance just the same, and it must have form also, and it certainly has force and as much so as the biggest sun that gems the heavens. Therefore, the whole universe, a one thing, is three things, and the three things make the one, and thus the universe is a trinity.

Likewise, all life is a trinity. Let us take living nature—the Protoplasm, for instance, the lowest form of life. There we have the same existence—substance, there is also a form, and it has also a force, and these make the living thing a reality, called protoplasm. Follow the sequence on up to man and the same realities obtain. Man is substance, he is form and he is force, and there the whole analysis is exhausted, and therefore all living things are in three, and completed in three and is not complete except in the three. Thus, living nature, a one thing, is three—a trinity.

Now, it must be noted that in all this the substance is not the form, neither is it the force. The form is not the substance, neither is it the force. And the force is not the substance nor the form. They are all separate and apart and have their individual functions; but they are dependent upon one another to function. Substance determines form, and is dependent upon form to express itself, and there is no substance apart from force, and no force apart from substance, yet the force is not the substance, and the substance is not the force. So, then, in every object, animate or inanimate, there are three things—substance, form and force. No one of them can be changed into the other. Each permanently acts for itself, and yet each is essential to the one reality of which it is a part.

In consequence of these facts, would it be absurd to infer that, in some supreme sense, they belong to God? If it is true that all works of nature are created by God, and He is pleased to dwell in the universe in them, and to express Himself through them, is it not also true that the universal characteristics of these things which He has made are the universal characteristics of Himself. A man's body expresses his character. The product of the artist expresses the character of his ideals. All right! Then, God is expressing himself in the things He has made, and having made them of the three characteristics mentioned, they express Him in the same threefold manner. If this is to be taken as a type of his own character, He must have in Him the identical three characteristics, viz: "substance, form and force."

It is through these mediums that He has wrought and completed our salvation. He Himself is the substance; the Son, Jesus Christ, is His form, and the Holy Ghost is His power. All these function individually, and yet they function as God. Not a one of them exists without the other, and yet all exist in one and, to us, complete his reality, just as a man's body, and form and force is himself.

These laws of reality are true of inanimate objects. How much more so it must be of a conscious being, and how much more so still it must be of the supremely conscious being, man! His substance is a conscious substance, his form is a conscious form, and his force is a conscious force —that is, each of these three parts is conscious of itself and is also conscious of each other. For instance, you cannot break your arm or cut your flesh without its being known to all the three, and all three are brought into action to heal the wound. Therefore, you have in you three distinct and separate entities which are conscious of an inseparable unity of which they are a part. It is the consciousness of that distinctness, and of that oneness that determines personality. In other words, man must be a conscious substance, and a conscious form, and a conscious force, to round out what others see of him, called his personality.

Now, God is a divine Being, and unless He is less than we are, we must conclude that He is consciously and divinely substantial, with whom there is a consciously divine form, and of whom also there is a conscious divine power. We are told that "God was in Christ manifesting himself to the world." If so, Christ must be the form of God. We are told that the Holy Spirit is the teacher, the giver of power, etc. If so, the Holy Ghost must be the power of God. And what would He be to us if we did not have Christ as his form (manifesting) and the Holy Ghost as his force? It takes them all to complete Him in our lives.

The Rev. Dr. Lloyd uses an apt illustration of this in the horse-shoe magnet. He says: "Bring the positive poles of the magnet near to a needle. What happens? The needle springs to the magnet, at least that is what seems to happen. What really happens is that the magnet force of the iron proceeds from the iron to the needle and draws the needle to the magnet; and yet the force in the magnet is not spent—it continues to abide in the magnet in all its fullness. Use the magnet all you please, and its power is never diminished."

God, without changing His nature, sends forth his Son, with all His power to draw all men unto Him. While doing so, He never loses His energy. It is immanent and operative in all the forces of the innumerable worlds, of the countless creatures of those worlds, and you and me who are his children, and yet it never diminishes. He has promised, "I will draw all men unto Me," and we all look for this to be done.

Now, we must distinguish between form and shape. Shape does not need to be explained. It is quite understood by all, and an attempt to explain it would be confusing. All shapes are included in round, square and angular, but these mean very little to us in eternal relations. Form is different, for it is applied to living things. It is not merely a visible shape, but, as applied to man, it is something that immediately relates him to the rest of nature, and is not merely existing and subsisting, but it is wrapped up in what we know as individuality, personality, character, spirit, etc., and it is determined by mentality. The form of God is not shape existing and subsisting in eternal relations, but it is His expression in the world.

The form of Christ, spoken of, is not a shape eminating from God, but it is a soul from the Father, and it is that necessary "I am" of Him that makes Him Mediator between God and all that is not God, and in that form is all the woo-ings of God to win the world to Him. The Bible speaks of that form as follows: "Existing in the form of God" (Phil. 2:6); "The very image of His substance" (Heb. 1:3); "He took upon Himself the form of a servant." If in these He had meant "shape," we could not understand, for the shape of a servant is like that of other folks. But when we understand that the form of a servant embodies humility, obedience, sacrifice, suffering, untiring service, devotion, etc., we conclude that form must be a spiritual thing, and that the form of God in Christ embodies all that God is in His character.

Thus, Jesus unites in Himself both the divine and the human nature, and is thereby able to represent man before God in all of man's faults and failures; and He is also able to present God to man in all His perfections; and it is in this way that, by His atoning sacrifice, Christ removes all barriers between God and sinful man.

He is more than this. The psalmist said: "By the hand of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the hosts of them by the breath of His mouth" (33:6). If nature claims Him as Father, Christ the form of God must be a Mediator not only between God and man, but between God and all creation—all nature. He must be the mediating agent of the Maker of all things, and that eternal spirit which proceeds through these into the universe must be God the power.

The Scriptures say that "God is a spirit." If it is determined that He is substance, form and force, then we have a spirit with substance, form and force—and does any one deny that? The body of our Lord, after the resurrection, was a spiritual body, was it not? It was also a substantial body. To believe this is not confusing, because, as such, He is infinite spirit substance, infinite spirit form, and infinite spirit force; so that to say that God is Father, Son and Holy Spirit is perfectly natural, and that all three are equal in majesty and power is undeniable, because they are one and the same thing, and things equal to the same thing are equal to each other.

God is first as the source and the substance. Jesus is second, among men in time and place, as the manifestor of the life of God, and the Holy Ghost (who was not revealed until after Christ) is third as the communicated life and power of God. This is not unnatural. In a tree we have the roots first, the stem second, and the leaves (the fruit) third. The root is the parent of the tree. In the spring we have the spring, the stream, and the refreshing. The spring is the parent of the stream, and reviving qualities which proceed from both refresh and germinate the vegetation on the banks of the stream. So we have God as an eternal spring, Jesus an eternal stream and the Holy Ghost as an eternal refreshing.

In this treatise I have attempted to describe and explain, in terms of modern science, the sublime Being of God as He exists in the trinity; how that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." And my chief endeavor has been to write with such simplicity that any one reading may grasp the meaning of God with a growing understanding, and I hope I have succeeded.

Your salvation may not depend upon your knowledge of the trinity; and it may seem useless to be discussing dogmatics, but since to know the truth is to set one free, so to know more of God gives one a supreme advantage, a greater power to do, and a decided advance toward the day and time when we shall see Him face to face and be like Him.

OUR PREACHERS AND OUR READING.

By William Thornton Whitsett.

Our preachers fill a large place in the life of our people. We are safe in saying that in no section of all our country do the ministers of the Gospel exert a larger influence than here in the South. Our population is largely a native population, and it comes of lines of ancestors who have given a large place to religious worship for generations. Ministers preaching week after week to large gatherings; meeting them in the work of prayer-meeting services, and visiting constantly in our homes, are in constant, close touch with practically all classes and conditions of our people. In almost every community the ministers are frequently visiting the schools, talking before the student body, mingling in our fraternal organizations, and in all these various ways they are in very intimate touch with us from day to day, and from week to week. Such ideas and ideals as our ministers may have may thus be easily communicated to our people, and a large per cent of those who hear will be ready to accept any reasonable suggestions that may be offered by the ministers.

This condition suggests the very large field for service that the minister may fill in giving attention to the reading matter that should go into the homes of our people. It goes without saying that the minister is supposed to be a man given to reading and study himself. It is presumed that he is a constant reader of the newspapers that he may keep in touch with the current affairs of the day in which his work is cast; it is further taken for granted that he is a constant buyer of such of the new books as he finds he can afford, and that he is making every possible effort to keep in touch with not alone matters of a theological and religious nature, but also of the higher and better things that are being done in more purely literary, educational, social and economic lines of thought. This he must do if he is to command the attention and respect of a constantly growing intellectual life. Should he, for one moment, decide that he can draw from week to week from pools of thought that are never moved and stirred by newer currents, and never replenished from fresher springs, he will soon find that his work will lose its vitality, and that at the most he can only hold a certain respect and attention, paid simply because of the hallowed associations that cling around his calling, and not because of any real moving force and effect that his work would possess if allowed to lose its touch with the life of his day and time.

A non-reading, and a non-studying minister will soon find himself becoming a non-drawing and a non-effective minister. If he is to measure up to the possibilities of his great commission—"Go ye into all the world"—he must carry with him an open mind, a receptive intelligence, an adaptive capacity, and an ability to take the thought of his time and mold and fashion it by the moral and Scriptural standards of eternal truth for the instruction and guidance of those under his care. Otherwise, he must find year by year the events of a constantly changing civilization leaving him stranded amid the fossils of by-gone things. Principles are eternal, but they must be applied and reapplied as time passes to the events of new times.

"New occasions teach new duties,
Time makes ancient good uncouth;
We must ever up and onward
Would we keep abreast of truth."

It is assumed as a matter of course that the minister is one of the trained and educated men of his community. Preparation for this great work is taken as a matter of course to include not alone inclination and consecration, but the most thorough preparation possible in halls of learning; bringing to the active duties that lie before him his whole energy with a heart turned to higher things, and a mind so furnished that he can cope with the problems of the mental and spiritual realm. In all humility he has chosen a field where he is to be a leader, and he is expected to pay the price for this high choice in such equipment as will forbid any criticism upon his scholastic and mental furnishing so necessary to command respect. He must be a workman, "who needeth not to be ashamed," in the great field of his wonderful opportunity.

In what is here said we are not overlooking the duties of many others in regard to the direction of the reading matter of our people. We have in mind the duties incumbent upon teachers in schools, parents in homes, editors, and all others who stand in vital relationship to the choice and selection of proper reading matter. These are not forgotten, but we are here attempting to stress what may rightly be expected from the thousands of our ministers who occupy a strategic point and from whom we may properly expect co-operation, suggestion, and active help that no one else can give in the manner and method open to them.

No one wants a literary essay or discourse to take the place of a sermon, and no one wants our ministers to change their place for that of the critic of literature. It does not, however, seem to be asking too much or expecting too much to hope that they will be ready to use the continual opportunities that are theirs to make mention of such lines of reading as should engage those who look to them week after week. If a congregation is well supplied with proper reading matter in the daily, weekly and monthly publications, and if it is a congregation in which the best books find homes, the minister has opened to him a fruitful field that will yield an hundredfold in ready response to every proper call that is made upon it.

Think for one moment of the limited field of the minister if he has to deal with an illiterate, uneducated and non-reading people! Consider the Church without intelligence and education. How necessary, then, for the minister, if he is to rise to the heights of his mission, that he see to it that his people are taught line by line and precept upon precept the necessity of giving ample attention to the matter of reading. In the homes, in the community, in the pulpit, then wise suggestions from the minister as to books, and reading, and literature, will surely be words fitly spoken that will be "as apples of gold in pictures of silver." We are not making any plea that our ministers become book agents, save as we would argue that all intelligent people should be agents for the spread of good books, and seekers continually for larger and fairer fields of thought.

Imagine, if you please, a minister who reads no papers, who reads no books—and then you may easily imagine what kind of feast one can spread who has none of the essentials at hand for preparing a meal. Granted, even that the minister in days long since gone was for some years in college classes; still, we must wonder what he did there receive, or rather not receive, that he has done nothing along these lines since those far-gone days. Was he there so well filled, and so well furnished, that he has never needed since to replenish his stores? Did he not even learn the one simple truth, a very great truth, that all education is only a beginning for greater things day by day? Does he really expect God, his great Leader and Guide, to give him continual supplies without any effort on his own part? Has he read His promise that he will give to those who do not seek? That He will open his doors to those who do not knock?

Discussions are on from time to time as to the Church losing its hold upon our people. In these discussions it may be well to remember that all over our land we have Churches crowded to their capacity, week by week, and we may well inquire whether such pulpits are filled by men mentally alert, keeping in close touch with life and its expression in literature, and ranking with the thinkers of their time, or whether it is otherwise. Hungry people naturally seek food. They want food, and they seek it. If it is supplied, they return for more. If not supplied, they turn elsewhere. Then, for his own sake of success, the minister must be interested in reading, certainly for the sake of young, hungry minds, and older inquiring minds, and the hosts of mankind who have a right to look to him, he must strive not alone to spread continual supplies before them, but to suggest where proper supplies may be had in the hours when he cannot serve them.

Our preachers and our reading—certainly a topic worth the serious consideration of those who preach, and those who listen to what is said. No moral and spiritual leader worthy the name can afford to overlook his responsibilities along this line.

"JESS PICK ME OUT A STAR, BOSS."

In a recent issue of the Biblical Recorder we find a most unusual article from the pen of Rev. John Jeter Hurt. If we mistake not, Brother Hurt is pastor of a Baptist Church at Wilmington, N. C. Its elegance is not its value; but its sincerity and its earnest plea for God are. It is the expression of an old negro's soul in its longing after God, and Brother Hurt feels that it is worthy a place in our current religious literature. In this thought we join him, and so we are giving our readers a chance to read it along with out Baptist brethren of North Carolina. It follows:

You don't know Davy. I must introduce him. There he stands—just where I left him thirty years ago—a stone's throw from his log cabin, green tobacco up to his waist, arms akimbo, same old hat on one side of his head, same old face wrinkled by smiling, same old drawl as he details the whereabouts of his fourteen when last heard from, and same genteel graciousness as he ventures to "cla'ar fo' Gawd" that she who sits by my side is "de liklies' lady dat's been 'long dis road since Miss La'ar wuz in her prime"!

That utterance, so deftly thrown in, will cost me something, but not yet. We talked about the old days; about the rabbit traps he made in winter nights and sold to me for a dime each, trusting to good luck for payment; about the notable 'possum dogs of the long ago—Hero, and Tray, and Belle, and Red Eye, and the rest; about the corn-shuckings of songs and story and bright remembrance; about the fall pilgrimages into Richmond, when father and I rode in the buggy, while Davy and Sheppard and Lee would drive the cattle, traveling the forty-five miles on foot.

Then Davy told me of another journey. Father had sold a horse. He wanted him delivered in Chester—fifty miles away—and delivered next morning. Davy was no man for horses. They queered him. He was a footman by nature and practice. Besides, he had never been to Chester. And Davy was no negro to tempt the fates of a strange country under cover of night! But never yet had he refused when "Marse Gawge" asked him to go. "He told me I knowed de way as fur as de cote house, an' which I did. He say I ken 'quire 'long de road, arter dat. But I say, 'What de white folks gwine do to me fur callin' dem out de bed, axin' which way de road run'? Den he took er piece er paper an' drawed de roads and cross-roads on it. But I tole him, 'Marse Gawge, I ain't got no lurnin' to git hep fum lines lak dem'! Den a idea hit me. Yer know I's always been a mighty 'possum hunter, an' my 'fession done made me study de stars. So I up an' say, 'Jess pick me out a star, Boss, one whut hangs right over Chester, an' I'll eat brekfuss dar in de mawnin'! Sho nuff, yer pa pint to a star whut was hangin' erbout over Chester, an' I got my bearin's, an' when de sun cum up I say to de man, 'Here yer hoss'!"

It was now time for me to go. Already the shadows were lengthening on the hills. But I might never see Davy again. Dropping my voice, and looking earnestly into that honest, black face, I said: "Davy, you and I have another great journey before us—a last one. We cannot travel it together, but I hope we shall meet at the end of the road. Have you thought much about that journey, Davy"? He turned his face away very slowly, and seemed to look farther and farther over the valley. Then he began to talk as if no one were listening: "Hit ain't fur erlong now 'fo Davy's day will be done. I's already 'proachin' de valley uv de shadder. But I done hear de ole preacher say oncet dat at evenin' time dar shall be light. I's done been in a heap o' dark places in my time, an' my Jesus ain't never left me yit. An', when dey lays me erway over yonder under de moanin' pines, I's boun' ter b'leeve my Jesus gwine give dis ole 'possum hunter a star ter show him de way beyon'." With that colloquy ended, my old negro friend turned on me a look that searched my soul. He found that I understood him. At last I reached for his hand, and said: "Good-by, Davy, we shall meet again at the end of the road."

Now, I am back in the great city. But I still bless God for the testimony of that old negro, who, like the wise men of old, orders his journeys by a star. And I bless God unceasingly for the pathos, the imagery, the reality of the negro religion—elements which have mightily helped my own.—Christian Index.

Golden Text: "Choose you this day whom you will serve."—Josh. 24:15.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 2.

Reference Material: Mal. 4:5, 6; Matt. 11:14, 16:14, 17:3, 4, 10, 12, 27:46-49; Luke 1:17; John 1:21-25; Rom. 11:2-4; James 5:17, 18.

A Survey of the Life of Elijah.

Elijah, the Prophet.

Elijah lived in the time of idolatry. He came with a message which he delivered fearlessly to a people who were worshipers of Baal. Because the king and queen were leaders in idol worship, did not phase him. A reformer sees the evil which must not be permitted to continue. He cares not whether the offender is rich or poor, noble or peasant. The prophet of God is concerned only that the divine message shall be faithfully delivered. Elijah's appearance was unexpected, as he delivered his first warning of drought coming to Israel in punishment for forgetting the commands of Jehovah.

Elijah, the Man of God.

Many of the great servants of God have spent part of their lives in the wilderness, or some solitary place alone with Him. It has been an important part of their training for His work. So Elijah was cared for by the brook of Cherith by God's creatures until he was called to go to Zarephath. Here his miracles were performed in the home of the widow. The oil and the meal were multiplied. The son was restored to life. So he showed the people that he was in truth "a man of God."

Elijah, the Conqueror of Baal.

The test of the truth of Elijah's prophecy and messages to Israel occurred on Mt. Carmel. The day had come when the people must choose between Baal and Jehovah. No longer could they feel that Baal and Jehovah were on the same footing,with the same power and place in their lives. All day long the priests of Baal called on their supreme being in vain. Then Elijah prepared to meet his test. "Let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word," was his earnest prayer. He believed in God and His supreme power. He proclaimed himself as the servant of the true God. He had done all that his God had commanded. In this attitude lay the secret of his power. And in such faith he prayed. When men of faith pray, something happens. God reveals Himself, as on Mt. Carmel. All lasting reform must be accomplished in this way. The reformer must be a man of faith, a man of work and a man of prayer. Faith, work and prayer form an invincible combination to accomplish with God the uplifting of His people in His world.

Elijah, the Prophet Discouraged.

Queen Jezebel was filled with rage when she heard that the priests of Baal had been slain, and threatened the prophet's life. The influence of a wicked woman for evil cannot be estimated, nor the power of a good woman for good. Elijah felt that all of his work had been in vain, and fled for his life. He felt all alone in the world, working for a losing cause. He forgot the seven thousand who had never bowed to Baal. When God's servants think more of the evil in the world than of His power, dark days come. When Christians think more of themselves than of Christ, come the hours of discouragement. When God spoke to Elijah in the still small voice in the desert, it was with a command to go on to further work. Not in the storm, nor in the wind, nor in the fire, but in the still voice came the message which was a call to another task. In the little things of life, God often appears to men with His call. Elijah went forth to be just as zealous as before in condemning wrong and attempting to call a ruler and his people back to God.

Elijah, the Teacher.

God sent Elijah to anoint his successor, and through association with his Master, Elisha prepared to take his place. Elijah also joined with his more conspicuous work as a prophet, the care of the schools of the prophets, founded by Samuel and fostered by David. These schools were educational in their purpose, and through them Elijah devoted time to training younger men to carry on the work in Israel. On the last day of his life, Elijah visited these sons of the prophets, who followed him and Elisha to the shore of the Jordan, and then waited to welcome Elisha as he returned after Elijah was snatched up into the heavens. The great man, with the far-seeing vision, does not aim alone to make his own work and himself indispensable, but rather to make it possible for his work to go on and on, through others. Elijah, the teacher, had an influence which lived for years after he was gone.

Elijah, the Man.

"Elijah was a man of like passions (nature) with us, and he prayed fervently." This is the testimony of James centuries later. Elijah was the man needed for his day. He brought a message which God's chosen people needed sorely. What message would he bring today? How would an Elijah look upon men who disregarded God in their daily lives? On struggles between capital and labor? On many of our social problems? On the oppression of children and women in industry? He was a man of like nature, and he prayed. The world needs men who see the right and condemn the wrong, as they pray.

"Father, we look up to Thee.
Let us in Thy love agree;
Thou who art the God of peace,
Bid contention ever cease.

"Make us of one heart and mind,
Self-forgetful, true and kind;
Strong, yet meek in thought and word,
Like Thy Son, our blessed Lord"!
—Charles Wesley.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

May 20, 1923.

Subject: "Something in the Bible that has Helped Me."—Ps. 19:7-14.
(Union Meeting with the Juniors and Intermediates.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

"The Bible of our fathers
Is the blessed Word of God;
Its pages are inspired—
By its light our fathers trod.

"The Bible of our fathers,
Its great promises are true;
They never fail believers—
Trust—its Gospel will save you"!
—Clarence B. Strouse.

God's Word is given to man that man may know Him and His plan of salvation. The "law of the Lord" makes possible the saving of man's soul.—Vs. 7.

Knowledge of the Word of God is the Christian's source of wisdom. President Roosevelt once declared: "To every man who faces life with real desire to do his part in everything, I appeal for a study of the Bible. No book of any kind ever written has so affected the whole life of a people."—Vs. 7.

"Thy word is a * * * light unto my path." The Bible dispels gloom and brings light. It comforts the sorrowful and brings peace and joy. —Vs. 8.

The Lord is a just and righteous Judge. His Word presents His commands and his promises. His children need to study and obey.—Vs. 9.

The psalmist prayed to be kept from sin—sin of word and thought and deed. The Heavenly Father stands ready to protect His children and guide them well. Like the psalmist, they must come to Him in humble petition.

The Bible was written by inspiration of God to meet man's every need. It has comfort for the hour of sorrow, guidance for the time of doubt, inspiration for the time of discouragement, commands for the hour of prosperity. The help is there. Have you studied the Bible to find it?

Plans for the Meeting.

This topic is planned for a union meeting of Seniors, Intermediates and Young People. If you have all three societies, plan to bring them together, with a part on the program for all. If you have only one society, plan for the Juniors (under fourteen years) to have a part in the meeting. Perhaps this meeting may well lead to the organization of a Junior Christian Endeavor Society in your Church, with a superintendent, who loves boys and girls, to help them plan meetings which will make God's Word mean more to their lives.

Ask every member to come to this meeting ready to quote a verse or verses which have been a help to them, and ask them to tell briefly why. As they come to the meeting, each one may be given a number, and then later in the meeting ask them to give their verses and reasons as the numbers come.

The Scripture lesson is one which should be memorized. Perhaps either your Juniors or your Intermediate Society can recite it for this meeting.

Have the Junior Society sing the following verses (from "Dixie Endeavorer"), to the tune "Jewels," and then repeat together some passage of their memory work:

We are Juniors, happy Juniors
We're Junior Endeavorers,
Always living, always working
For Jesus, our King.

Chorus.
For Christ and the Church,
For Christ and the Church,
For Christ and the Church,
All our talents we bring.

We are learning that to Jesus
Our King we may pray.
He will help us over evil
To win every day.

Have the Intermediate Society in charge of invitations and decorating the meeting place with Christian Endeavor motto: "For Christ and the Church," and red and white flowers. Invitations might be written on cards cut in the shape of an open Bible.

Three leaders may have charge of the meeting, planning the program and the parts of each together.

Suggested Hymns: "Wonderful Words of Life," "Precious Treasure," "Thou Art Mine," "How Firm a Foundation," "More About Jesus I would Know," "Break Thou the Bread of Life" (sung softly before Scripture reading or prayer), "I Think when I Read that Sweet Story of Old."

If you are a Christian Endeavorer president, you should endeavor to attend the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College July 30 to August 5.

ALABAMA SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND CHRISTIAN ENDAVORS.

Several Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Alabama Conference failed to report to the recent Convention at Rock Stand. We are anxious to have our records correct and complete this year to print in the "Handbook" published by the Board of Religious Education. Any reports which were not turned in should be sent soon to Miss Burma Dollar, Roanoke, Ala., R. 4, together with the contribution to the Convention. By vote of the Convention, this contribution should amount to 5 cents for every member. If any Church does not have the necessary blanks for these reports, the secretary can furnish them.

J. H. Hughes, Pres.
Miss Burma Dollar, Sec-Treas.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION DUES.

As the time approaches for the meeting of the various Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, I wish to call attention to the dues to be sent to the Convention. Most of these funds go to the Board of Religious Education to support the work being done by Miss Lucy M. Eldredge. This is supposed to be our main source of support, and a failure on the part of your Sunday School or Christian Endeavor Society to send up its part of the funds, means the weakening of our work.

In order to maintain the work this year, the Southern Christian Convention, in session at Henderson, voted money out of another fund. This will not be necessary another year if every organization will do its part. Ten cents per member from each school is not too much to ask from our people for definite work for our young people.

We are counting on you to support the work.

W. T. Walters,
Chairman Board of Religious Education.

PANAMA AND PROTESTANTISM.

A Religious Editor Visits the Canal.
Dr. W. E. Gilroy.

There are few places where, from almost every standpoint, duty and opportunity alike confront the Christian Churches of America as they do today in the Panama Canal Zone and in the adjacent territory.

The visitor to the Zone is impressed with two things above all others. On the one hand is the crucial and unusual situation of thousands of Americans isolated for longer or shorter periods from the normal life of the homeland, in a tropical climate and environment, where in spite of all that science and sanitation have accomplished, the moral and spiritual tendencies are mainly downward; and on the other hand are the many evidences of the magnificent way in which Christian men and women of the Canal Zone, fully realizing these dangerous tendencies, are battling against them. If any group of Christians face to face with peculiar difficulties ever needed and deserved the support of the whole Christian people of the United States, it is these devoted and self-sacrificing believers who are endeavoring to establish the institutions and influences of the Christian Church in this strategic area upon a broad, sound and permanent basis. Appeal is made in their behalf not because of any failure on their part. They have shown great liberality; they have assumed and are assuming burdens. But their problems and situations are unusual; their task is one that concerns the welfare of the American people as a whole, as much as the Canal which it is their particular concern to maintain in service, and the adequate performance of that religious task is beyond their unaided abilities.

With excellent vision and fine spirit, groups of Christians formerly associated with various denominations have decided to work upon a union-Protestant basis. They do not want sectarianism and division in this small section, and under these trying conditions where all the strength that unity can give will be none too much. Strange to say, this commendable policy may make the immediate problems more difficult of solution. Where individual denominations would come in and spend substantial amounts, it is not easy as yet to capitalize in actual funds the growing sentiment in behalf of co-operative religious effort. But this difficulty should make the present opportunity the more urgent and inviting. Here is a situation where it may be demonstrated that Christian co-operation is more than a mere sentiment.

These great ends, it seems to me, worthy support of the Union Protestant enterprise in the Panama Canal Zone and adjacent territory, may hope to accomplish:

1. To help to maintain wholesome Christian influences for members of American Churches who, with their families, are permanently located on the Canal, and at the same time serve the larger constituency of those whose stay is more transitory but who live around the Zone long enough to be permanently influenced for good or evil.

2. To build up moral safeguards and spiritual influences where thousands of American soldiers and sailors will always be located, and where all the allurements of evil are flagrant.

3. To set in an environment where Romanism has meant superstition and ignorance, some worthy example of what Protestant Christianity can effect. It is a strategic missionary opportunity.

4. To set alongside the Canal, which is the most unique monument to American genius for organization and for the conquest of difficulties, some worthy expression of the genius of American religion. Where rulers, soldiers, business men and engineers have thought in hundreds of millions, the Christian Church ought to think at least in terms of tens of thousands.

It will be to the lasting shame of the Protestant Churches of America if a strip of land destined, possibly, to be the most important upon the whole earth's surface, and for which this country has assumed financial political and military responsibility, lacks adequate provision for the institutions and services of religion; and it will be unfortunate if in any sense the Christian Church is left to lag behind at a time and in a place of such amazing opportunity.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

HARWARD—CARDEN.

On Tuesday, April 3, 1923, a very beautiful wedding was solemnized at the residence of Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., when his daughter, Miss Minnie Doak Carden, became the bride of Mr. James Edgar Harward, also of Durham. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Miss Naomi Carden was ring-bearer, and Miss Hester Stuart, of Raleigh, was maid of honor. The groom had as his best man Mr. George Harward, of Fayettville, N. C. Just before the ceremony, Miss Margaret Highsmith sang "Because I Love You, Dear," accompanied on the piano by Miss Vera Maynor, who also rendered the bridal music. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell.

Both of the contracting parties are members of the Durham Christian Church, and have been interested in all the activities of the Church, and loyal in its service. They will make their home in Henderson, N. C., where Mr. Harward will engage in business. Their going will mean a distinct loss to the Durham Christian Church, and the Henderson Church is to be congratulated on having them become a part of the Church life. We wish for them peace and happiness on the voyage of life.

STANLEY C. HARRELL.

"EVERY MAN NEEDS A REFUGE."

There is no torment like the torment of an accusing conscience. First of all, every one of us needs a hiding-place from the accusations of our own conscience. We find the torments of an accusing conscience about us every day in actual life and experience. There are men and women whose consciences are asleep, but some day will awaken, and woe to the man or woman whose conscience wakes up and who has no hiding-place from it.

"We need a hiding-place from the power of the devil. I believe in the existence of a personal devil. I will tell you why. In the first place, because the Old Book says so, and I have found that the man who believes in the Bible always comes out ahead in the long run every time, and the man who is too wise and too advanced to believe in the Word of God comes out behind every time. Now, there was a time when I was so wise that I believed as much of the Bible as was wise enough to agree with me. Thank God, that time has passed. I have come to the place where I know that the Book, from the first chapter to the last, is the Word of God.—Rev. R. A. Torrey.

NATIONAL AND WORLD-WIDE PROHIBITION.

(Tune: "Sewanee River.")

From every part of this great country
There comes a cry
From all who fight the liquor traffic:
Illegal sales must die,
For those who fight this legal battle
Some day must win.
For, sure as there is One above us,
Unlawful trade is sin.
God will help them win this battle;
He is on their side.
While marching on beneath His banner,
Vict'ry will them betide.

From all around this world of ours
There goes a prayer
Up to the throne of God in heaven
For help in this warfare
Now waged against the liquor rtaffic
In this our day,
For this hydra-headed liquor monster
Good people mean to slay.
"All too long it has been licensed,"
Christians now declare.
This wrong they soon will stop forever,
For God will answer prayer.

Then, trusting God, they'll win this battle
Against this foe,
For they will never cease to struggle
Until it is laid low.
Let all good people stand together.
It can be done
By working, praying, voting ever
Till victory is won.
Then they'll join in mighty chorus,
Make the welkin ring.
Since God has helped them win this battle,
His praises they will sing.

DIED.

Miss Irene Virginia Barrett, daughter of Deacon R. H. Barrett, brother of Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., editor of The Christian Sun, accidentally caught on fire while getting ready to go to her Sunday School and Church at Antioch on Sunday morning, April 1, 1923, and was seriously burned. Everything was done that could be for her recovery by her devoted parents and loving brothers and sisters, physicians and friends. On Sunday, April 22d, she called her loved ones to her and bid them farewell and said she was going to heaven and she wanted them to meet her there. It cast a gloom over the Church and community. The dear father and mother, brothers and sisters have the deepest sympathy of their many friends in their sad bereavement. She was 21 years and 4 months of age.

She was a good Christian and loved her Sunday School and Church, and was greatly beloved by all who knew her. Her funeral services were conducted at her Church by her pastor, assisted by Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, and her remains were laid to rest in the Church cemetery. She leaves father, mother, six brothers, three sisters and many friends. God bless the dear bereaved ones with the thought of meeting again. H. H. B.

MRS. H. W. ELDER.

Mrs. Mattie Floyd Elder, wife of Rev. H. W. Elder, was born April 26, 1871, died April 19, 1923. She is survived by her husband and six children (two girls and four boys), and six grandchildren.

Mrs. Elder joined the Christian Church when a child about thirteen years old, in Alabama. Bro. Elder has been pastor of the Richland Christian Church for more than twenty years. There has never been a more devoted and true wife and mother than Mrs. Elder. She was a grand neighbor, a Christian lady, and just as loyal to her Church as to her family. She never missed a service of any kind unless on account of sickness. She has been our Sunday School teacher for many years, and we feel that not only Bro. Elder's home here is all broken up, but that our Church has lost its most loyal worker.

We know God makes no mistakes, so we bow in humble submission to His will. May her passing away serve to strengthen the bonds between earth and heaven, and some day may we meet her around the great white throne.

RESOLUTION.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

Mrs. H. W. Elder, wife of Rev. H. W. Elder, of Richland, Ga., while in hospital at Plains, Ga., a few days after a serious operation, fell asleep, passing quickly to the reward she had so deservedly won.

Because she was our friend and leader in Church work; because we are feeling our loss keenly; because her cheerful disposition and helpful deeds will be missed in our Church and community—we, the Ladies of the Missionary Society of the Christian Church, offer the following resolutions:

First. To her loving and devoted companion and children, who so deeply mourn the loss of wife and mother, we offer our tenderest sympathy. We bid them look to the Father for peace and comfort in this sad hour of their bereavement.

Second. That in the death of Mrs. Elder, our Church has lost a faithful member and earnest worker, as her heart was always in the work of her Master.

Third. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family and to The Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. D. S. HOGG.
MRS. J. H. ABELL.

MRS. STEPHEN L. ELEY.

Since God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from this earthly tabernacle to the home prepared for those who love and serve Him, Mrs. Stephen L. Eley, who passed peacefully away at the home of her son, Mr. S. L. Eley, 36 Poplar Avenue, Norfolk, Va., on March 29, 1923.

First.—That in the death of Mrs. Eley the First Christian Church and Ladies' Aid Society have lost one of her oldest and most loyal members. Although her health did not permit her to take an active part in the affairs of the Church for the last five years, her heart was always with us.

Second.—That while we cherish the memory of her, we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will, knowing He maketh no mistakes.

Third.—To her children we offer our heartfelt sympathy, and point them to the One who will sustain and comfort them in their sorrow and loss.

Fourth.—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy spread on the minutes of our society's records.

MRS. J. O. WIGGS,
MRS. CHAS. H. MARWITZ, JR.,
MRS. M. E. NICHOLS,

A MEDITATION.

"Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out." These, O my soul, are the words of infinite mercy! But there are other words no less true, which are spoken to some: "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life."

It is true, then, that it is in thine own will that determines whether thou be saved or lost. O awful responsibility! O dread choice! Two ways are set before thee, that of life and that of death. Yield thyself now to Him who alone can lead thee in the way of life, for, left to thyself, what art thou but a guide to thine own downfall?

O Lord my God, I come to Thee for pardon, hope and grace! Thy mercy endureth forever. Forsake not the work of Thine own hands!—A. Henderson.

Suit Against Sugar Speculation—

With Cuban raw sugars advanced to 6¼ cents a pound and refined sugar selling at 9.85 cents a pound wholesale, federal officials have filed suit against the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange designed to stop speculative activities in sugar. British officials take the view that a world sugar shortage is in prospect and have declined to commit the Government to an attempt to cut prices; but American officials charge that the high prices are due to the manipulations of speculators, and an immediate effect of the filing of the suit was decline of 30 to 73 points in sugar options. By the way, the United States Tariff Commission has reported to President Harding that the increased rates in the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act are not responsible for the present high sugar prices.—Christian Herald.

Germans Call for Peace Moves—

In German official circles sentiment in favor of beginning negotiations with France and Belgium for ending the Ruhr deadlock apparently is gaining strength. It has found expression in a speech before the Reichstag by Baron von Rosenberg, the Foreign Minister, which was a plea to France for reconciliation and understanding although it contained also a declaration that Germans must stand united and firm in their resistance until France changed her attitude of enmity. Berlin, he said, had been prepared in January to offer reparations of 30,000,000,000 gold marks, backed by a guarantee of German industry. This was followed by a demand in the Reichstag by Herr Breitscheidt, speaking for the Socialists, that the government make a definite offer to France; and the ensuing debate showed a growing realization that with the rest of the world standing aloof from the Ruhr struggle Germany's chances of emerging victorious were slight. — Christian Herald.

Something New in Hotels—

Some weeks ago a Philadelphia traveling man suggested to Mr. John McE. Bowman that hotels should provide chapels where guests who desire a quiet place for worship and meditation can retire. Mr. Bowman is the proprietor of the Baltimore, Commodore, and Belmont Hotels in New York City, together with a number of hotels throughout the country. Today Mr. Bowman is making arrangements at a great cost to install chapels in all his hotelries. These chapels are to be fitted with stained glass windows, altars, appropriate lighting, and cathedral chairs. Their purpose is not to provide a place for special services, although such services may occasionally be held, but they are designed to serve the guest who, tired out with bustle and excitement of the city marts, craves a few minutes for meditation and prayer. If the chapels are frequently used, it is of course likely that other hotel owners will as a matter of good business follow Mr. Bowman's example. We prefer to believe that it is not altogether a question of "getting business" with Mr. Bowman. We know nothing about his private life, but we think he must be religiously inclined; we hope that he is a Christian gentleman. The space the secular press is giving to religious matters and Church news, the conducting of religious services in factories, shops, and stores, the larger place given to religious services and instruction on ships, and this beginning in providing for worship and religious services in hotels all go to prove that religion is being given a larger place in the life and affairs of the American people. This is ground for encouragement. And, by the way, why not provide for religious services on railway trains?—Ex.

A Notable Radio Sermon—

We take from the London Methodist Recorder the following radio sermon recently preached by Gipsy Smith:

The Gipsy.—After facing crowded audiences today, I just feel I would like to creep away into my native air, into the woods, under the stars, among the birds and the flowers and the dear woolly things, where I spent the first seventeen years of my life, where I learned things which I know now were of God, though I had nobody then to interpret these wonderful secrets and beauties—the love of nature, the beauty of the bluebell, the sweetness of the primrose, the breath of the morning air. I know I used to see God there by the way these things held me as a child and unfold their loveliness to me. And then a great light and a great love touched my life, the love of God in Christ. I dedicated my all, such as I had, to his dear service and the service of my fellows. As I think of what he has allowed a gypsy boy to do, without school or teacher or preacher or missionary, I am wondering if some of you whose faces I cannot see, you who have been endowed with greater opportunities and advantages that are stupendous, are doing just what the great Master would have you do. Are you living as he would have you live? Remember, if you have a bigger deposit in you, God will expect a bigger return. I can imagine no worse hell than to look into the face of a disappointed Christ. . . . As I speak these words to the unknown multitude I would creep back again into my dear woods, with all the music and poetry and the hush of the night, the forest where I am so often in dreamland. Some day I shall be a child again, and I shall be back there, and in my childish vision I shall see my Master coming to me through the rustling leaves of my own dear woods, and I shall know

"I was lost, but Jesus found me—
Found the sheep that went astray,
Threw his loving arms around me,
Drew me back into his way."

God grant that you may know this joy at the last! If you will hold your breath for a moment and listen in to the inner chamber of your own heart, you may hear him speak to you now in his own dear voice. Just answer: "Here am I, Lord, What wilt thou have me to do?"

Italy Taking on New Life—

When Mussolini came into power in Italy and the newspapers were featuring sensationally the march of 200,000 Fascisti on Rome, there were doubtless over here thoughts of Sovietism and bloodshed. Yet now it looks as if Mussolini and his Fascisti did not come too soon. Dr. D. G. Whittinghill, writing from Rome to the Watchman-Examiner, says: "Ever since the advent of the Fascisti to power in Italy many radical and rapid changes have taken place, most of which, I am glad to say, have turned out for the good of this old and ever new country. Before the triumphant march of Mussolini and his 200,000 loyal followers on the Eternal City, things were rapidly growing from bad to worse, and a state of chaos was manifesting itself in every branch of human activity, from the government down to social and family life. Ministries fell more rapidly than they could be composed. Political parties seemed to have lost all desire to actuate their programs, desiring only to obtain office and lucrative positions. Men of international reputation whiled away precious time and wasted the people's money, apparently without concern for the direful consequences of their reckless deeds. The supreme interests of the State were ruthlessly sacrificed by insensate strikes imposed by conscienceless party leaders who were mistakenly called statesmen by their misguided followers. Discipline and respect for law and order not only among average civilians but also among large numbers of the army and navy, not to mention the national police, were to a large extent disregarded. The right to labor and the security of private and public property were fast vanishing from the face of the earth; not only private laborers but many employees of the national government seemed to have lost all consciousness of responsibility and their duty to earn their salaries. Both young and old were giving themselves up slowly but fatally to a life of luxury and pleasures. At such a moment there came to power by force of character and force of arms the present Prime Minister, Benito Mussolini. It was he more than any other person or thing who saved Italy from disaster. Since his coming to power Italy has taken on new life, and everything points to a better and brighter future. Strikes have completely ceased, peace is slowly returning to the country, business is rapidly improving, and a spirit of patriotism and good will seems to be taking possession of the country. Our Prime Minister is a man of great personality and ability, and he rules this land with a vigorous hand."—Christian Advocate.

NOTES-PERSONALS

A French proverb says: "He has not escaped who drags a chain." Of course not, since the chain has him in charge and is proof of his bondage.

That is good news from the Elm Church at Portsmouth, Va., where Rev. and Mrs. W. D. Harward are laboring. The work is looking up in fine shape. See a note from him elsewhere in this issue.

Ideals are essentials. Ideals make a life high or low, great or small. Do not try to go through life without ideals, and be sure the ideals are of the best—if they are not of the best, your life may still be far too low.

Some one has said that "No heaven can come to us unless our hearts find rest in it." Verily, but we must first find heaven, or the heart cannot rest in it. We cannot find rest in what we have not as yet found for ourselves.

The late Rev. J. R. Miller, a man of blessed memory, is quoted as saying: "We say God does His own work in the world. Yes, but not without us. Our faithfulness is essential to the carrying out of the divine purpose.' How true!

As Christians, our task is not done. In fact, it is hardly begun. Taking a larger view of the situation, some one has said: "The promise of Christianity is as yet but half fulfilled. All that has been done yet in all the Christian centuries is only the sketch and prelude of what is yet to be done."

Dr. Robert E. Speer says: "More to be sought than apparent opportunities for large usefulness is this gift—the secret and sweetness of unceasing, prevailing, triumphant prayer." Learn that thought, and make it a part of your very life, if you would prepare the way to highest usefulness in the sphere in which you live and move.

The post-office address of Rev. Joseph E. McCauley is changed from Halifax, Va., to Paces, Va., R. F. D. 1. Our brother has not changed his field of labor, but simply has moved to another section of his field. Let his correspondents make a note of the change.

The Western Christian Advocate puts a good point forth when it says: "The stars are unaffected by man's study of them, and the Bible goes serenely on as the best seller, although men's opinions jangle about it. There must be something akin to divinity in it." Undoubtedly that is true, but some seem not to see it that way. May God graciously open their eyes!

Deacon Thos. J. Haskins has been ill of late, and is yet. The last news from his bedside indicated some improvement, and it is hoped that he may soon be out and about in his usual health. His age makes it more difficult to rally, as he is between 82 and 85. Let the brethren remember him in prayer, that his long and useful life may be spared for yet other service, if it be in keeping with the Lord's will.

We have before us the catalogue of Elon College for 1923, recently issued from the press. Write Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., for copy of catalogue. We note commencement exercises will be held May 27 to 29; baccalaureate sermon and address on May 27; Board of Trustees' meeting, class day exercises, society representatives and reunions, and musical and choral society programs on May 28. May 29 is commencement day—graduating exercises, alumni meeting and address, and art exhibit. The literary address will be delivered by Governor Trinkle of Virginia.

A number of the Churches in Eastern Virginia have already planned for their representatives for the Elon Chautauqua. Every Church in Virginia and North Carolina should be represented. No better investment could be made than for the Church to pay the expenses of two or more workers, expecting them to bring back information and inspiration from the gathering. By planning early, this can be done.

How do you take personal sufferings? Do you feel that it is used of God in your case to purify you and make you a better and a more useful servant? Or do you take it that the devil is around and that he is simply seeking to break you down by bringing these sufferings upon you? The Lord chastens; the devil harasses. Do you know what chastening means? It means son-training. And what does harass mean? It means vexed, disturbed and annoyed. Tennyson, on one occasion, spoke of some man who was "vexed with lawyers and harassed with debt." The Lord trains His children for a better service in a better life. The devil harasses men, that he may bring them to desperation and ruin. Choose ye this day whom ye will serve and then stick to your Master and to your work.

In a private note from Rev. Thos. E. Beaman, written from Goldsboro, N. C., May 5, we have these kind and appreciative words concerning the Henderson Convention: "I feel very grateful to our Heavenly Father for the most splendid meeting in which we were permitted to participate, in Henderson, and for the splendid reception and welcome which you and the good people of the city and the Convention gave us. I don't think I ever attended a better-spirited meeting. May our kind Heavenly Father bless you and yours in the work of His kingdom. Sincerely yours," etc. These brotherly sentiments are reciprocated truly, and we wish to assure our brother that we shall be glad to see him and his brethren with us often. The truth is, that the Free Will Baptist people are too nearly with us in doctrinal beliefs to stand separated. We ought to be one, now and always.

Our dear brother, Rev. R. H. Pitt, D. D., editor of the Religious Herald, has on his hands quite a task. He has undertaken to convince the Baptist brotherhood of Virginia that there is no division in the Baptist ranks. For their sakes, we wish he might prove the claim true, but it seems to us that he is about to over do the thing, for almost every issue of the Herald seems to throw out bold hints to the contrary. One thing that seems against his proving the claim is the fact that many of his excellent editorials in the last few months have been written to show that somebody is in the wrong, and yet he claims that the Baptist people are united. We shall see, if life lasts, what a few months will show to be the facts in the case. We have no personal knowledge of the situation with our Baptist brethren, but it seems to us that the pot is boiling.

"LOVE NEVER FAILETH."

It never goes out of fashion. It is never cast aside like an antiquated robe. It is fit and beautiful in every time and season. It adds some light to the light of childhood. It adorn's life's prime. It beautifies old age. It is a lovely garment that moth and rust can never consume and that death itself cannot destroy. We may take it with us through "the valley of the shadow," and we may wear it on the resurrection morning. It is always in fashion. "Love never faileth."—J. H. Jowett.

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The Board of Trustees of Bethlehem College appointed Dr. T. H. Denny, Rev. E. M. Carter, and President W. A. Harper a special committee to select the president and faculty for the new college. The field has been carefully surveyed and what is believed to be a very happy solution of the matter has been arrived at.

It is announced officially today that Mr. Marshall W. Hook, who graduated from Elon College in 1922, and who has spent the present year in Yale University where he is to receive his M. A. degree in June, is to become president and will enter upon his duties early in June.

It is further announced that Mr. Herbert Scholz, Jr., Misses Minnie Edge, and Nonnie Bailey, all of the present senior class in Elon, have accepted appointments as teachers in the college. It is understood that one other teacher is to be employed, and perhaps also a piano teacher.

WILLIAM JANADUS HOLDEN.

While at the Henderson Convention I received a phone call to come to Louisburg to attend funeral services of little Wm. Janadus Holden, not quite four years old, the fourth child of Sidney Holden, Clerk of the Superior Court, Clerk of Franklin County. He had been run over by a lumber truck and killed instantaneously. The service was held in the home on Thursday afternoon and the remains carried to Oak Level Church for interment. Margaret, Sidney, Gertrude, and Martha remain with father and mother who seem crushed by this sad and sudden affliction; but they believe that dear little Janadus is with Jesus and grandfather in heaven. The floral tribute covered the grave with a mound of beauty and sweetness, and the community sympathy was even sweeter and more beautiful.

EDWIN T. BERKLEY.

Upon my arrival in Suffolk Friday afternoon, Annie informed me that Mr. Berkley had been killed on Thursday by the breaking of a cable on an unloading machine on the Nansemond River, and his wife wanted me to conduct the funeral on Saturday afternoon. This I did, with Dr. I. W. Johnson's assistance and seven singers.

Mr. Berkley was thirty-six, and leaves a wife and three little boys. He was connected with the State Highway Department. I compared the two accidents. The one a little boy, the other the head of a family. It is easy to see which is the sadder; but sympathy goes out for both families. The hope is that these three little boys will grow up to be men who will care for mother and make her life rich with their love and service.

TRIBUTE TO MISS IRENE BARRETT.

Irene, the beloved daughter of R. H. and Mattie D. Barrett, just entering into the twenty-second year of her early life, on Sunday night April 22, 1923, passed from this life to the great beyond.

This young girl, so beautiful in life, in character, in purpose, apparently just entering into a life of usefulness in the home, in the Church, in the world, was, on Sunday, April 1, dreadfully burned, catching fire from a heater while preparing for Church. For three weeks her suffering was very severe. Doctors, loved ones, friends, and a sympathizing community, did all that they could, but to no avail. Irene's mission was filled; God had called, and she must go. So, on Sunday night of April 22, as mentioned above, she made an earnest request of her father to pray that the Lord might take her that night. After this, she expressed her full confidence of being about to enter into her heavenly home, through Christ Jesus. She called all of her people, her friends and loved ones that were present, around her bedside, biding them good-by, and earnestly appealing to them to do good, and prepare for the heavenly home. After this she soon breathed her last, and passed on to her reward.

The writer was very well acquainted with this dear girl, and has every reason to believe that she was truly trusting the Lord Christ, as her personal Savicur, and that she has only passed to enter into the rest that God has prepared for those that love Him.

She leaves to mourn their loss a devoted father and mother—R. H. Barrett and Mattie D. Barrett; nine brothers and sisters—Rev. J. C. Barrett, R. H. Barrett, Jr., R. A. Barrett, M. T. Barrett, W. D. Barrett, J. A. Barrett, Mrs. Rufus Cobb, Mrs. Guy Webb, Mrs. W. A. Strickland. She was a niece of Dr. J. P. Barrett, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Besides these, she leaves a host of relatives, friends and loved ones.

The funeral service was conducted by Rev. H. H. Butler at Antioch Church, of which she was a member, assisted by the writer. Her body was laid away in the Old Church Cemetery, to await the resurrection morn.

The writer and his family was very much impressed by the going out of this dear life, and are sorrowing with her many friends and loved ones; but, my friends, we do not sorrow as do those that are without hope. And as we again stand in the presence of death, smitten by its power, let us confess our weakness and turn to God for refuge.

Let us rejoice in a Father's loving care. Let us remember that He has strength for our weakness, comfort for our distress, and an ever-present help in time of need.

Let us thank Him for the Gospel message of hope, its light flashed into the darkness of the tomb, and its promise of life where darkness, death, and sorrow never come. My friends, you all have my deepest sympathy, but my earnest plea is that we will heed her appeal to trust God and do good, for here we have no abiding home, but are looking for one whose builder and maker is God.

THE STANDARD BY WHICH EVERY MAN SHALL BE JUDGED ACCORDING TO THE FRUITS OF HIS DOINGS.

BY REV. JACK SPRATT.

"For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."—Eccle. 12:14.

Man likes judgment for other people, but not for himself. If he may administer judgment, then well enough; but if another is to administer it to him, then he has no use for judgment. Sitting in judgment upon other people, to many, seems to be a delightful pastime, but if another is to administer judgment to us, then we would like to be excused. From our text, we learn that not man, but God, will pass judgment upon every work of man and upon every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil, and His judgment will be final—no appeal can be taken to another court, for there is no other court. In New Testament times, Paul declared this awful fact in other language, but it is the same truth, saying: "We must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ."—Rom. 14:10.

It may be that you are asking: "How can God judge the billions of people the billions of people who have lived since the creation of man"? In asking that question, you do not rightly apprehend the nature of the judgment and how it will be administered. Your own character will be the deciding factor in your case. Under God's power your own life, character, and its fruits will decide your destiny. A Christ-like character will send you to be with the Lord, but an evil character will send you to the place of punishment. So you can see easily enough that the life you have lived will pass an unerring judgment upon you. We are told that the Bank of England has in its service a machine for passing judgment on the coin it handles. The coin is thrown into the hopper. If it is genuine, the machine sends it automatically to its own place, and if it is spurious it also sends the coin to the place of the worthless. You see the character of the coin is the deciding factor as to which place it shall go. May not the final judgment be somewhat after this fashion—the character of the life you have lived, for Christ or against Him, that will decide one's destiny. There can be no deceiving God. The Scriptures tell us that He looks, not as man looks upon the outside, but He looks into the heart. His judgment is unerring and final.

According to the teachings of the Bible, divine judgment will be of the most searching kind. Only one class can hope to escape—they who have been washed in the blood of the Lamb and are living under grace with Jesus.

Do you wish an adequate idea of the severity of the judgment? Then hear the Word of God in Jeremiah 17:10:

"I, the Lord, search the heart; I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruits of his doings."

That is a heart-searching declaration. The Lord is to search the heart and then reward him according to what He finds there. That statement is pointed—you will be judged according to your ways. Let us remember that it goes further than his own life and includes the fruitage of his sins in the lives of others. I once knew an evangelist who, in his early life, gained admission to a home as a visitor. In that home was a lovely daughter, but by his cunning artfulness he ruined her life, and that sent the dear old mother to the madhouse, and later the daughter also, and there they both died, suffering terrible agony because of the wrongs done them by this man in the day of his wickedness. It must be that his will be a severe sentence for this great wrong, not only to himself, but to the dear mother and daughter. We are to be judged according to our doings. Let a man commit a wrong, and the penalty starts right after him, and sooner or later it will overtake him, for what a man sows that shall he reap.

From human eyes the heart is hidden, but it is not hidden from God. He has an X-ray which He will turn upon your heart and mind, and He will search your heart through and through. He will get at the facts. He lays wide open all hearts and He sees all that is hidden away therein.

Did you say, "Yes, but your text is from the Old Testament, which has been abolished"? Who told you that it had been abolished? Indeed, it has not been abolished, and if it had, so far as that is concerned, it would make no difference, for the reason the same idea is set forth in the New Testament. The ceremonial law in which sacrifices of birds and animals were offered for sin has been abolished. Jesus came and put an end to the old ceremonial—not the moral—law by making of Himself one great sacrifice for the sins of the people. Jesus Himself said that He did not come to destroy the law, but to fulfill it. See Matthew 5:17.

In Matt. 16:27 we read: "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father with the holy angels; and then shall He reward every man according to his works." These words of Jesus brings out the same thought and gives ample notice to get ready for the examination that shall be made in the judgment. In Rom. 2:6, Paul declares that every man will be rewarded according to his deeds. What a reward will be given to the men and women who have served God in deed and in truth in a life of good works! What rewards await Betsy Cook, who, though afflicted and bedridden for fifty-five years, yet, in doing good among the needy, was considered the most useful woman in New York City. What rewards will her work bring to her? They will doubtless be very many, for she did so much good among the poor, the sick and the helpless. Then think of a man who has sowed evil in his lifework as did the ex-Kaiser of Germany! Oh, what will be his reward as he faces the great number who lie on the battlefield—dead because of the evil deeds which he committed?

Be it known unto you, oh reader, whosoever you may be, that God will bring the work of every man into judgment and He will reward him according to his doings. What a fearful thought for as many as have lived in sin!

Excuses will not avail when you come under the searching eye of God in judgment? You may put in a plea that you were weak and puny in the spiritual life, but He will tell you that He offered you His strength, and you, like one on another occasion, will stand speechless before Him. Did you say, "But I was greatly tempted." But He will tell you that He had assured you "that no temptation hath taken you but such as is common to man; that God is faithful and will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, and with the temptation He will make a way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it." Oh, man, while you may, turn to God and make your calling and election sure!

Bishop Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who spent years in India as missionary, and who was a bundle of enthusiasm for Christianity, quite pointedly says: "The whole Christian world today, and especially the great mission fields, need men and women who are willing and ready to spend and be spent in making Christ known to individuals." After all, that is the pressing need in the Master's service—we need mouthpieces through which Christ may speak to the individuals of salvation. Bishop Thoburn was right.

THE BIBLE AND THE DESTRUCTIVE CRITICS.

Our Methodist brethren are awaking to the reality of the situation and some of them are becoming alarmed at what critics are doing. The following article was written by a Methodist preacher who scents the coming storm from afar, and he is seeking to awaken the Methodist Church to the dangers they are now facing. If this talk is needed for the Methodist Church, it must be good for other churches, and so we are printing the article and will ask our people to give it careful attention, especially do we request any number of our scholars who may be afflicted with this disease we call higher criticism, to give this paper close attention. If you find anything which is untrue in it then call our attention to it, and if you do not find anything but the truth in it, we specially advise you to accept and make it your own thought. The article was originally written by the Rev. E. Myers and appeared in a recent issue of The North Carolina Christian Advocate. The article follows:

Second Timoothy 3:16: "All Scriptures is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

Second Peteer 1:21: "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

If these Scriptures are true the Bible is not to be subjected to the criticism of man.

By criticism is meant the study of the Scriptures with the purpose of finding out and eliminating anything that is not in accord with the notions or tastes of the critics.

I take the ground that the attitude of the critic toward the Bible is both irreverent and presumptuous and is a very dangerous thing to do, for in Rev. 22:18-19, we read, "For I testify to every man that heareth the words of prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book:

And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life and out of the holy city, and from the things that are written in this book."

We can tamper with real men and human institutions, but when we come to tampering with God's word and divine things, we had better undertake to handle the forked lightning.

I believe the whole Bible as we have it is inspired of God. The Orthodox or Dynamic theory of inspiration commends itself to men and women of faith in God and we accept the Bible as God's book. The critic admits only the latitudinarian theory of inspiration which seems to be a mere intellectual affair, poetical fervor caused by the friction of thought through the brain and is wholly within the one thus inspired. That there is such an inspiration to speakers and writers no one will deny who has spoken or written in a real sense; but such an inspiration could not make a book of many books such as the Bible, a consistent and agreeable whole.

Some things that prove the inspiration of the Bible might be consider here:

1. The excellency of the doctrines, precepts and promises and other instructions which it contains.

2. The simplicity and majesty of the style and much of it from uncultured men.

3. To the agreement of the different parts and the scope of the whole on all essential points.

4. The testimony they bear to man's fallen and ruined state and the way of salvation through Christ and the agreement of the writers of different ages, times and circumstances shows that one super-mind controlled and inspired all of them.

5. The writers themselves claimed divine inspiration and their claims are fully established by the miracles they wrought and other supernatural manifestations.

But I am not writing with any hope of convincing any of their errors. I know that it is of no use. No fundamentalist even among our greatest scholars could do that. "Ephraim is joined to his idols," and the conceit of the whole bunch in their pretended scholarship and wonderful discoveries so blinds them that they see nothing else. Their constant references in their writings to the Scholars and always to the Apostles of Darwinian Evolution show their infatuation for that old skeleton that should have been buried years ago. Darwin certainly did his race a great damage as he perhaps realized in his last days, for he is quoted as saying he would have to die an agnostic. I would like to know why men want to teach Darwinism and stay in the church that has for its foundation the Bible. Why don't they go on with their science and form or build a structure of their own in which their doctrines may shine out and show it up in all its glory? But, no, they want to hang on to the church and endeavor to drag it down with them. The church which was built up by holy men of God inspired by the Holy Spirit and built upon the Rock, the Lord Jesus Christ, whose Christhood they deny and the Bible which they deny also.

The first thing these gentlemen should do if they are going to preach Darwinism is to withdraw from the church, the only consistent thing for them to do. When men go out to preach doctrines that are entirely antagonistic to the doctrines of their church as some of our preachers are doing, what should be done with them? They antagonize the following of our articles of religion: Nos. I, II, III, V, VI and XX. If this is not heresy and that of the rankest and most aggravated form, then what is it? Do we still try men for heresy? But some one will cry out, "Oh, you are intolerant." Yes, I am. There are certain things that cannot be tolerated and this one of them. So the church should expel them if they do not withdraw. Why do I advise such a course? Because they are determined to take the church and the schools with them. And the church must use drastic means to get rid of their doctrine. They are conceited enough to think they are taking the church with them.

No, Brother Editor, we have not gone over. Very few have when we compare those who have with those who have not. The great rank and file of our preachers and laymen have not budged toward going, not even thinking of it. But I here and now admit a fear and sound a note of warning that if we will let you and your crowd have our periodicals, colleges and other educational institutions, that a few years hence you will have a majority or at least enough to cripple the church in its education, evangelization and service. We have a bit of it at Trinity College, a bit of it at Emory University and Vanderbilt has had it for years, and is no doubt in my mind the chief cause of their taking the university as they have from the church—they wanted to follow some of the northern universities. Those who have kept up with Dr. Grant, of the Protestant Episcopal church of New York in his defiant statements to Bishop Manning will notice his claim that it (the Destructive Criticism) is taught in every modern university of the Western World.

On December 26 in Cambridge, Mass., a convention of Evolutionists passed a resolution committing themselves to the purpose of putting their teachings into the schools of the country, and they are doing it just as fast as they can. While the church sleeps the enemy sows the tares. We have been asleep while we have been electing these fellows to the General Conference. A larger per cent of them are in the General Conference than in any other body, as we have been electing the men who have had better opportunities for scholarship, but I shall never vote for another one and shall use my influence to keep them out of our law-making body as well as out of our educational institutions, as this is the only way to save the church.

I supposse the next thing we may look for will be an effort to recast the faith and creed of our church. I remember when a few of this same kind of teachers undertook to have the creed changed, but they found themselves up against too difficult an undertaking.

The great bulk of our preachers and laymen are sound in the faith and we will remain so if our colleges and universities can be controlled, but they are making young preachers of this type. Watch Trinity and other colleges send their young preachers who graduate there to the northern universities where they are teaching it.

Locke, the celebratd philosopher, said: "Of all the men we meet with, nine out of ten are what they are, good or bad, useful or not, according to their education." It is the kind of education that makes these Rationalists. The youth gets under the influence of these Rationalists at an age that he is easily influenced. His theological views are not formed, so they fix him, stamp him and he goes out full of pride and ambition, thinking he has all there is, he is in line with the scholars. These critics have no gospel message for the people; their message is one of only darkness and uncertainty. They deny the Bible account of creation in general and of man and therefore no need of redemption; no atonement, no meditation, no propitiation for sin and of course no shedding of blood was necessary; and if there had been need of atoning blood, there was none that was efficacious, as Christ, the only one for whom such claims have been made, was only a man and his blood would be of no more value than that of any other man.

They have no song of redemption, no song of the returning wanderer or prodigal to his God, of the lost sheep found, or a sinner saved by grace. The only song that is appropriate for them is "Hark, from the Tomb a Doleful Sound," and they can sing only the three first stanzas of that, as the fourth and last is a prayer for grace. It is from this crowd that we hear of the "New Revival," (a "tearless revival as was sounded out from Nashville during the Centenary campaign), a revival with no warnings from Mount Sinai and no promises of pardon, peace and cleansing from Mount Calvary, but a revival such as the clubs and fraternal orders have, when they want members, surveys, drives, etc., a simple campaign for members, or a trick or scheme to get the children in without an adequate chance for conversion through Decision Days in the Sunday schools—and this is the way to fill up the church with worldings who do not know or love God or His church.

One of these critics said in his address at our summer school for preachers at Trinity College, "The Higher Critics have saved me my Bible." I took this as a boast of his former unbelief in the Bible, but when the critics came along and denatured the Bible (took the Deity out of it) he then could accept it. The difference between him and some of the rest of us is that they are trying to take our Bible away from us, but I am so glad that they cannot do it.

I am not writing this in defence of the Bible. It does not have to be defended, apologized for, bolstered up, or anything of the kind. It has stood all the storms of the skeptics in all the ages and it only needs to be preached, believed and obeyed and this will bring us peace here and heaven in the end. Then, why am I writing this? As a protection to the people, the young, the defenseless, those who have not studied and settled these things for themselves.

We will preach and stand by the Old Book and "earnestly contend of the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Amen.

SHORT TALKS ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

Leviticus, The Book of Worship, Sacrifice and The Priesthood.

Leviticus is one of the richest books of the Bible, and yet it is not a popular book with the masses, not even with many Bible readers. Many shun the book of Leviticus, because, as they think, it contains little or nothing for them. They are mistaken in this thought, for the book holds the central ideas of salvation and since this is true, the book should be carefully and prayerfully studied. We admit that much of the teachings of Leviticus are not readily and easily understood, but this fact should urge us on to the more devoted study of the contents of the book. Many a man has lived and toiled hard in cultivating his little farm and made but little, all because he persisted in digging only on the surface of the land. If he had left the surface and digged deep, he might have found gold in abundance. It is much this way with many people. They work only on the surface and get but little or nothing.

Let the earnest and sincere Bible student be not discouraged when the truth seems hidden. Dig but the harder for the precious ore. Generally, truth presented in the Bible under symbols is vital and rich, but it takes persistent and determined work to get down to its real meaning, and it takes more than that—there must be a hungry and a praying heart behind it all that you may press on till you get down to the real gold of rich truth and its meaning. A hungry man will find food if it be possible. Then if you are not urged on to study the Bible to get its richer truths, just stop and pray for a hungry heart, and as your heart gets to be hungry, you will dig deep for the truth that will satisfy your heart longings. If you have no such longings you may know that it is because your heart is not hungry, being satisfied to feed merely on the perishing food of the earth.

The book of Leviticus opens with the law of offerings unto the Lord. In these offerings some of the most precious truth of the Word of God is presented in symbol. The fact that the truth is wrapped up in symbol is only an added reason for seeking it. Take the two thoughts of atonement by ascrifice and mediation by the priest, and you have given to you in Leviticus a fine type of the work of Christ in saving the world from sin.

Atonement simply means covering. Do you ask, A covering for what? Well, a covering for the sinner—instead of leaving the sinner exposed in sin, the garments of salvation are given to him as a covering to protect him in Christ from his sins and their consequences. However, no man can put on this garment except through faith in Christ. Paul calls this putting on the garments of salvation, imputing righteousness to the believer. The priest of the Old Testament is a type of Christ under the dispensation of the New Testament.

The sacrifices of the Old Testament, or offerings, were used in the early days of salvation. These offerings were five and meant much to the man who was turning to God.

1. There was the burnt offering which consisted in an offering to God, taken from the altar, where it burned continually. The offering usually was a whole animal and was a symbol of the whole life given to God in undying, all-consuming zeal for God and His service. It was made daily on behalf of all the people. It was to be doubled on the Sabbath. See Numb. 28:9, 10. It was also to be a great feature of the special festivals. See Numb. 28:11—29:39.

2. the Meat-offering was an unbloody sacrifice. It did not consist, as you might think, from the term meat, of flesh, but it was made of pure flour, oil, and wine, seasoned with salt. It was a significant offering. The flour indicated the support of life, the oil signified the fulness of that life, while the wine pointed to the fact that its vigor and zeal are of the Lord. The meat-offering was made at the morning and evening sacrifice. See Exod. 29:40, 41. In a symbolic way this meat offering was a type of a life truly given to God.

3. The Peace-Offering was bloody, consisting of an animal from the herd. Its flesh was to be eaten, the blood was to be poured out and the fat was to be burned, all of which meant to signify that the offerer should eat neither fat nor blood. See Lev. 3. It was a thank-offering. The whole offering pointed to Christ as the great Peace-Offering for reconciling the world to God.

4. The sin and trespassing offering were propitiatory or expiatory. It consisted of the sacrifice of an animal and its blood was to be disposed of in three ways:

1. It was to be sprinkled before the veil of the sanctuary.

2. It was to be sprinkled on the horns of the altar of incense.

3. And the remainder was to be poured out at the foot of the altar of burnt-offering.

The flesh was to be burnt without the camp, or to be eaten by the priests in the holy place. See Lev. 4, 5, 6 chapters.

These offerings expressed confession of sin and a sense of its ill-desert. The sin-offering it is thought expressed a confession of sin in general, or of offenses when the person committing them had done so unwillingly, while the trespass-offering was designed to confess some particular sin which disturbed him though unknown to the community.

There were eight feasts. Six of these were feasts of days and two were of years. 1. The Sabbath feast. 2. The Passover, or feast of unleavened bread. 3. Pentecost, or Feasts of Weeks which came fifty days, or seven full weeks, after the passover. 4. The Feast of Trumpets which came on the first day of the Lunar month. 5. The Feast of the Atonement which came on the tenth of the seventh month. 6. The Feast of Tabernacles, or the season of Ingathering, which came five days later. 7. The Feast of the Sabbatic Year. 8. The Feast of Jubliee, or fiftieth year, which came at the end of seven full heptades of years. They had what was known as the Sabbatic system, seventh day, seventh week, seventh month, seventh year and a heptade of years.

All these were dealing with the life of man to bring it into perfect submission to God, and as such all pointed to Christ who would complete the bringing in of the life to perfect submission to God.

On the great Day of Atonement the goat was slain to represent the guilt which had been expiated by blood. The scape-goat, azazel, or removal, referring to the removal of offenses from before the face of God. This gives us the idea of grace in its two aspects. 1. Passing over transgression. 2. The fact of remembering it no more. See Micah 7:18, 19 and Heb. 8:12.

The chief personage on the human side is Aaron, the High Priest, the man who was chosen to go to God in behalf of the people. The great themes of the book are acceptable approach to God, pardon, reconciliation and consecrated service. There are two divisions of the book. One part is from chapters one to sixteen, which treats of the way to God by sacrifice. The second division runs from chapter 17 to 27 and treats of the walk with God by sanctification and separation from sin. It therefore seems to be a clear setting forth of truths which deal with the life and service of a man in the closest possible way and for the highest possible results and ends.

In Lev. 1:4, we read:

"And he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering: and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him."

The laying of the hand on the man who was making the offering on the head of the victim of the burnt offering indentified him with it. In type this answers to the acceptance and identification of himself with his offering. Christ is our offering, hence when we by faith lay hold on Him, we identify ourselves with Him, and therefore the believer is justified by his faith in Christ and Christ becomes his substitute, imputing to man the character and life of the Christ. If you wish Bible authority, get your New Testament and turn to Rom. 4:6, 8, 11, 22, 23, and James 2:23.

The book of Leviticus is a marvel of richness in the thoughts of God for the saving of the world. Do not fail to study it long and prayerfully.

JESUS' NAME.

The name of Jesus is the sweetest name on earth. It is the "name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord." Our eternal salvation depends wholly upon our relation to the bearer of that name. "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." It is through His name we have life. It is through His name we become sons and daughters of God.

No one on earth can tell the worth of His name. It is the name which calms our fears and bids our sorrows cease. It is the name which smooths the rugged hill and the thorny road. Upon entering the room in the hospital a few days ago where my sister was coming out from under the influence of the ether, she said she had had a blessed experience. She had been afraid she would be assailed by doubts and fears, but there had been nothing of the kind, for no thought had stayed with her except, "Jesus is the name."

No other name does us any good in the trying times which come to all sooner or later. But we can take the name of Jesus with us everywhere we go. It defeats the tempter; it is a shield from every snare. It gives strength in weakness and comfort in sorrow. It gives power in service. Asking in that name meets every need. whosoever will do the Father's will, then whatsoever he may ask in the name of Jesus will be given him. The power of Jesus' name is beyond anything we can think or ask.

"Jesus, thy name I love,
All other names above,
Jesus, my Lord.
O Thou art all to me;
Nothing to please I see,
Nothing apart from thee,
Jesus, my Lord."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

That fifty thousand dollars the Henderson Convention voted to ask the Conferences composing the Convention to request the local Churches to raise ($2.00 per capita) for Convention purposes, will not reach the people until it is thoroughly considered by the Conferences and fully understood by the members. Careful thought will reveal the fact that it is easy of accomplishment, and that no Church is too poor to raise the money. When once the plan is set up and the members understand it, it will put Convention departments in a position to carry on their work without embarrassment to boards or the local Churches.

For ten years before the World War—that is, previous to 1914—the per capita tax for the United States government was $9.00; for States, the lowest was $5.00; for counties, $5.00; for cities, $10.00. This made a total lowest per capita tax on the people of the United $29.00. At the present time the per capita tax for nation is $40.00, and for State, county, and city, $40.00, making the total per capita tax in this county $80.00 per capita. Of course, each individual does not pay eighty dollars per year, but that is the average.

If the people can pay $80.00 per capita for governmental purposes, they can pay $2.00 per capita to the Convention. In the local Church, some members could pay $10.00 to this fund, which would make the average for five members; another might pay $20.00, which would make the average for ten members; and so on. Besides this, most members in any Church can pay $2.00 a year for this great work if they will take the pains to figure a little. There are fifty-two weeks in the year—4 cents per week would give $2.04, and that is only a fraction over half a cent a day.

I saw three little poor children the other afternoon on the street and I asked them where they were going. They answered, "To the movies." I said, "What does it cost for each one"? Their reply was "Only 15 cents in the afternoon." That was 45 cents for the three. That would have paid this Convention call for nearly four weeks for the three had they been members of the Church.

A dozen eggs at 20 cents would pay for five weeks for one member. Of course this does not include local current expenses in the Church nor local Conference expenses; but it will include all that we have been giving for Convention purposes, foreign missions, Convention missions, Elon College fund and Convention fund. It would simply be an increase over what the Conferences have been giving to these funds. It would mean that Conferences would give three times as much as heretofore to the Convention's use; but when it begins, the Men and Millions pledges will be out of the way and, as a whole, it will be less than what is now being paid by apportionments and pledges.

With the co-operation of pastors and officials, it can be done religiously, economically, satisfactorily, and to the glory of God.

ELON LETTER.

I am writing at this time an open letter to our pastors and lay leaders in our local congregations. And I think they will appreciate what I am planning to say. This letter is not undertaken in the thought of criticising or blaming any one, but in the hope that it may suggest a method of meeting a situation needing a solution.

Here is the situation: Gathered at Elon for instruction and training are more than 200 of the most intelligent and promising young people in our Brotherhood. On May 29 these young people will depart for their homes, some of them never to return here and some to return after three months. What of these young people when they reach home?

During their absence of nine months, the local Church has provided for its work without their assistance. When they return, so many of them tell me, they feel there is no place for them to work, and they are anxious to be used, though they do not say so because, if they should, their motive would be misunderstood.

Now, on the other hand, some of our pastors have complained to me that Elon students do not fit in with the local Church when they return home.

It seems to me, the trouble lies in the lack of a method of approach, and I am going to suggest a definite plan of procedure for this summer. I hope it will be tried, and I believe it will help clarify the situation.

I am pastor, for the time being, of X Church, and I have two young people of my congregation at Elon who will spend the vacation period at home and return to Elon in the fall. I am expecting them to come to the services the first Sunday in June, but I will not rest satisfied merely to expect. As soon as possible after they get home, I will call to see them and invite them to be present, expressing my satisfaction in having them back again amid the hallowed associations of home and the Church. I will have the leader in every organization in which these young people should work likewise call and present a similar invitation.

Before these young people reach home, while they are still in our college, I will write each a letter, saying how I am glad to think that soon they are to be at home again and will suggest two or three ways in which each can help in the local program during the summer months, and ask them to choose one or to suggest to me other work more desirable to them personally.

So handled, I can be sure, under normal conditions, they will be present the first Sunday in June. I will, in my service that day, find opportunity to say that Elon has closed, and we are glad to welcome our members home and to the Church, and, further, that next year I hope we shall have these back at Elon and others with them.

I will get these young people to plan with me for "College Day" during the summer, and will use them in the program. I will at all times make them feel they are needed in the Church.

I am sure this method will not reach all. Some young people, like some older ones, have very little place for the service and sacrifice required by the Church and its program. But it will work with many. Why not give it a trial?

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE.

Those who have inaugurated the movement of "Mother's Day" have set apart the second Sunday in May; and no movement set on foot in recent years deserves heartier support. Jesus glorified motherhood when He said: "Honor thy mother." Carlyle once said to his mother: "If I had had all the mothers in the world to choose from, I would have chosen you." Lincoln said: "All that I am or ever hope to be I owe to my angel mother." "A kiss from my mother made me a painter," said Benjamin West. Jean Paul Richter said: "To the man who has had a good mother, all women are sacred for her sake."

The mother is the luminary that shines and reigns alone in the early life of the child, this being true, she should seek to develop the higher and better faculties of her children, weaving into their lives thoughts and feelings, rich, beautiful, grand and noble, which will make all after-life brighter and better.

Mothers, for the most part, make the children, either for good or evil. Byron's mother was proud, ill-tempered and violent. Nero's mother was a murderess. Lord Bacon's mother was a woman of superior mind and deep piety. Washington's mother was pious, pure and true. If the inquiry is made as to the greatness of a man, the answer is generally found in noble motherhood. "Give me," says Garibaldi, "the mothers of the nation to educate and you may do what you like with the boys." Mother walks in the shadow of all true greatness; her health, brain, encouragement, and moral character have entered into the success of every son and daughter. She paid the price to give them life, and every day for years and years thereafter she toiled incessantly to push them on toward their goal. She labored that they might secure an education, poured into them ambition when they grew discouraged and filled them with hope and faith when their own fail; and when the big thing came, people praised and acclaimed them, but no one seemed to think of the quiet, insignificant little woman in the background, who was the real power behind the throne.

People hurrah for the President, Governor, Congressman or Mayor, but the real secret of his success is often tucked away in that little unknown, unappreciated, unheralded mother; his education and chance to rise may have been due to her sacrifice. It is a strange fact, nevertheless, that our mothers are the molders of the world, whether they get the proper credit for it or not, and although seldom mentioned among the world's achievers. By the time a man is married, his character is formed, and he changes very little. His wife may do much toward polishing him up and boosting him up the ladder, but unless his mother first gave him intellect to scintillate and muscles to climb with, she labors in vain. His mother has made him; and no matter how hard she tries, there is very little she can do toward altering him. It is the things that he learned at his mother's knee, the principles that she instilled in him in his cradle, the taste and habits she formed, the strength and courage she breathed into him, and not the philosophies, theories, or code of ethics that he acquires in older years that really influence him.

John Gray said: "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." The queen that sits upon the throne of the home, crowned and sceptered as none other can be, is the true mother. Her enthronement is complete, her reign unrivaled, and the moral issues of her empire are eternal. "Her children rise up, and call her blessed." Scotland, with her well-known reverence for motherhood, insists that "An ounce of mother is worth more than a pound of clergy." Napoleon cherished a high conception of a mother's power to shape the destinies of his nation, and expressed it in these words: "The great need of France is mothers." An ancient Roman orator expressed a great truth when he said, "The empire is at the fireside." It was Mohammed who said: "Paradise is at the feet of mothers." What revolutions would take place in our families, communities and nations if that strange, magnetic power were consecrated to the welfare of the child and the glory of God.

There is no name connected with human relations so sacred as that of mother. No name more sweet or precious, or expressive of more important duties or relations. How infinite are the possibilities and how great the responsibilities! Think of the trust committed to a mother, an immortal soul inhabiting a mortal body, to be nursed and trained, developed and educated for time and eternity. Mothers, you are the divinely appointed teachers and guides of your children; and any attempt to free yourselves from your duty is in direct opposition to the will of God. If you neglect to teach them by precept and example, in things pertaining to the highest culture and a life of service to humanity, the consequences will be swift and sure, your disappointment fearful and your broken-heartedness appalling.

The greatest heroine in the world is mother. Who can fathom her love? No one else makes such sacrifices, or endures anything like the suffering that she uncomplainingly endures for her children. On the return of the victor of some petty battle, we cheer ourselves hoarse, when right by our side may stand one whose battle has not been small, nor of short duration, but who has fought many long and hard battles for us, when no one else would come near. Who held the cup of cold water to our fever-parched lips when we had the scarlet fever or diphtheria? Who bent over us day and night and fought away with almost supernatural strength the greatest of all enemies—death? It was mother. How the world's heroes dwindle in comparison with the mother heroine, whose life may have been a perpetual sacrifice—a living death for half a century or more. No matter how loving or thoughtful the father may be, the heavier burdens, the greater anxieties, the weightier responsibilities of the home, of the children, usually fall on the mother. Her sons and daughters may be ever so hard-hearted, unappreciative and ungrateful, or they may sink in the lowest vice or crime; yet they are always sure of mother's love, always sure of one who will cling to them when all others have fled. In our day of so much disobedience and dishonor to parents, I am glad that mother's affectionate care is still felt and appreciated by many, if she is sadly neglected by others. A young man in New York was arrested for attempting suicide. "So your best girl is dead," sneeringly said the magistrate, "who was she"? Without raising his eyes, the unfortunate victim burst into tears and replied: "She was my mother." How little we realize what tragedy may be going on in the hearts of those whom we sneeringly condemn. And, likewise, who can ever predict the tragedies that have been enacted in the hearts of mothers, who have suffered untold tortures from neglect, indifference, and lack of appreciation.

A mother who had done everything in her power to make life worth while for her children, was sadly neglected by them in old age. When dying of a broken heart, the oldest son saw his mistake, and cried: "You have been a good mother to us." Her face brightened, and she whispered: "You never said so before, John." Then the light died out, and she was gone. If you have any flowers for mother, give them now; if any kind words, say them now; if any burdens to lift from mother's heart, lift them now—for no amount of money spent on caskets, tombstones and flowers, and no depth of mourning at the funeral can ever atone for the negelect and mistreatment of mother while living.

No man worthy of the name will ever neglect or forget his mother. President McKinley provided in his last will that, first of all, his mother should be made comfortable for life. What an impressive and beautiful example of real manhood, in the college graduate, who introduced his poor, plainly dressed mother to his classmates with as much pride and dignity as though she was a queen! On the other hand, what ingratitude is seen in other college men whose mothers have made similar sacrifices, and who were ashamed to have them attend their graduating exercises, ashamed to introduce them to their classmates. The best tribute any of us can pay to our mother is to emulate the good traits in her character and to care for her in her helplessness as she did us in ours. Let us unite in making "Mother's Day" a great day.

DOES GOING TO CHURCH PAY?

A Fine Answer from the Southern Churchman.

The Church would make men and women know that their lives cannot be refreshed for the highest and holiest adventures unless they drink from the springs which flow in her.

Carelessly or sneeringly, people may ask sometimes, "What is the use of going to Church? What good does it do?"

What good does climate do? What is the use of changing a glacial epoch to the conditions of the temperate zone? What good does it do to have the spring come instead of winter? Or sunshine instead of storm? We cannot in any case see a difference that is measured by the ticking of a clock. One condition does not pass into a different one by some abrupt change which leaves a track so clear that even the shallow-witted and careless could not be blind to it. Little by little, one period and one climate changes to another. From hour to hour we cannot see much difference in its effects; but take a span of time sufficiently long, and we can behold the transforming things which happen. Death gives way to life. Dullness blossoms into beauty. The frozen ground is melted, and the rivers run. The buried seed is quickened, and up above the ground the flowers push their way. So it is with the influence of worship. We may not be able to weigh and measure any benefit of a particular service; but if with honest eyes we appraise our own lives and appraise the lives of mothers and fathers and friends who have been faithful to the Church, we know that on the whole the soil of their hearts is different from that of those who immerse themselves in nothing but a selfish and unspiritual atmosphere. There is a possibility of growth in them for all gentler and sweeter impulses. Seeds of great ideals at least find hospitable soil. The manner in which, during the war, every great philanthropic and humanitarian cause turned instinctively to the Church and gained the overwhelming proportion of its response from Church people, was only one testimony to that fruitfulness in good things which the atmosphere of worship produces. If a man or woman does not care for these things, if it matters nothing to him or her that the heart should be hard and indifferent and selfish, then the blessing of the Church may have no appeal; but if, as is surely true of most of us, we do really want our lives to blossom into some grace of holiness and beauty, then we need the warmth of the Church's worship as the meadows need the sun.

Further, there is the aspect which looks to the future. What do men wish to leave to their children? Houses, perhaps, or lands, or money! Yes; but is a fine house an honorable possession if it is only a shelter for a contemptible inhabitant? Is money worth anything if the child has grown into the man or woman who uses that money basely? Are lands and great estates worth anything if they only exhibit on a larger scale a little, shriveled personality who struts about them? Why should we be careful and troubled about many things and forgetful of the only thing that is of supreme and eternal worth? The one worthy possession which we can give our children is an inspiration for a noble life. Will they gain this best if they see us unconcerned with worship? Will they gain it best if they have never been taught by our example to bow with habitual reverence in the presence of God? Will they gain it best if they have never learned the prayers which the lips of the generations have made holy, never listened to the reading of the Gospels, never felt their spirits stirred with that awareness of the little child to the devotion of all the great company of people about him whose worship leads his wonder on, as he sits in his place in Church? Whatever be our conception of the past, whatever be our thought of need or lack of need for the present, are there any who dare withhold from little children whom they love the inspiration that should build the future by the beauty of God's plan for them?

IN LOVING MEMORY OF MISS IRENE BARRETT.

On April 1, 1923, Easter Sunday, in the home of her father, Miss Irene Barrett met with a terrible accident. In passing too near a very hot stove, her skirts caught on fire and she was terribly burned.

She was nursed by loving hearts and hands, but instead of recovering she grew weaker, and three weeks to the day (April 22) she passed on to her reward. She had just passed her twenty-first birthday in December, 1922. Oh! what a sad Easter Day it was for Irene and her loved ones.

Irene was the baby girl of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. H. Barrett, of Antioch Church, near Windsor, Va. She leaves a devoted mother and father, six brothers—J. C., of Defiance, Ohio; R. H., R. A., M. T., of Norfolk, Va.; and W. D. and J. A. Barrett, of Zuni, Va.—three sisters—Mrs. R. P. Cobb, of Norfolk; Mrs. G. L. Webb, of Zuni, and Mrs. W. A. Strickland, of Pine Level, N. C. All are heart-broken because Irene is gone, to be with them here no more.

Irene was a very true, consecrated, pious Christian girl, and greatly loved by those who knew her best. A few hours before she breathed her last she called for her father to come and pray that she might die. That was indeed hard for him to do, but her pleadings were so earnest and commanding, and her sufferings so intense, that God gave her relief. She begged her brothers and sisters to live Christians, and meet her in heaven. She asked them not to grieve over her, as she was going to be happy—"Oh, so happy with Jesus."

It was a sad, but triumphant departure. Irene will be greatly missed by the Church, the Young People's Society, and her Sunday School class, and by the whole community, but nowhere as much as in her home.

May God give sustaining grace to her mother and father, brothers and sisters, and may we all be constrained by this beautiful life just passed into the beyond to live more pure, consecrated lives, and be prepared to go to our heavenly home, as we believe Irene did.

BIG THOUGHTS MAKE BIG MEN.

The following article was selected by Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., from columns of Christian Work, and sent to The Sun for publication. We join him in commending it to our readers for a careful study.—Editor Sun.

The writer of this editorial has had the rare opportunity of preaching almost every Sunday during the last ten years in the Churches of every Protestant denomination in the United States and England. Every Sunday has found him in a different Church, before a different congregation, in a different part of the country. Generally, these Churches have been the largest, with the largest congregations. Naturally he has formed a habit of "sizing up" both minister and congregation as he has worshiped with them for an hour and preached to them. He has come to several conclusions, all of which he thinks would be interesting to his readers and which he may share with them at some early date, but one conclusion has been driven home upon him with irresistible force, namely: that "big thoughts, big interests, make big people." There is all the difference in the world between the congregations which he addressed, and he has become so sensitive to congregations that he can tell almost at a glance, at least after ten minutes of preaching, whether the congregation has been led by its pastor out into the great spaces of the kingdom or whether it has heard simply what might be called a parochial interpretation of the Gospel. He can almost tell at a glance by the character of the people before him whether they have had a world vision of the Gospel held up before them or simply an application of it to their own personal needs.

Let us be more specific. The people who have had constantly kept before them the wonderful work the Church has been doing in its foreign missionary activities, how it has been revolutionizing the whole thought and ideals of China, India and Japan, are invariably a higher, broader type of people than those found in a Church whose vision never gets beyond its own walls or its own town at the utmost. The writer can tell them almost at a glance. They are bigger men—bigger intellectually, culturally and spiritually. Big thoughts make big men. Broad vision makes broad-minded men. Knowledge makes powerful characters. We are so sure of what we are saying here that we dare to presume to advise all pastors reading these words to bring before their people at least once a month the wonderful things the Church is doing in its foreign and home missionary work. We do not mean that one should advertise that a missionary sermon would be preached, but we mean that the way to broaden your people, strengthen their character, make them the big things the Gospel is doing, is to keep them interested in its world-wide sweep.

Again, one can almost tell at a glance whether the people before him have had the application of the Gospel to the great social, international, universal problems of the time put before them, or whether they have heard only its application to their own personal, individual needs. There is a difference almost immediately perceptible in the two congregations, in the bigness of the people. It is the difference between the parochial, provincial mind and the cosmopolitan, inclusive mind. We have had pastors complain to us that they did not enjoy preaching to their particular congregation because it was so cosmopolitan and provincial. Well, is not a congregation largely what the preacher makes it? You cannot have big men in your congregation if in your sermons you lead them only in narrow, high-walled ways. Try talking them out into the broad places of the Gospel. Show them what the Gospel is doing in the solving of the great social and industrial problems. Get them interested in the Christian aspect of internationalism; show them that only as the nations practice the teachings of Jesus in their ideals and relationships is there any hope of brotherhood or peace. Remind your people continually that Christianity means that the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of Our Lord and of his Church. Thus you will soon transform your congregation, raise up big men.

It is equally true with thoughts as well as interests. The minister who from week to week deals with trivial sermon topics will always have a trivial congregation. Small, narrow thoughts make small, narrow men. When we read some of the sermon topics advertised in the Saturday evening papers we do not wonder at the character of some of the congregations. We have met them. We knew without being told by papers or by voice the kind of sermons they were hearing from week to week. We really believe that the great difference we see in congregations is not due to education, cultural advantages, social standing, outstanding business position or the lack of these, so much as to the type of preaching the average congregation is hearing from week to week. We have been reading Dean Brown's "Yale Lectures on Preaching." In the course of the lectures, where he is talking about expository preaching, he incidentally tells the courses of sermons through which he carried his big congregation at Oakland, Calif. He says: "In the last Church I served, the First Congregational Church of Oakland, Calif., where I was pastor for nearly fifteen years, I find from examination of my record book that during those years I preached courses of expository sermons to that one congregation as follows: From the Old Testament, six months on Genesis, three months on Exodus, three months on Joshua, three months on Judges, two months on the life of Elijah, as recorded in Kings, two months on Job, six months on Isaiah, two months on the minor prophets. * * * In the New Testament I preached for six months on Matthew, six months on Mark, twelve months on Luke, * * * six months on John, six months on Acts, two months on Romans, three months on first and second Corinthians, and two months on the Book of Revelation." We preached before this fine Oakland congregation once, but had we never heard of it, we would have known its character at sight—better still, we would have known its character before seeing it had we heard this bit of information from Dean Brown's diary. For fifteen years, Dr. Brown had been preaching on the immensities of the faith. He had carried his men week by week up to high mountain-tops. Every Sunday found him and his people considering deep, broad, universal thoughts—for there are no other in the Bible. Compare the congregation thus living for three years with Dean Brown with one living for fifteen years on the themes advertised in the average Saturday night paper. Big thoughts make big men.

In conclusion, might we say a few words about preachers. We meet them every week—often in their homes—and what a fine set of men they are. But we can tell almost with the first word whether they are living with big thoughts or whether they are allowing themselves to dwell simply in the little world of parochial tastes. We are glad to find so many who are reading the big books and who are coming out of big worlds to minister to their people. (So many ministers come out of the same small world of daily tastes and occupations in which the congregations live.) The Church needs as never before prophetic men in the pulpit. The faith is being assailed on every side—not as in the days when Ingersoll and Blatchford denied God—but the Christian conception of man and life is what is everywhere being assailed. It is in every play, every novel, many a book and essay. It is denied in the talk of the various clubs and societies which meet week by week. It is being assailed by the lives of reckless pleasure so many are living. The presentation of the great, fundamental Christian ideals of life is needed as never before, and it cannot be done by little men. We wonder if our clerical readers have happened to note that such men as Mr. Wells, Mr. Shaw and Mr. Bennett, to mention only a few who have the ear of the people, seem to have read every book that was ever written and are perfectly at home in all the great literatures of the world? The defenders of the faith, the men who are meeting their attacks upon the Christian ideal are equally at home with the great thoughts of the world. We would urge upon every young minister "who reads these words that he shut himself up in his study at least five mornings of the week—uninterrupted mornings—not necessarily in the direct preparation of his sermon, but in real study of the Bible, the great philosophers and poets, and in the reading of the really big books that are occasionally being published. (And as to these latter, stick to the big books. Six months put on Josiah Royce's "Problem of Christianity," on Dr. Headlam's "The Doctrine of the Church and Reunion," is worth a hundred common-place, easy books.) Our whole point is that the constant associations with big thoughts makes big preachers just as the living in large interests makes big laymen.—F. L., in Christian Work.

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

In making his splendid report of the Christian Orphanage to the Convention at Henderson, Brother Kirk Holt, Chairman Board of Trustees of the Orphanage, made a suggestion which is worthy of ready and wide acceptation. It was to the effect that in our Sunday Schools on the Sunday that the offering is taken for the Orphanage, some one appointed for the purpose should tell the school something about the Orphanage. The writer, in many places and ways, suggested to our schools that there should be a mission superintendent or secretary, whose business it is either to make a talk on missions or secure some one else to do so the day the offering is taken for missions. Why should not this same mission superintendent or secretary make a talk, or secure some one else to do so, about the Orphanage the day the offering is made for the Orphanage? Brother Johnston, of the Orphanage, would gladly furnish data and information to any person in any of our schools desiring it, and I am glad to supply missionary matter and data for missionary talks before the school. It would seem to the writer a most fitting thing that the mission secretary or superintendent of the Sunday School should make, say a five-minute talk before the school about the Orphanage once a month when the offering for the Orphanage is to be taken, and a five-minute talk once a month before the whole school on the day the mission offering is to be taken. Our people everywhere, and certainly our young people in the Sunday School, need to have brought before them, and repeatedly, facts and information about missions and the Orphanage, and other enterprises of the Church, as for that matter. Brother Holt's suggestion is a timely one, and the writer trusts it will be widely adopted, and it can be done without multiplying officers or unduly taxing the time and resources of any one.

NEWS FROM FANCY GAP.

While attending the One Day School of Missions at the different Churches in Virginia and North Carolina, I promised a letter to The Christian Sun. Should like so much to write a letter to each of the many friends to whom I am grateful for kindness shown me while I was a guest in their homes, but that is impossible.

I arrived in Mt. Airy at 11:45 A. M. April 21st. Mr. McMillan met me at the station, having gone down the preceding day. At 1:15 P. M. we began to ascend the mountain, reaching Elk Spur at 5:15. We were tired and ready to enjoy our supper.

During April the weather was quite cold here. The apple tres are very full of blooms now. I recall that at the Raleigh Church apple blossoms decorated our lunch table on April 14th.

So many of our children in the Elk Spur School are having whooping cough. This is my first experience, in school, with the disease, and I am truly sorry for the children. However, they are brave, some of them refusing to stay at home, even though they are not really strong enough to be in school. Almost all of those who had not had it at some previous time had taken it before I returned, so it was not thought necessary to keep any out of school on account of contagion.

Our school will close Friday, May 18th. The parents are invited to spend the afternoon with us. We shall have cakes and lemonade.

Since my return to Fancy Gap, I have visited several homes in which I had not been before. I always enjoy visiting these mountain people. Am sorry that I can't go oftener and stay longer.

Some of the ladies whom I met at the missionary rallies told me that they always look anxiously for the letters from the mountains. I assure you that I shall read The Sun with renewed interest. Am already reading some items of interest concerning a number of people with whom I became acquainted while attending the meetings.

It is, indeed, a joy to me to know so many of the faithful workers of the Christian Church. The spirit of Christ was so beautifully manifested in our meetings and in every home in which I was guest.

A number of friends of our work here expressed their desire to visit us this summer. We shall be very glad to have you come. In this way, you will learn something of the unbounded hospitality of these mountain people.

Assuring you of my interest in every phase of our work for the advancement of Christ's kingdom and desiring your earnest prayers for the success of our mountain mission, I am

Yours in the service of Christ,

Margaret H. Morey.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

We are glad to report progress in the work of the Elm Avenue Christian Church. A series of evangelistic services were conducted from April 8 to 22, resulting in a spiritual uplift among the Church people, a goodly number of reconsecrations and professions of faith in Christ, and 22 additions to the Church. There was another addition last Sunday morning, making thirty received into membership since coming on the field in November.

There have also been improvements made recently in the interior of the Church—an enlarged pulpit platform, an altar rail in front, and new pulpit chairs, a new floor and a new carpet, thus adding to the appearance of the building and to comfort in the winter time. The labor was contributed by the members and friends of the Church, the men laying the new floor at night.

The pastor and his wife are now very comfortably located in the new parsonage recently built on a lot adjoining the Church, 1508 Elm Avenue.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, a former pastor, who greatly endeared himself to the people here during his short pastorate, was with us on the fifth Sunday night in April, and preached for us.

We have found some splendid friends and earnest Christian people down here and plenty of work to be done. The people have been responsive and our work together has been pleasant, and we trust profitable.

The expressman, a few weeks ago, delivered at our door a nice large barrel of sweet potatoes. We soon saw that this was from some of our good friends of the Wakefield Christian Church, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Harvell. This was a remembrance that we are still enjoying and for which we are grateful.

Kindest regards to all our friends who read these lines and to all others.

Very sincerely,

W. D. Harward.

WORK OF THE BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

The report of the Board of Religious Education for the year ending May 1, 1923, was read to the Southern Christian Convention in session at Henderson, N. C., on May 3d. In part, the report presented by Dr. W. T. Walters, chairman of the board, was as follows:

A summary of the work done through the office of the field secretary of the board from May 1, 1922, to May 1, 1923, includes the following:

Tabulation of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Reports.

A list of all Sunday School and Christian Endeavor workers is kept in the office. A handbook was edited and published, giving minutes of five Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions held in 1922, and statistical tables for both organizations, as far as statistics could be obtained. Two thousand copies were published and mailed free of cost to all ministers and Churches in the Southern Christian Convention. The Handbook showed 200 Sunday Schools, with 20,618 members. The Southern Christian Convention Annual, published some months later, shows 201 Sunday Schools, with 22,165 members. Seventy-one Christian Endeavor Societies —Junior, Intermediate, Senior and Alumni— have been reported during the year. Definite statistics regarding membership could not be secured from all, but all have been active during the year.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions.

Five Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions were held in 1922, including two new Conventions organized in Georgia and Alabama. The office of field secretary co-operated in planning programs, sending out report blanks, and sending letters to all teachers and officers, urging attendance at the Conventions. In North Carolina, the field secretary acted as both general and recording secretary as well. Leaflets were distributed at all Conventions.

Chautauqua and School of Methods.

The 1922 session of the Chautauqua and School of Methods was held at Elon College, August 30th to September 4th. The attendance was small, but otherwise the session was successful. Forty-three enrolled for the week, and a great many others attended one or more classes, and the evening sessions. The program for the 1923 session, to be held at Elon July 30th to August 5th, is largely arranged and the advertising begun.

Institutes.

Since April 1, 1922, institutes have been held in all Conferences. In April, 1922, Churches in Georgia-Alabama Conference were visited in one-day institutes and eight places in North Carolina. In May, 1922, five institutes were held in the Valley of Virginia. In March, 1923, thirteen institutes, two sessions each in most cases, were held in Eastern Virginia, reaching thirty-three Churches, with an attendance of over 1,300. Also five nights were spent by the field secretary in teaching a class in the Sunday School Institute held in Christian Temple, Norfolk, and three nights in leading an institute in Richmond.

Children's Day.

"Children's Day" programs prepared for 1920 and 1921 were mailed to a large number of schools in 1922. Offering envelopes were sent to all schools, and 38 Churches responded with offerings.

Men and Millions Day.

In co-operation with Dr. Atkinson, Dr. Harper, and Mr. Johnston, a leaflet was prepared for "Men and Millions Day" in the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies during January, 1923. A great number of schools observed the day. Five thousand leaflets were mailed to Churches requesting them for use.

Contest for Ten Per Cent. Increase.

A contest for increase of 10 per cent in enrollment was held in May and June, 1922. Report cards, with a plan for the 10 per cent increase, were mailed to every Sunday School, and weekly reports requested for six weeks. Sixty-four schools responded, and 1,111 new members were enrolled.

Office Work.

The bureau of information has been maintained, and a great deal of literature mailed out. About 850 personal letters, and 5,000 circular letters have been prepared and mailed, and 300 inquiries answered by mail and 1,300 postal cards mailed.

Christian Sun.

Sunday School notes and Christian Endeavor notes have been furnished weekly to The Christian Sun, and also other material weekly.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools were conducted last year at Bethlehem (Valley of Virginia); Pleasant Grove, Va. (N. C. Conference); Holland-Holy Neck (Eastern Virginia), and at the Elon Chautauqua. The field secretary co-operated in organizing, purchasing books and supplies and assisting during the first days of all schools.

FORWARD TOGETHER.

This Convention owns and seeks to promote enterprises—a Church paper, a Christian Orphanage, Church colleges, missionary interests at home and abroad. I am wondering if the remoteness of these enterprises from their primary object does not cause us to sometimes overlook their primary object? J. O. A.

Write to the office of the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., for envelopes for your "Children's Day" offering in June.

THE SECOND ANNUAL CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AND SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Christian Endeavor and Sunday School Convention met at Rock Stand, April 21 to 22. Owing to the unfavorable weather Saturday morning, our Convention did not convene until afternoon. However, at the 11 o'clock hour, Rev. G. D. Hunt preached a splendid sermon, using for his text "Christian Education."

Early in the afternoon the Convention proceeded to organize. Rev. J. H. Hughes was elected to succeed himself as president, and Miss Burma Dollar was elected secretary and treasurer.

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, our field secretary, being present, was invited to a seat in the Convention. She responded by a very appropriate address, and took a like interest in all the afternoon discussions.

The first subject for discussion was "Why We are Here," by Rev. J. D. Dollar, followed by "Better Sunday Schools," round-table discussion, which was led by Mr. J. W. Payne. There was a very active interest manifested by all present. The condition of the Sunday Schools of the entire Conference was discussed, and many favorable reports were heard.

Then came the subject of "Christian Endeavor Methods," led by Miss Myrtle Pinckard, who delivered a very beautiful address, which was followed by other pleasant addresses.

The subject of "Training Our Future Missionaries" was assigned to Rev. C. W. Carter, who was present and discussed his subject in a very able manner.

While the afternoon session was instructing and entertaining, the evening session far surpassed it. A beautiful Christian Endeavor pageant was rendered by some of our young ladies of Rock Stand Christian Endeavor Society. This offered splendid entertainment to a large audience. Then we had an address by Miss Eldredge. Her subject was "A Challenge to the Teacher." Miss Eldredge simply captivated the audience with one of the most beautiful and impressive addresses that it has been our pleasure to listen to.

The main features of the Sunday's session was a splendid Sunday School, with an article read from the pen of Dr. W. W. Staley, which was written for the occasion. Then we heard another fine address from Miss Eldredge. Her subject this time was "Religious Education." This is a subject Miss Eldredge seems to love to discuss. any way, she knows well how to discuss it.

Taking all into consideration, we had a fine Convention. While only ten of our schools and some four or five societies were represented, yet the interest manifested was great. Miss Eldredge made a host of friends, and, we feel, did an immense amount of good. We all are united in extending to her an invitation to come again.

MISS BURMA DOLLAR.

A MINISTER PREPARED.

The editor of The Richmond Christian Advocate has been giving attention to the matter of the supply of ministers for the churches, and after thinking it over, he expresses his thoughts along that line, as in the article quoted below, and believing what he says to be well worthy of the attention of our readers, whether they be preachers or not, we give it as follows:

This is the day of technical education and trained leadership. In medicine, the greatest of sciences with the most extensive scholastic teaching and scientific experimentation, no man presumes to cover the whole field of medicine and surgery. Even the general practitioner has become a specialist. Time was when a college graduate might be employed to teach any subject, now men prepare for certain branches of study. Language and scientific studies are divided up among many schools and teachers. If the medical practitioner must be so thoroughly equipped by classroom lectures and laboratory experiment as to know by touch of the finger the beat of the pulse, by the hearing of the ear and by the response to his touch the action of the internal organs, what shall we say of the minister who must know the heart throbs and all the deep feelings of humanity? More than all the science of medicine, law, sociology and economics must the minister know how moves the thought and inward impulses of individuals and masses in every current of life. The care of souls is the minister's special and divinely appointed task. He, like the Master, must read each wound and weakness clear and know all those feelings cherished and wakened only by kindness.

"'Tis not a cause of small import,
The Master's care demands;
But what might fill an angel's heart,
It filled the Master's hands."

The minister's education must be all comprehensive. He must be all things to all men. This does not imply that he should know all things, but he must have the education that makes for true culture, fine manliness, sympathy, helpfulness and grace that he may serve most truly as his Master served and helped men back to God.

A great preacher nearing the end of his life, suffering with a serious malady, rose from his couch and said, "I must go preach. No," he said, "I cannot preach. No man can preach." The wisest, like Newton, consider themselves but children still unknowing, but ever learning like children on the seashore gathering here and there new gems of truth. There is a perennial freshness and beauty in growth in our holy religion in that the saints are ever learning and becoming in knowledge and in fact more like the blessed Lord Jesus. It doth not appear what we shall be, but we shall be like Him. "And so the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain until now." True ministers upon whom the care of the churches rests are in travail until Christ be formed in all men. The minister with such a passion will consider himself ill prepared for his work to which Christ has called him unless he has sought by the best means possible to fit himself by studies and scholastic training for the most efficient service. With such a man, it will not be a question, what shall I preach and where shall I find sermonic material, but how shall I with discrimination select out of all my studies and God's great thoughts revealed in His Holy Word the message sad, sinful and broken humanity needs? Moreover, in the manifold duties now upon ministers in this age with so many complex and complicated relations, "just any kind of a message, so that it is a gospel message," will not do. Many sins against God and the sheep Christ has given us to tend have been committed by the lazy resort to such sinful sanctimoniousness. One cannot open the Bible anywhere after he has gone into the pulpit and take the first text upon which eye lights and expect the Lord to fill his mouth. Such a man is feeding on wind and feeds his people on hot wind.

A call to preach is the call to prepare to preach. In the long list of the chosen epochal world leaders all were prepared men: Moses, Isaiah, John Baptist, Paul and others in holy writ, and Huss. Luther, Wycliffe and Wesley, with Moody and Mott of these modern days. In State affairs, God has had His prepared men providentially led. No man taketh the office of the ministry unto himself. These modern days demand men with a message for the modern mind in a world vastly different from our fathers' world. No period of ten years has so changed world thought, ideals, ambitions, socials, business, home and church relations as the last ten. The mature man of today finds very little in his sermons of other years adaptable of these times. Even in more than his message must the minister discover the new approach to men. Our discipline says, "The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men, in which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments duly administered." But should ministers today confine themselves to preaching and administering sacraments little would be accomplished. The church today is a school of religion, a place of training, the drill ground and place of preparation for individuals and groups of men to receive instruction, enduement of power and inspiration to go forth as ministering servants with messages of truth and glad tidings for the world of men and women that have gone away from God.

CARPITE FLOREM.

When every dale is rich with green,
And arabesque with flowers,
When blue-bells o'er the brooklet lean
To ring the fleeting hours,

When crocus comes with store of gold
To rival sunny treasures,
When lovers plead the story old
Or sigh in amorous measures,

There's radiance rife on sea and land,
Transforming everything
By Nature's necromantic hand—
Rejoice: 'tis gentle Spring!

Then let us wander down the vale
And up the winding shore,
And see the primrose bending pale
As in the days of yore.

What though the witchery of Spring
Be all too bright to last?
The more the reason now to sing
Before it all be passed.

FAMILY ALTAR

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

By Dr. J. Gregory Mantle, D. D.

Monday.

"Kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation."—1 Peter 1:5.

"I praise the Lord Jesus for His quiet and marvelous keeping power in my soul. I previously believed in His keeping power, but oh! what an angelic luxury to be profoundly conscious of it, to feel the Omnipotent power walling me in. How He has given me wings just in time to fly over some chasm; how He has taken me up and borne me on His wings when there was no strange god with me; how He has kept my heart turned towards the summer glow of His holy face; how He has kept my will in unbroken humility and blissful slavery to His own way; how He seizes on my interior nature, keeping me in perfect peace! I have learned how safe it is to utterly abandon myself to God's warm and rapid currents, feeling sure they will not run me ashore. I just let God hold me, having the inner witness, that He would sooner let go all the stars than drop a little one like me."

Dr. Steele.

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
He'll never, no never, desert to His foes;
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
He'll never, no never, no never forsake."

Tuesday.

"Let no man deceive you by any means."—2 Thess. 2:3-7.

The present hope of the Church is the fulfillment of the promise of Christ in John 14:2, 3: "I come again" (present tense), "and will receive you." Christ puts no interval between. He would not have anything between the heart of His believing ones and His coming. The length of time intervening makes no difference, provided you put no circumstances between. He would have the brightness of the hope before the eye undimmed.—1 Thess. 4:13-18; 1 Cor. 15:51-54. This is the Church's hope; not the anti-Christ, not the Great Tribulation, not the year-day theory. The sun in the heavens we are told is ninety-five millions of miles distant; if the atmosphere is clear, we see its light too bright for the eye, and feel its warmth; but if you put even a sheet of tissue paper between it and you, its brightness and warmth are obscured. When the Lord said, "I go," "I come again," He foresaw that more than eighteen hundred years would elapse between, as He said in the parable of the talents (Mat. 25:19): "After a long time, the lord of those servants cometh." And in Rev. 2, 3, He gives an outline of the Church's history in emblem, and century after century we have seen this history fulfilled. —Thos. Newberry.

"Oft methinks I hear His footsteps,
Stealing down the paths of time;
And the future dark with shadows,
Brightens with this hope sublime.
Sound the soul-inspiring anthem;
Angel hosts, your harps attune;
Earth's long night is almost over,
Christ is coming, coming soon."

Wednesday.

"Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb."—Rev. 19:9.

"She shall be brought unto the King in raiment of needlework." "The marriage of the lamb has come, and His wife hath made herself ready, and it was granted her that she should be arrayed in fine raiment, clean and bright. The fine linen is the righteousness of the saints." There are two kinds of garments mentioned here—the one, clean robes, and the other bright robes. It is not enough to have clean robes at a marriage feast—they must also be bright robes; it is not enough to have white raiment—we must have the full pattern worked out in our life, in all its threads and stitches. You get your garments from the clothes-line clean, but you get them from the laundry more than clean; they are also bright and lustrous. And so we must also stand the pressure of God's ironing hand, with its heat and its heavy weight, and its pressing and polishing, until He can behold His face in our shining countenances and read the fulfillment of His perfect will in all the embroidered pattern of our complete lives. —Dr. A. B. Simpson.

"Behond the Bridegroom and His friends;
Behold the feast that never ends!
O happy virgins counted meet
To see their King,
And gather round His blessed feet"!

Thursday.

"He answered him never a word."—Mat. 27:14.

"Never judge nor condemn, never arraign nor censure. Not a word! Never an unclean nor an unkind expression. Not a word. Never a doubt nor a fear. Not a word. Never a disparaging remark of another. As you would others should do to the world, so do ye. Not a word. Pause! Be still! Not a word, emphatically; not even a look, that will mar the sweet serenity of soul. Get still. Know God. Keep silence before Him. Not loud words in prayer, stillness is better than noise. Not a word of murmuring nor complaining in supplication; not a word of nagging or persuading. Let language be simple, gentle, quiet; to speak. Hearken to hear His voice. This you utter not a word, but give Him opportunity is the way to honor and to know Him. Not a word—not the last word. Listen to obey. Words make trouble. Be still—this is the voice of the Spirit. Take no thought for tomorrow; worry not about home, Church, nor business cares. Cast all on Him and not a word. We think so hard, and pray so hard, and trust so hard, that we become unrestful and disquieted and noisy, and thus drive Him away." —Stephen Merritt.

"Spirit of purity and grace,
Our weakness, pitying, see;
O make our hearts Thy dwelling-place
And worthier Thee."

Friday.

"God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able."—1 Cor. 10:13.

Do not make the mistake which many have made, in imagining that when you become a disciple of Jesus Christ there will be immunity from temptation. Temptation is sure to come to you, and it will come after your greatest blessings. It was after Jesus was filled with the Holy Spirit that He was led into the wilderness to be tempted of the evil spirit. After a time of great spiritual enjoyment, look out for a time of fierce temptation. Never be taken by surprise. Never be taken unawares by the conflict which is sure to come. "The greatest of all temptations," says an old Puritan, "is to be without any temptation." What did he mean? Surely it would be delightful to be without temptation. He meant that if it were possible for us to make our bed on roses, "to be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease," as we so often sing; if it were always fair weather, and wind and tide were always with us; no worse thing could possibly befall us. How could the sinews of the soul harden in a long Italian summer of unbroken ease, and idle calm? We need the gymnasium of temptation for our development.

"In the feebleness of nature,
Never from Thy child depart,
Infinitely good, and greater
Than the evil of my heart.
Watch, and hold me back from sinning,
Self-inclined from Thee to stray,
Stop me at the first beginning,
Turn my tempted heart away."

Saturday.

"He is like a refiner's fire."—Malachi 3:2.

There are two fires to which the soul is subject—the fire of sin and the fire of God. One consumes the soul, the other everything that impedes the soul. The fire of sin comes when God is absent, the fire of the Holy Ghost when God is near. Water is a divine symbol for cleansing. Some things it cleanses to perfection, but there are other things it cannot purify. A stronger agent is needed. This is found in fire. Take a piece of ore, wash it with nitre and soap, and you have taken away the dust and rubbish. Have you taken away the dross? Ah, no! that is too deep for water. If you take a hammer and chisel and seek to separate the dross from the ore, you will fail. It needs fire. But put it into the crucible, let the fire be fanned to torrid heat, and in a few hours all the dross is gone, and nothing but the pure ore remains. Some of us have watched more than once these processes of purifying and refining, and always with new and deeper thoughts of God's method with His people. "He is like a refiner's fire." "He shall baptize you in fire." "Our God is the consuming fire." In such-like Scripture grooves our thoughts have run, while witnessing the fiery ordeal and its marvelous power to refine the object which it seemed to scorch and torture. Yes, we have said, we see it; we know it well. This is God's iron, just as He made it; but God's iron must have God's fire to burn out and purge away its dross.

"Refining fire go through my heart,
Illuminate my soul,
Scatter thy life through every part,
And sanctify the whole."

The Man with a Great Vision.

How far can you see? How strong is your spiritual vision? Cornelius Vanderbilt, as a private in the World War, wrote the following lines, which portray the relation between the vision and the daily grind. The vision makes possible the daily accomplishment:

"Courage! What if the snows are deep,
And what if the hills are long and steep,
And the days are short, and the nights are long,
And the good are weak and the bad are strong?
Courage! The snow is a field of play,
And the longest hill has a well-worn way;
There are songs that shorten the longest night,
And a day, when wrong, shall be ruled by right.
So, courage! courage! 'Tis never so far
From a plodded path to a shining star."

But the shining star of vision is necessary in these days when the Church is calling as never before to her best young men and women to see a world which needs Christian leadership. God needs workers who can see, through eyes of faith and hearts of devotion, and Christians who are not afraid to trust Him by attempting great things. A great vision is one of the characteristics of a great life. Men who have accomplished the greatest things in the world have been men who have had great visions of God. "Saul of Tarsus, on the Damascus road, saw Jesus Christ, and out of that vision came a power of manhood that has thrown itself beneficiently across twenty centuries. Luther, in his monk's cell, had a vision of the spiritual, and out of it came the Protestant Reformation. Because David Livingstone had eyes to see, Africa today is toned with light." (Rev. Robert F. Coyle, D. D.) So with Abraham Lincoln. So with John Wesley. So with countless others of the great heroes and heroines of the world. So with Isaiah, who walked the lonely path of a great prophet and leader, inspired by a vision of God.

Visions differ in their nature. That of Isaiah was so clear that he could relate vividly every detail. Others come more quietly in the hours of meditation and communion as a great conviction is born and a call headed, as in the case of Charles Sumner, of whom Whittier wrote:

"No trumpet sounded in his ear,
He saw not Sinai's cloud and flame;
But never yet to Hebrew seer
A clearer voice of duty came."

The motive power which impelled Isaiah in his great career is found in his heavenly vision and commission. "Because he saw his glory and he spake of him" (John 12:41), is the New Testament testimony of his experience and work. Isaiah saw through a vision, and then was not "disobedient to the heavenly vision." He saw Jehovah as the Great Ruler of all the earth; he saw himself as a "man of unclean lips," who needed the Father's pardon and cleansing; he saw a nation which sorely needed the message of Jehovah. And the vision led him to see that God was calling him to the task, not an easy one, of leading his own people back to the true God, and gladly, clearly came the answer: "Here am I; send me." He did not pause to ask, "Where"? nor "When"? nor "Why"? He was ready. God needs workers today who are ready to go, or to stay, to preach or to pay, to give and to pray—that all of His children may be brought in close touch with Him.

Isaiah's message was "Come ye, and let us walk in the light of Jehovah." And "Hear, and your soul shall live," or "Seek ye Jehovah while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near," as he pointed the people on to the time when He should come whose "name shall be called, "Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace."

In your study, think of the "Patriot in the Valley," whose very home in the lower part of the city of Jerusalem was called the "Valley of Vision"; of his love for his nation, which surpassed even that for his home and personal comfort; of his eloquent sermons and great messages which seemed always to be so well fitted to his hearers; of his desire to impart the good news that some day the great Saviour would come to the earth; of his courageous example to others who love the Heavenly Father and His children, to respond to the vision that God is sending still.

And, as you think of the great life and ministry of Isaiah, the "Man of Great Vision," remember that the same world still needs his message, and that God still needs messengers. Seek to strengthen spiritual vision, and to develop world Christians who will never be content until His will is done on earth, even as it is in heaven.

"Let none hear you idly saying,
'There is nothing I can do.'
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you,
Take the task he gives you gladly,
Let His work your pleasure be;
Answer quickly when He calleth,
'Here am I; send me, send me.' "

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

Subject: "Medical Missions at Home and Abroad."—Matt. 4: 23-25, 10: 5-8.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Christ included physical healing in his ministry along with preaching and teaching. He reached men's hearts through caring for their bodies and curing their diseases.—Verse 23.

Throngs heard of Jesus through His miracles, and came to be healed and went away with a more precious gift, His teachings in their hearts and their sins forgiven.—Verse 24.

Disease and suffering still drives multitudes to seek divine help. Missionaries find that they can often help a home most by caring for a sick child or suffering man or woman. When the body is cured, a confidence is created which leads to an opportunity for spiritual teaching and influence.—Verse 25.

When Jesus sent out His disciples, one of their commissions was to "heal the sick." Thus He placed His divine sanction upon medical missions in the very beginning of His ministry. And this work is still a vital part of the missionary program.

The need for medical missions is very great. Conditions of health are far different in non-Christian lands. From three to ten times as many babies die in the non-Christian countries as in the United States. In our country, the average length of life is forty-three to forty-five years, while in India it is little more than half that. Twenty years of life lost for every individual, on the average, in India! Twenty years, which medical missions might save.

The non-Christian world suffers from many great plagues. From 1896 to 1907, India lost 6,000,000 from plague.

No part of the world is safe when great nations have no medical treatment. Influenza is said to have appeared first in Central Asia thirty years ago.

The great opportunity for the medical student and nurse who wish to invest their lives where they can do the most good is found on the foreign mission field, where there is a very urgent call constantly for medical relief, and a very inadequate force to meet the crying demand.

Plans for the Meeting.

This topic is the third in a series of four missionary topics, studying evangelistic, educational, medical and industrial missions at home and abroad. If possible, secure a Christian physician or nurse, or both, to speak to the society on the subject of "Medical Missions" at this meeting.

The Christian Missionary, or the Missionary Review of the World, or the boys' and girls' magazine Everyland, or any other missionary periodical will furnish information and stories for this meeting.

The motto for the meeting may be, "For the Healing of the Nations," and one society has used the plan of writing invitations to the meeting, or topics for short talks and questions on small pieces of paper and delivering them in capsules, like those doctors use for medicine.

The familiar hymn, "The Great Physician," sung softly as a solo, will be very effective just before a season of prayer.

Topics and questions for discussion:

"Qualifications of a Medical Missionary."

"The Need of the World for Medical Care."

"The Missionary Opportunity of a Doctor (or Nurse)."

"What Can our Society do in the Field of Medical Missions at Home? Abroad"?

"Christ the Healer."

Suggested Hymns: "Help Somebody Today," "Jesus Shall Reign," "America the Beautiful," "If Jesus Goes with Me," "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," "Jesus Saves."

CHILDREN'S DAY.

In many Churches, "Children's Day" and June just naturally come together. This is the time to be preparing for that program for the day which is the children's own. What will the program be? Many Churches are coming to see Children's Day as an opportunity to use songs, stories and Scripture verses which the children have learned in their classes. Many teachers are making the material learned for "Children's Day" a part of their class work, and insisting that it shall be something which is worth learning for the child to keep as a part of his Sunday School teaching. Never were more attractive programs offered than now. The Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, offers a number of programs at reasonable prices. The Hope Publishing Company, 5707 West Lake Street, Chicago, issues two good programs: "The Time of Joy" and the "Way of Gladness." The Pilgrim Elementary Teacher, a magazine especially for workers for children, will publish a new program in its June issue, and also offers copies of programs of other years for sale at 10 cents a copy. Whatever program is chosen, make it really a "Children's Day"—a time which they will enjoy and love.

In the Southern Christian Churches, the offering on this day goes to the Board of Religious Education to help to extend Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work in every way possible. Envelopes will be sent on request for this offering. If you believe in Sunday School, you have an opportunity to say so in your "Children's Day" offering. If you believe that the boys and girls of today need the best kind of Christian education that the Church can offer them, see that your Church takes the "Children's Day" offering for the sake of other children. Make "Children's Day" one of the happy days of your Sunday School year.

"Praise now we sing,
Sweet flowers we bring
Unto the children's Friend,
Jesus, our King."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

The Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention is in session at Dry Run Christian Church this week. Mr. Roy A. Larrick is president, and Mr. A. P. Liskey, secretary.

Liberty (Vance) Christian Endeavor Society, Mr. C. O. Renn, president, is growing and doing splendid work. A special service with a Christian Endeavor Pageant is planned for May 20th. Over fifty members are now enrolled.

The field secretary visited several Churches in the Alabama Conference recently, and the interest in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work was especially gratifying. Among the Churches visited were Antioch, Beulah, Wadley, Christiana, Rock Stand, Noon Day, Lowell, Mt. Zion, New Hope and Pleasant Grove.

Several Churches are laying plans to hold Daily Vacation Bible Schools this summer. Definite dates should be arranged very soon in order to leave time to prepare well for the work. The Bethlehem Sunday School, in the Valley of Virginia, is now planning for its second year's session, and Holland-Holy Neck leaders are doing the same.

A new organization has been effected recently in Winchester, Va., known as the Men's Bible Class Association of Winchester. Mr. Roy A. Larrick, of the Christian Church there and president of the Valley of Virginia Sunday School Convention, has been chosen as the first president of the organization. Under his leadership, the association will make a real contribution to the religious life of the city.

Miss Emma G. Lemen, superintendent of the Children's Division of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association, has consented to attend the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods, July 30th to August 5th, and to teach the class of workers with children. Many Sunday School teachers should avail themselves of the opportunity of spending the week in work and association with Miss Lemen, who is one of the leaders in children's work in this country.

JUNIOR CHURCH AT ELON.

[Note.—The Junior Church at Elon College has now been conducted successfully for several months under the leadership of the Junior pastor, W. B. Terrell, a member of the Burlington Church and a ministerial student in the college. Mr. Terrell sends this account of the work of the Junior Church by request of the field secretary.—L. M. E.]

About the first of January of this year, a Junior Church was organized at Elon College. This work was undertaken by Dr. W. A. Harper, S. M. Lyman and the writer, who was selected as the pastor for the Junior Church. This work is in connection with the work of an advanced class in Religious Education of the college.

Perhaps the Junior Church is something new to some of our people, as there are very few of them in Churches anywhere, and especially in the South. They are springing up in all parts of the country, however, and they are filling a real need. The movement is becoming one of interest to Church leaders.

The Junior Church is a regular Church service and organization for boys and girls—one that seeks to train them in Christian worship and service. It serves their religious life in the same way that the regular Church service does the religious life of the adults. The service is held at the hour of the regular morning worship. The boys and girls attend the Sunday School and then come to the room set aside for their use for their service. Of course, in large churches they will, no doubt, have a large room for their Junior Church. Here at Elon, the work is handicapped by not having a good meeting place, having to use one of the class-rooms, and since the fire it has been even more inconvenient. At present, the girls' gymnasium is being used for a place of worship

There were about fifty children present at our second service, and they were very enthusiastic over the thought of having a service all their own. This is one of the greatest things that appeals to them—to know that it is their service. It is a recognized fact that boys and girls do not attend the morning Church service in gratifying numbers. Every one admits this, and regrets it. Often parents do not want to be bothered with them. They feel that it is enough if they attend Sunday School. Then, too, most of the average sermon is "over their heads." It is not interesting to them. The Junior Church tries to have a service which the children can understand and which is interesting to them. The members of this Junior Church range in age from about two years to twelve years. The work here at Elon has been hindered by many things, but in spite of this the progress is very encouraging. It is hoped that something permanent in the way of a Junior Church organization will grow out of this effort.

Miss Helen Johnson, of Norfolk, Va., and Miss Pattie Coghill, of Henderson, N. C., are assisting in the Junior Church services by playing and singing. All are enjoying this work with the children.

W. B. Terrell, Jr. Pastor.

Christian Orphanage

A ROUND HUNDRED TO CARE FOR.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The superintendent of the Orphanage was attending the S. C. C., Henderson, N. C., last week; hence the absence of our weekly letter.

The rain has hindered us very much in our farm work, and we are not as far along with our farm work as we had hoped to be at this time.

Our good women are going to see to it that we reach our goal in sheets and little dresses. We just lack six sheets and six dresses being to our goal of 200 in both. Somebody send them in right quick and help us up to the goal. We can always depend on the good women helping us out when we are in need. If our men were as good as the women to help us in this work we would have a happy time.

We asked our Churches for $3,000.00 for our Easter offering this year. We always need the special Easter offering to tide us over the lean months of spring and summer when our income is low and our expense heavy. Up to this time seventy-six Churches have responded, and we have climbed up to the sum of $1,488.99—nearly half-way. I truly hope all the Churches will make the offering, and all those that have not made it will make it this month. It is not too late. We will give your offering a happy welcome.

It has been necessary to spend $2,000.00 on repairs and putting new furniture in our old building to make it more attractive and more up-to-date. Nothing of any consequence had been done to it since it was built in 1905. We had been waiting till we thought we could spare the money to make the necessary repairs.

We have 100 children in our care. Pray for us; back up your prayers with your help. This is your institution. These are the Church's adopted children. You should want a part in their support.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Mrs. Treva McMullen, Middletown, Ind., 1 dress; Mrs. Bertha Smith, Dadeville, Ind., 1 dress; Missionary Society, Greentown, Ind., Mrs. Stella Bogue, president, 17 dresses, 2 suits, underwear, 2 skirts, 2 pair hose; Mrs. Clayton W. Showalter, 114 W. Lafayette Street, Goshen, Ind., 2 dresses, 2 suits underwear, 1 pair slippers, 2 pair hose, 1 hat; Mrs. Henry Brown, McCullers, N. C., 1 dress.

A LITTLE GIRL WHO LOVES HER SICK MOTHER.

In looking through one of our exchanges today, I saw a letter from a little girl, written to that paper about her invalid mother? What she said of her mother was so innocent and sweet and what the editor has to say to her was so tender that we wish our readers, young and old, to see it for themselves. The little girl wrote saying:

I am a little girl thirteen years old. I keep house for my invalid mother. I am sending her name in Bible verses. I want to surprise her. Please print my letter and mother's name.

Your little friend,

Chatham, Va. Bell Grant.

To this the editor replied as follows:

Dear Bell—We are delighted to have a letter from a little girl that can be as helpful and loving to mother as we know you are. How about sending us a good recipe that you use as a housekeeper? I think the other girls would be interested. Maybe there are some other little housekeepers who would like to try your recipe or to send us one of their own. H. A.

OUR TRUE WEALTH.

In a public park in Manchester, England, is a statue to the memory of Joseph Brotherton, who represented that city in Parliament for many years. On it is this inscription: "My wealth consisteth not in the abundance of my riches, but in the fewness of my wants." Let us learn to make the most of the enjoyments we have, and not worry about those we have not. We have friends, and home, and health, and hope—let us enjoy them. We can, indeed, so educate our will-power that it will focus our thoughts on the bright side of things, will lead us to see the good we have, until we shall attain such a spirit of happiness as will make us rich. The habit of making the best of things, of always looking on the bright side of things, is a fortune in itself. To make the least of our lacks, and to make the most of our present enjoyments will go far toward giving us the riches of contentment—a good suggestion for ourselves and our people.—The Expositor.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

IN MEMORIAM.

BONDS.

Paul's "bonds became manifest in Christ throughout the whole pretorian guard, and to all the rest," and his life confirmed his doctrine. It was thus that Paul made his imprisonment to minister to the "progress of the Gospel." From his experience the Christian should learn to know the value the opportunities for serving the Master offered by his own afflictions. Almost every affliction changes his circumstances or his relations to others to some extent. Thus the failure of his plans, or misfortune, may compel him to seek new occupation or a change of locality. Death may either make him dependent upon some one or bring the care of others upon him. In every case affliction will at least draw the attention of his fellow-men to him. He, therefore, should examine closely every new relationship into which he is brought, to see whether it offers a new opportunity for witnessing to the truth as it is in Christ.—Rev. Wilbur C. Mickey.

DIED.

Mary Margaret Duke, the little daughter of Rev. and Mrs. P. L. Duke, died April 3, 1923, age 8 months and 12 days. Services were conducted at the home by the writer. The following four little girls, dressed in white, acted as pallbearers: Eunice Layfield, Frances Powers, Earline Moody, and Margie B. Moody. The body was laid to rest in Girard Cemetery. May the dear Lord richly bless and comfort the bereaved ones. A. H. SHEPPARD.

DUTIES.

Ten little duties! Does no good to whine;
Skip about and do one, then there are nine.
Nine little duties, it never pays to wait;
Do one quick, and presto, there are eight.
Eight little duties, might have been eleven;
One done in time, now they're just seven.
Seven little duties, 'tisn't such a fix;
Do one more, and—bless me! they're only six.
Six little duties, sure as I'm alive;
Never mind, one's over, now there are five.
Five little duties knocking at our door;
Lead one off to Doneland, that leaves only four.
Four little duties, plain as plain can be;
Can't be shirked—one's over—leaving only three.
Three little duties, like a soldier true,
Meet them and vanquish one, then there be but two.
Two little duties between you and fun;
In just a minute longer there'll be only one.
One little duty—now what will you do?
Do it. Why, surely, now you are through.
—Selected.

THE STREETS OF GOLD.

The burdens of life may be many,
The frown of the world may be cold,
To me it will matter but little
When I walk on the Streets of Gold.

With joy I shall enter the City,
The face of my Saviour behold,
And I shall be changed and be like Him
When I walk on the Streets of Gold.

What wonderful visions of beauty,
What glorious scenes shall unfold,
What dazzling splendor will surround me
When I walk on the Streets of Gold.

I'll see the White Throne of His, glory!
The names of the saints there enrolled,
The mansions that Christ is preparing,
When I walk on the Streets of Gold.

Earth's sorrows will all be forgotten,
And I shall be safe in his fold,
Shut in with my Lord and His angels,
When I walk on the Streets of Gold.
—Hiram Vandyke.

DENIAL OF SELF.

There is no way of being delivered from this life of self but one; we must follow Christ, set our heart upon Him, listen to His teachings, give ourselves up every day that Christ may be in all of us, and by the power of Christ the denials of self will be a blessed, unceasing reality. Never for one hour do I expect the Christian to reach a stage at which he can say, "I have no self to deny." His fellowship with the cross of Christ will be an unceasing denial of self every hour and every moment.—Andrew Murray.

SIMS.

James T. Sims left for his home in the beyond on May 6th, aged 55 years 11 months and 23 days. He leaves a wife, one daughter, one son, three sisters and two brothers to mourn their loss. He had been a member of the Holiness Church for twenty-five years. The undertaker told me that it was one of the largest funeral processions he had seen —perhaps not less than fifty cars in it. This tells the confidence the people had in him and respect for him. God bless the bemoaned. Funeral services were held at his residence, on North Main Street, Danville, Va., and his body was placed in the Mountain View Cemetery. He got up Sunday morning, dressed himself, ate his breakfast as usual, walked around a while, went in the house and laid down, and was dead in a few minutes; but he was ready. Funeral and burial services by the writer.

HENRY STOUT.

Henry Stout was born in Germany on November 6, 1849. He came to the Orangeport section when a boy of two years old, and lived here until his death, May 2, 1923. In early life he became a Christian and united with the Evangelical Church. About nine years ago he united with the Orangeport Christian Church, and was a faithful and useful member until his death. Unless hindered by some cause beyond his control, he was in his place in the Church services and in his Sunday School class. It was a pleasure to him to study and talk of his Bible. He will be missed in his community and in his Church.

He leaves six sons and six grandchildren. In his last sickness he selected the Scripture lesson and text for his funeral services. The services were conducted at the Orangeport Church by the pastor. A large crowd attended and the floral tributes were many and beautiful.

R. H. PEEL.

W. H. BYRUM.

Mr. W. H. Byrum was born July 11, 1852. His first wife was Miss Martha Freeman. To this union were born Louise Francis, who married W. P. Clements, now of Richmond, Va.; D. Freemon, the only son, who married Miss Ellen Augusta Squire, of Northampton County, N. C. He died August 22, 1920; Jessie died in childhood. All the living members are here today.

He was married the second time to Miss Eudora Marks, of Chatham (now Lee) County, N. C., December 22, 1910. He united with the M. E. Church in young manhood and remained a faithful member until the day of his departure, May 5, 1923.

Many children came with garlands of spring flowers and lined the sides of the walk to the cemetery and covered the grave with many designs of floral offerings. Services were in charge of the pastor of the Baptist and Christian Churches.

D. A. L.

DIED.

Frank H. Nicholson was born March 19, 1891, and died March 29, 1923, at the home of his parents in Powell's Fort. His age was 32 years and 10 days. He was preceded to the great beyond by his wife, who died less than two years ago. Frank was a good boy, and a member of the Joppa Christian Church. He is survived by one little daughter and by his parents, four brothers and three sisters.

Funeral services were held at Joppa March 30, 1923. A. W. ANDES.

KELLEY.

Mrs. Helen Mabel Kelley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Brinkley, of Lower Parish, Nansemond County, Va., was born April 6, 1883, and died at her home, Monroe Hotel, Portsmouth, Va., March 27, 1923, at the age of 39 years 11 months and 21 days. On April 16, 1907, she was married to Mr. Samuel W. Kelley. Besides her husband, she left one daughter, Miss Margaret Louise Kelley, Portsmouth, Va.; her parents, of Nansemond County, Va.; five brothers and two sisters—Willie H., J. Edward, Rowland, of Norfolk, Va.; Linwood, of Chicago; Carlton, of Norfolk; Mrs. J. F. Wilroy and Miss Helen Brinkley, of Nansemond County, Va. Mrs. Kelley was formerly a student at Elon College, where she made a profession of religion and united with the College Church. She was greatly afflicted for several years and bore her illness with a patience and submission which became a benediction to all who knew her. She died in the triumphs of a living faith in Jesus Christ. The burial service was conducted at the grave in Norfolk, Va., by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley and Dr. Wm. A. Brown.

I. W. JOHNSON.

VALLIE MAUD COLLAR.

Vallie Maud Collar was born March 30, 1911; died, May 7, 1923. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Collar, who recently moved from Stokes County, and joined the Needham's Grove Christian Church last year, a family that everybody loves.

Vallie was only sick for a few days, and was unconscious most of the time. She was a good girl. She leaves father and mother, brothers and sisters, many near-relatives and friends to mourn their loss. She loved her Sunday School, her teacher and classmates. Her place will be hard to fill at home and at Church. May God bless the family and all that knew her. She was placed to rest in the cemetery at Needham's Grove Christian Church. Her funeral was conducted by her pastor. May God comfort the bereaved ones. W. J. EDWARDS.

To Bridge the Hudson—

"Contracts have been let for a bridge across the Hudson river between Anthony's Nose and Bear Mountain, north of Peekskill, which is to have a suspended span 1,632 feet long or thirty-two feet longer than that of the Williamsburg Bridge in New York City, at present the longest span in the world. The roadway will be 185 feet above the river and will have a capacity of 5,000 motor cars an hour. There is now no bridge across the Hudson south of Poughkeepsie."

Dry Negotiations with British—

Important measures for cooperation between the British and American governments to break up the rum running fleets along the Atlantic seaboard now are under discussion, Secretary Hughes has announced with the British officials voicing their willingness to help in stopping this illicit traffic. The British, however, stand firm in refusing to agree to mutual search of ships at sea, holding that the convention for the suppression of the slave traffic does not furnish a precedent for seizures of liquor carriers. But restrictions are being placed on the transfers of vessels to British registry and abuses of clearance papers are being remedied so as to handicap the rum runners—Ex.

Autos Furnish Bulk of Crossing Victims.—

Automobiles figure in 81 per cent of the accidents which occurred at crossings of public highways with tracks of the Southern Railway system during 1922.

Out of 474 crossing accidents, 384 were in connection with automobiles. Sixty-seven occupants of automobiles were killed and 194 injured out of a total of 86 persons killed and 274 injured in such accidents.

There were 64 accidents involving other vehicles and street cars in which four persons were killed and 68 injured, and 26 accidents to pedestrians, of whom 15 were killed and 12 injured.

These figures are contained in a statement issued by the safety department of the Southern, calling attention to the alarming increase of crossing accidents since the automobile has come into general use, indicating that drivers of motor cars do not take the same precautions at crossings that are taken by drivers of other vehicles and by pedestrians.

How Modern Prophets Fail: War Again!—

It might be easy to believe that the nations of the earth would now have enough of war, and that we would have no more war. That is what some of our modern prophets predicted would come to pass, but these predictions are now overshadowed with failure, as the following from the Literary Digest will show:

What Various Countries are Doing in Aviation.

Soviet Russia has begun the development of a great commercial and military aircraft program, and occupies an important position in the international race for supremacy in the air, according to the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, which has recently given to the press its annual survey of aviation throughout the world. The report, covering flying activities in fifty-eight countries, gives France the leadership among the nations in both commercial and military aviation. The Germans are said to be going ahead, in spite of the heavy handicaps imposed by the peace terms. The complete survey, beginning with the activity in Russia, runs as follows:

Russia is using German, French and Dutch airplanes. Special aviation schools have been established at Toula, Moscow, Smolensk, Kharkow, Pola, Ekaterineslaw, Mokilaw and Petrograd. The Council of Commissaries has voted to obtain 300 new airplanes for the Red army. It is reported authoritatively that 100 planes have been bought from Italy. In four cities the government has established domestic aircraft factories. The program for the year is fully to equip seventy fighting squadrons.

In all, the Soviet government's program calls for 5,000 airplanes with spare parts. With the assistance of German aeronautical experts, plans have been made for exploiting vast territories. Great trunk lines have been charted. It is proposed to have in operation by 1926 many thousands of aircraft. German pilots are expected to join the comparatively few Russian aviators on the commercial lines.

France, in developing the colonial air defenses, operates a passenger and mail service three times weekly between Algiers and Biskra; another between Oran, in Western Algeria and Casablanca, on the west coast of Morocco, twice weekly. During the first eleven months in 1922, the French built 3,300 airplanes for military and commercial purposes, and let orders for 1,200 additional machines. The French program for 1923 calls for 220 air squadrons, with ten machines to a squadron, or 2,200 planes with 100 per cent reserves. French air appropriations were greater in 1922 than all nations combined, aggregating $84,591,755.

In 1922 all the French air-lines operating to Africa, London, Brussels, Amsterdam, Tunis, Constantinople, Genoa and other points—in all, fourteen distinct air-lines—flew a total of 2,146,234 miles, carried 14,397 passengers, 1,165,216 pounds of parcels, and 90,580 pounds of mail. It is planned to link all possessions from Indo-China to Guiana, through Africa and the republic within two years. Aviation is being taught in the schools and colleges, and a completely equipped French mission is making a tour of the world, and giving demonstrations in Europe, Asia, Africa and South America.

Great Britain has centralized her aviation in the Air Ministry. Her royal air force numbers 3,000 officers [illegible] ed men. There are 33 [illegible] of them in the colonies, the Near East and India, and 12 in the British Isles. The Air Ministry employs 4,382 civilians. Approximately $54,000,000 is being spent for aviation, including $11,000,000 for construction and $2,000,000 for civilian aviation. The air estimates for the next fiscal year approximate $94,000,000.

College Library

In Italy, Premier Mussolini recently placed the air service on a par with the army and navy. Several new squadrons are being organized, and many projects for operating semi-governmental airship service have been begun. Approximately $3,000,000 is being spent for new construction.

In 1922, Japan appropriated $11,304,873 for naval aviation, of which $1,586,924 is being spent for construction of new planes. About $16,000,000 is being spent on military aviation, a fourth of it for new equipment. The government is providing subsidies and liberal rewards for civilian aviation.

German aviation, though handicapped by the treaty terms, is progressing. German engineers are active, and manufacturers of aircraft are building machines in Switzerland, Italy and Russia, and possibly in Finland and the Scandinavian countries. In addition, they are most active in Asia, Soviet Russia and certain South American republics. The German government, in 1922, appropriated 22,000,000 marks in subsidies for German commercial air-lines. The Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd Lines are interested in several aerial projects, including both airplanes and airships. There are five other aerial operating companies. For many months they have been operating between Germany, Russia and the Baltic States, and Switzerland.

Other countries which have relatively extensive aerial programs this year include Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada (and all other countries in the British commonwealth), Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Holland, Ecuador, Esthonia, Finland, Honduras, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Mexico, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Siam, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay and Venezuela.

Mexico is spending $1,495,500 on her air service, and while the government has purchased a number of planes in the United States, it is planned to buy 200 machines in Europe during the year.

Spain learned a lesson in the Moroccan campaign, and since then has provided a market for all European constructors. In addition to active expansion of military aviation, daily air services are being operated. A trans-Atlantic airship service is projected to be supported financially by the government.

NOTES-PERSONALS

To put THE CHRISTIAN SUN into every family in any way connected with the Church is the desire of every department of Church activity. Every pastor certainly realizes the need when he attempts to present the various enterprizes.

Franklinton Christian College, Franklinton, N. C., closed its annual session May 24th. The annual address was given on May 23d by the editor of this paper. The school has had a year of fine work, and it is believed that much has been accomplished for the cause of Christ among our colored people. Rev. J. A. Henderson is president of this institution, and his work so far seems to have been greatly blessed.

The Christian Church at Chapel Hill, N. C., is to be dedicated Sunday, June 3, 1923. THE SUN'S editor is to preach the dedicatory sermon. Our people in that university town have had a long and a hard pull in their work, but they have bravely stood by their posts—at least, many of them have—and it is to be hoped that a day of great prosperity is dawning for them. Rev. Britton J. Howard is the much-loved pastor.

The Rev. Thos. N. Ivey, D. D., editor of the Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., died suddenly May 15th. He was visiting the Richmond Golf and Country Club when he was suddenly called into the presence of his Maker. He was a prominent figure in Methodism. He was perhaps the best editor the Christian Advocate has had. He had his training as editor in the North Carolina Advocates, having been editor of two of them. He was very courteous and brotherly, and will be greatly missed in his line of work. To his family and brethren, we tender a brother's sympathy.

Next week is commencement week at Elon. They are expecting a great time. The exercises begin on Sunday, with the baccalaureate sermon by Rev. Francis E. Clark, the president of the Christian Endeavor movement. Governor Trinkle of Virginia is to speak, and so is Governor Morrison of North Carolina. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., is to give the alumni address. Altogether, the year of Elon's great disaster seems to give promise of being its greatest year of usefulness. It has nearly one hundred graduates. That of itself is a fine showing. Every visitor to the commencement will be deeply interested in the three new buildings which are now going up as successors to the old administration building.

Miss Eldredge strikes a keynote in her comments in this issue, when referring to Jer. 45:5, which reads: "And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not." In her comment upon that passage, she says: "This verse has been called the keynote of the life of the prophet of courage. If he (the prophet) had stopped to think of self, he could never have delivered his message as he did. He cared nothing for his own glory nor promotion to earthly honors. Yet his message has lived for centuries. He had that virtue which Woods Hutchison declares is "absolutely indispensable.' Without courage, you may as well be without convictions. Jeremiah had both, and greater than the heroes of battlefields are these silent sufferers of the commonplace." Well said, Miss Eldredge, and we wish that a few of our men who know how to laugh at men of conviction and courage could read what you have so well said. Maybe they will. Let us hope that they may not only read it, but profit by what they read, for the day is far spent and the night comes on. Let us serve our mission here speedily, for soon our work will be at an end in the flesh.

It is said that one fact is worth a dozen theories which have not been proved. We believe the saying is right. The New York Christian Advocate gives a fine illustration of the truth of the saying after the manner of the following:

"Give me a man-size job," says some one to his pastor. Here is the story of a man, Daniel E. Houpt, of Atlantic City, who, at the age of seventy-seven years, reports that in fifteen months he brought 918 children into fourteen Sunday Schools, nearly one-half the number being placed in one Methodist School and forty-two Jewish children in the Synagogue. The largest number recruited at one time was twenty-six. The record includes the names of thirty-two babies, brought to Church for baptism by mothers of children whom he had brought to the Sunday School. All this harvest was garnered in a single city ward in a little over a year by a man nearing eighty. Does the record not put some of us to shame? If we had a worker like this in every Church we could add a million to our Sunday School enrollment each year."

Why can we not train our people to do just that kind of most helpful work? We know but one reason, and that is the fact that not a great many of our pastors know how to do that work themselves, and of course if we do not know how to do such work ourselves, we will make a poor hand at telling others how to do it, and the result is that so largely the work is not done, and because it is not done, our Churches and Sunday Schools stay small. We wish our Chautauqua would give our pastors a course in doing this sort of work—it would be of invaluable help to the cause we love and for which we labor.

We wonder if a Christian country (?) will ever come to its senses as to the matter of hazing in our universities and some other schools! It has been talked again and again that the thing must come to an end, but it does not do it, but goes bravely on in the face of all opposition, doing its contemptible work. If we had a dozen sons and a plenty of money to give them a full course in our best universities, we would never send one of them to a school where this terrible practice is tolerated. It is contemptible and ought to be made to hide its full length in some cavern in the earth and forever. The Biblical Recorder has just given to the public an account of one of the dastardly acts of hazing which we think ought not to be tolerated anywhere. And yet these universities, and some other schools allow it to go on and on as if it were a part of the curriculum. The Recorder says;

Old Fashioned Hazing.—Some time ago a student in one of our State institutions was talking about the very excellent order that had been maintained this year by the student government council.

When asked if there had been any hazing he said none at all, the order was perfect and everything was moving smoothly and delightfully. When interrogated further as to the methods employed by the student council, he gave a concrete example. He said a freshman went down town without wearing his freshman cap. When this great crime was discovered, the freshman was haled before the student council and that august body, after securing all the evidence and reaching a verdict of guilty, sentenced the young man to "run the gauntlet." When asked what that term meant, the student said that the students formed in two lines on the campus, making a lane. Each student was armed with a good strap, and the culprit was ordered to run down between these lines, each student striking him with his strap as he "ran the gauntlet."

This was not hazing, mark you! It was regular procedure according to the rules of the student council. And this is America—democratic America! And the student who was thus whipped like a run-away slave was an American citizen!

How long our people will submit to any such brutal treatment of those who attend our educational institutions remains to be seen.

THE SECRET OF ENDURANCE.

Without vision, a man chooses like Lot, and his affinities are with the earth. As with Moses, so with us, we need to learn the secret of endurance. We live in circumstances where it is not easy to endure. In every one of us there is a consciousness of a dual nature; a lower and a higher, with its secret conflict, where character is at stake. There are life's sorrows and bereavements, experiences which admit of no explanation. We meet difficulties in Christian service. Those we try to help are hard to get along with; others are unresponsive. Thank God that the arm upon which Moses leaned never fails. These words are true today. Are you cultivating the vision which sees God now? Do you keep fellowship with the Eternal? When the soul seeks God, all the infinitude of a Father's love goes out on its behalf.—ARTHUR T. FOWLER.

A SOUL'S QUEST FOR A FRIEND.

Life is spent in a search for sympathy and understanding. We have many needs in this world—food, clothing, shelter, and a chance to work. But the great need is some one who is a true companion of the soul, receiving the confidences and confessions we long to make, giving back the encouragement we require, the affection without which we go famished through the years. Such a friendship is hard to establish. It demands time, and trust, and full appreciation of virtues as well as sensitiveness to the defects, but always an unfailing love that forgets the evil and treasures the good. Stevenson says in a fine paragraph: "In this world of imperfections we gladly welcome even partial intimacies. And if we find but one to whom we can speak out our heart freely, with whom we can walk in love and simplicity without dissimulation, we have no ground of quarrel with the world or God." Most of us have acquaintances without number, associates in groups, companions and comrades whose society is a comfort and a pleasure. But fortunate above most is the one who in all the fine intimacies of affection has a friend.—Exchange. "There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

IGNORANCE INEXCUSABLE.

Again the secular press is strowing over the country a news item to the effect that the students in a certain university have made egregious failures in their study of the Bible. Something of this sort occurs every few years—the secular press tells the world how little university students know about the Bible. It may be even so; it may be true, and yet the truth in that case may mean nothing against the Bible, but it may mean much against these students. Doubtless, the greater part of these students come to this university from homes where God is not honored by a humble and godly life, and consequently homes where the children were never taught to love the Bible and its truths. This being true, it would be almost a marvel if they were well informed in Bible lore.

We will guarantee that there are thousands of our boys and girls whose main teaching has been in the Sunday School, and that for less than an hour once a week, who can answer the questions asked these university students one hundred per cent better than they did. Indeed, some of our best-informed Bible students are Sunday School pupils throughout the land. We would like to have a chance to pick up fifty Sunday School boys and girls between the ages of fifteen and twenty years, and give them a trial at the same questions. In many instances, we believe, they would answer practically all of these questions correctly. Some university students know nothing about the Bible, but many of the boys and girls from the humbler walks of life coming up through our Sunday Schools would be able to make those university boys ashamed of themselves and may be of their university, too.

The following is from the Literary Digest of April 21, and puts the matter as follows as to the failure of these university young men:

"Flunking" on the Bible.—Ignorance of the Bible is often astounding, and a most flagrant instance is reported of a body of students of the University of North Dakota. Eight quotations from the Bible were asked of 139 students, we are told, and only eight and one-half per cent of the students passed an average of 75 per cent, the average for the whole body being less than 40 per cent. As analyzed by The Watchman-Examiner (Baptist) from an article in the Journal of Education by Professor Vernon P. Squires, the examination figures show that—

"Seven per cent could not name a book of the Old Testament, and less than 50 per cent could give ten books of the Old Testament. And some doubt as to this is caused by the spelling of some of the books, such as 'Deuteromy,' 'Deuteromoty,' 'Deuteromeny,' 'Deuterominy,' 'Goshua,' 'Salms,' 'Nehimiah,' 'Joob,' 'Jobe.' Fourteen named 'Hezekiah' as one of the 'Books of Moses.'

"Among original ideas were the mentioning of Old Testament books, 'Paul,' 'Timothy,' 'Titus,' '1 and 2 Romans,' 'Philistines' and 'Xerxes.' The answers in regard to the New Testament were still more unsatisfactory. Twelve—eight and one-half per cent—were unable to mention a single book; only forty-six—thirty-three and one-third per cent—mentioned ten, as requested. Five put Samuel in the New Testament, three the Psalms, three Ruth, and two Esther. One mentioned '1 and 2 Judges.' Seventeen mentioned 'Paul,' or 'St. Paul,' or 'Paul's.' Three suggested 'Simon,' two 'Jacob.' There was the mention of 'Thelesians,' 'Phillipi,' 'Thomas,' 'Lazarus,' and 'Samson Agonistes.'

"We are weighed and found wanting."

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE OF GLORY.

By Rev. Jack Spratt.

Text: "Christ in you the hope of glory."—Col. 1:27.

Salvation is a great mystery. Even Paul said, "Great is the mystery of godliness." I do not know why it is a mystery, only God saw fit to have it so, and therefore it is right—best for us all who live a godly life. It is much like a man at sea in a storm. He is in a frail boat. His life is in peril. In his struggle he has but one hope. He sees a light-house in the distance. He must reach it, for there he shall find safety. Even so, it is on life's great sea. The storm rages. The life is in peril. Through the darkness he sees Christ the Saviour. He presses toward Him. He would reach him, no matter what the peril may be. His hope of salvation is in Christ. It is all a mystery. We do not know just how it all came to pass, but we are fully persuaded that our only hope of glory is in Christ; therefore we strive to reach Him. He is the goal of life and of eternity—we must have Christ, no matter what else we may lose. He is indeed our hope of glory.

It is true we are called on to give up the vain and perishing things of this world, that we may lay hold on Christ. Many have counted the cost as too much. Alas! too much to give up the perishing for the ever-living! Indeed, it is as the giving up of a silicate for a diamond, or as giving up bubbles for rich and rare jewels! It is like a man reading in the early morning by a dim lamp, but presently a flood of light rolls in from the rising sun, and then the dim lamp is not needed any more. To give up the world for Christ is like giving up rag-time music for the best the world has. When the heart finds Christ it surrenders the world for the Christ, and giving up the world for Christ is to the soul that has truly found Christ like giving up an empty world for the glory of heaven.

We are told that a silver miner in Colorado thought he was ruined when his white metal lost so much of its value, but one morning the man who had served him as his chemist chanced to pass his slag heap, when in the slag he discovered evidences of gold. On further investigation it was found that the veins below were not silver, but gold, very full and rich, and instead of being very poor, as he had supposed, he was actually very rich, for in place of the silver mines from which he had been digging his wealth, he had found gold mines, and the gold was both very valuable and abundant. Having given up his silver mines, gold suddenly became the hope of his wealth. In some such sense, we give up the world and its glory to find far greater riches in Christ, and then henceforth our hope of glory is Christ in us.

Let me then invite your attention to the larger and richer life in Christ:

1. Christ in Us is our Only Hope of Glory.

If we have no Christ within, the clouds of the world will indeed obscure our hope of glory. Here is the battleground of the Christian life. We must have Christ within us as our hope of glory, or there can be no hope. Paul struggled to maintain this condition in his life. He said to the Galatians:

"My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you the hope of glory."—Gal. 4:19.

Christ in us is the hope of glory. You say, but that is a mystery. So it was with Paul and the early Christians. They did not understand it, but they lived upon the thought. The fact that Christ was the hope of glory to them inspired them to seek Him and to gain a knowledge of Him till they might live in Christ and have Christ in them.

The alphabet is a great mystery to a child, but study brings acquaintance till it is formed in the child's mind, and the alphabet in the child becomes the hope of the child for learning and usefulness. This is the first and the necessary step on the part of the child toward reaching a learned life, and thus it is in the Christian race—the first and the essential step toward reaching real learning in spiritual things. We must come to have Christ formed in us the hope of glory, or we have no hope.

2. Christ Must be Revealed to Us, or We Shall be Helpless and Fruitless.

"But when it pleased God * * * to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the heathen."—Gal. 1:15, 16.

When Christ is formed within us, we have taken the first decided step in the divine life, but we do not know how to take the next step till He shows us how to take that step.

The revelation of Christ and His truth to us is made through the Spirit and the Word. Just as the child when he has gotten the alphabet formed and fixed in his mind, still needs a teacher to show him how to combine the letters into words and the words into sentences, or he would still be helpless, though he knows the alphabet ever so well. Having Christ formed within us is but qualifying us for active and aggressive service in the Christian life.

3. Christ is Formed in us, that He may Live in Us, and Christ Living in Us is the Secret of a Fruitful Christian Life.

A Church member without Christ in the life cannot be useful in any marked way, and for the reason that the source of fruitage is not there. It was Paul who said: "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless, I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me."

When you hear a person boasting of his Christian life, you may be sure that he is in ignorance of the Christian life—he knows nothing about it in reality. It was Jesus who said: "Without Me, ye can do nothing." That is the explanation of such fruitless Church members.

4. It is Through Living in Us that Christ Becomes Mighty in Us.

He gives us knowledge of Himself and the divine life by opening our understanding, that we may understand and appropriate His truth for the enrichment of the life we are giving Him. He did that for His disciples of old. "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures."—Luke 24:45. No wonder that these men caught visions of truth and life! No wonder that they were so useful and fruitful as Christians.

Again, it is no wonder that some men whose names are on the Church book know nothing of the horrors of a sinful life—their eyes are closed not only to divine truth, but they are closed against the awful character of sin, and this is why so many such people have no concern as to the sin which is destroying their own souls. Christ in you will open your eyes to the danger of sin. It is the Christ within us that makes us new creatures. How shall we get Him? By the faithful study of the Word of God and a true life of faith and prayer.

Why does not man take as much delight in those precepts which enjoin holiness, as in those promises which insure happiness?—William Seeker.

DANGERS TO OUR NATION.

As a country, we have very much to consider. It now looks as if we cannot meet the growing needs, religiously, of this great people. The population is growing more rapidly than our Churches are, and hence it is that we are face to face with the problem of Christianizing America. We are called a Christian country, but are we, when more than half of our population are not Christians? Surely, if we had fifty millions of voters for a certain candidate and sixty millions against him, we would never claim that the man having only fifty millions of votes was elected. Well, why not? Because a majority of the people of our country were against him. So, likewise, a majority of our people make no pretensions to religion. How can a country of 110,000,000 people be Christian when only about 45,000,000 even profess to be Christians? That would leave us with 65,000,000 of people who make no profession of Christ at all.

Now, the problem for the Christians of America is this: Let 45,000,000 undertake to win to Christ 65,000,000 of people who make no claim to be believers in the Christian sense, and then we shall begin to get our eyes open to the stupendous task before us. We not only have the problem of the winning of the heathen world, consisting of about one thousand millions of people, to Christ, but we have here at home the great task of winning to Christ 65,000,000 individuals. That makes it seem like a task far beyond any hope of realizing, and that would be true, indeed, if we were dependent upon ourselves for the wisdom and the power to accomplish such an undertaking. It is not only a fact that we have 65,000,000 to win to Christ, but to be added to this is the large per cent of the 45,000,000 who are nominal Christians; but, in fact, if we may judge them by their fruits, as the Word authorizes us to do, they are little more than Christian in name. What a colossus of undertaking! It is not imaginary, it is real; and this is the task of the people of God in the United States at this time.

What is the outlook? Can the work be done? Can the people be reached and won to Christ? These are questions which can be asked far more readily than correctly answered, and yet we need to make the effort not only to answer it, but to do the actual work of turning these United States and other parts of North America to Christ. There is but one hope, as we see it, and that is to have the Church turn to Him who said: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

Our hope is in power from on high. If God be not with us, then in vain are our aims and efforts. It can be done if our people, the people of God, will but give themselves to Him and to, through Him, this herculean task. But will we do it? That also is a problematic question. We can do it if we may but put ourselves in touch with the power that has been given for this purpose—given to us from above. Many will, no doubt, stumble because of the greatness of the task, but we have help promised from above, and that help we shall receive if we may but learn to walk with Him and trust Him for guidance and power. Other great tasks have been accomplished in a short time by the use of means which were adapted to the needs of the occasion. This may be shown by profane history in matters of unusual proportions. For instance, let us take the fact that in a period covering but five or six years, twenty-six nations were changed—converted from autocratic governments to republics, somewhat after the model which the United States as a republic furnished them. What a task this must have been, and yet in a few short years the work was done. If mere human (secular) power could accomplish such complete revolutions, what may not be accomplished in a generation if the people of God will but come together and rely upon the power that comes from the Christ for accomplishing such great changes. The kingdoms of this world must some time and in some way become the kingdom of our Lord and His Christ. Can there be any doubt that in such a marvelous change the Lord will use His people as an instrument for doing the work? Paul tells us that "We are workers together with God," and, therefore, we think we have ample reason to believe that He will use us in doing this great work for the winning of the people of this country to a life which is hid with Christ in God. Suppose the people of the United States who are Christians would band themselves together for undertaking such a task, who can tell, or even guess, at what results would follow. If our people would put themselves in line with the Lord's plan for winning the world to Himself, and then consecrate themselves and their means to the task, even as whole-heartedly as the United States consecrated itself to the work of conquering Germany, then might come to pass even greater victories than she won against Germany in reaching the world and turning it to Christ. Here we rest our plea for the consecration of the Christians of the United States to the herculean task of winning their fellows from the dark service of Satan to the blessed and glorious service of God in calling our fellow-men to the greater task of submission to God and His service. But how shall we begin? Let us begin by each one giving himself truly and fully to God, that He may use us as He will in His great plans for saving the world. If we wait to begin till all are ready, not one will ever get ready. The dangers to our nation are spiritual, rather than physical or industrial.

IMPUTED RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Do our people believe in imputed righteousness? As a rule, when we believe a thing we like to talk about it. We do not now recall having heard any minister of the Christian Church preach on "Imputed Righteousness" during a ministry of almost fifty years. Is it not reasonable to feel, if we believe in imputed righteousness, that we would preach it, and preach it often? If not, why not? But another question may arise in the mind of the reader. Is the doctrine of imputed righteousness true? Of course, a great deal depends on the answer to this question. If it is believed not to be true, then we should likely not hear much of it in a lifetime, but if we believe it to be true, then it would seem most natural that he who believes it would preach it.

It seems most fitting that we should first determine whether a doctrine be true or false. Paul evidently believed that it is true, and the reason for regarding Paul as a believer in imputed righteousness is the fact that he preached it. Paul makes his first direct statement on this question when he says: "Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works."—Rom. 4:6.

Again, in verse 11 of the same chapter, he sets forth the thought that righteousness might be imputed unto them also. The ground of this imputation of righteousness is set forth in verses 21-28, where he says:

"And being fully persuaded that what He has promised He was able to perform. And, therefore, it (faith) was imputed to him for righteousness: Now it was not written for his sake alone that it was imputed to him, but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed if we believe on Him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification."—Rom. 4:21-25.

From these statements of Paul, it seems that faith in the promises of God was the basis of the imputation of righteousness.

But what is meant by the imputation of righteousness? It means to count something to our credit, or to reckon it as paid on our behalf by another. That being true, it seems that when righteousness was imputed to another, the righteousness of Christ was counted to our credit. It is something like this. A owes B a thousand dollars, and he cannot pay it, but the man to whom he owes this sum deliberately turns to the account on his book and gives him credit for one thousand dollars and the account is settled. When asked why he did it, he said: "Oh, well, he could not pay it, and knowing him to be an honest man, who would pay it if he could, I simply paid it for him and let him go free. That is practically a parallel case. Because Abraham believed God and stood to his faith so long and so faithfully, he pleased God, and then God counted his faith to him for righteousness. Abraham's faith was counted to him for righteousness, and that ended the sin account that stood against him. Not even Abraham's works could take the place of his faith. See Rom. 4:3-6. It, therefore, seems that faith is far greater than works. Faith can secure the forgiveness of sin, but works cannot. In John 6:29 we have the thought brought out very forcibly: "Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent." Then, if believing on God is what counts with Him, what is the value of Christian work in the Christian life? It is this way? We work, not to secure our salvation, but, since we believe, we work to prove that our faith in Him has been rewarded in the gift of salvation. Our work, therefore, is not to secure salvation, but to prove the inside life of faith by the outside work we do. Faith is far greater than work. Faith brings to us salvation of God and works prove that we have received this wonderful gift. If a Christian will not work in the Lord's cause he at once throws suspicion upon the genuineness of his faith, since we know that faith brings salvation, and salvation is proven by the fact that we have enlisted in the work of the Lord. Faith gives us righteousness—imputes righteousness, and works naturally follow. As we understand it, when there are no works there can be no righteousness.

Let us also keep in mind that this faith which imputes to us the righteousness of God in Christ is not self-righteousness, but the righteousness of God given to us in Christ. Paul doubtless had this in view when he said that he bore record to the fact that the Jews had a zeal which was not according to knowledge, for they were ignorant of God's righteousness and were going about to establish their own righteousness. And may it not be true that this is today the trouble with fruitless Christians—they have a kind of righteousness, but it is not according to knowledge.

It takes the faith of God to make a person fruitful in the Christian life. Self-righteousness can never make a person fruitful in the work of God.

"THEY ARE NOT FAIR."

That is the heading on an article by Strickland Gillilan, in the Christian Endeavor World. It has so much of real point in it that we are republishing it in the hope that some of our readers may have the courage to re-examine the ground on which they are standing and see if they really feel that they are standing on safe ground—on ground that will have no quicksand under it in the day when they come to judgment. We have again and again been impressed with the fact that these sacred matters of fundamental truth are trifled with as if they were the proper matters for joking. How any one who knows Christ in the forgiveness of his sins can thus trifle with the great and fundamental truth of salvation, we cannot see. Not long ago, on a train on the Southern Railway, a gentleman of culture and refinement got into conversation concerning what is known nowadays as higher criticism with this writer. We talked possibly a half-hour, and through the greater portion of the conversation he spoke in a flippant way and as if these sacred matters were of no moment. At length, as we were about to separate, I told him that I did not wish to offend him, but that I must say: "I do not see how a Christian—a man who has been born of the Spirit—could possibly talk in such a flippant way of such sacred matters; that I felt that a man who had been saved by the blood of Jesus could not have the Spirit of Christ," and there we parted. He did seem just a big embarrassed by my parting word with him, and I am here to repeat it: "I do not see how Christian men, having the spirit of Christ, could possibly get the consent of their hearts and minds to speak so flippantly of the great and most precious truths of God's Word." It was only this morning that a letter came, making fun of THE CHRISTIAN SUN because its editor stands for the facts of current history and for the word of God and its teaching. I can readily see how he could differ from me, but I do not see how the spirit of Christ, dwelling in a man, could permit him to jest and make sarcastic remarks about an old friend just because he stands for the Bible truths as we have them in the sacred Book.

But now for the article of Mr. Gillilan, who is the author, and in which he speaks forth the words of truth and soberness:

People who try to tear down the faith of other people are right tiresome folk, though they are more to be pitied than censured. They should always be approached more in sorrow than in anger. Usually they do very little harm to anybody but themselves, but now and then one of them does a right contemptible thing.

These fellows who go around demolishing faith or trying to do so, never carry anything to give instead of the faith they scoff. They travel light. They take something and give nothing. They go through your pantry, and tell you the bread and meat and vegetables you have aren't really first-class goods. If they can get you to throw it all out of the window, they are content. But, when they crank up the car and go on, you go back and notice your empty pantry shelves—and night coming on. You have been robbed. If only the fellow who made you dissatisfied with your food to the point of your throwing it away had restocked your larder—but people of that sort never do!

They criticise your clothing, and leave you naked; your food, and leave you hungry; your house of faith, and leave you houseless in the midst of a blinding storm.

Sticking to the house as a figure of speech, did you ever see workmen of the right kind removing a foundation from a house they wish to leave intact? What is the first thing they do? They build up, carefully, a fine new, solid foundation pillar of brick and stone, carefully cemented and plumb-lined, ready for the house's new resting-place when the old pillar shall have been shattered. The house doesn't drop at all; it simply rests on a new and firmer foundation.

Do these doubt-peddlers and scoffers do anything like that? No. They are destroyers, never builders. They are wasters, never savers. They are flingers of bombs, and not architects.

THE SPADE AS A HANDMAID OF TRUTH.

No doubt about it, there is a great conflict on between Truth and Error, but that is nothing new, for that battle has been on since Satan beguiled Eve and induced her to believe a lie in effort to discredit God. Truth is defiant in expectation of coming victory. The spirit of Truth is set forth in the words of Jesus in Luke 19:40, when He said: "I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." Truth will and must triumph. Error will and must be defeated. Yes, even if it become necessary for the stones to cry out in defence of the Truth, and that is, in a certain sense, just what is taking place in Christendom today, the stones of the earth are crying out in defending Truth. This is shown by the work of the spade in the hands of the Archaeologists. Certain men are holding their tongues, refusing to bear witness to the Truth, and sure enough the stones are crying out and giving a most important testimony to the Truth of God's Word. It seems as if every time some man gets up to dispute the truth of the Bible, that some Archaeologist with his spade turns up a stone in some place only to find that the mute stone is alive with a correction of what the unbeliever has said. In ancient times the people did much of their writing on stone and there the writing became permanent. In the course of the ages these stones were buried in the debris of time, and in many cases they contain just the message to sustain the Truth of the Bible. So far as we are informed not a single case of value has been brought to light by the digging up of these stones to dispute the Bible statements of Truth. So far as they bear on the truth of the Bible, every discovery of this sort had been a bold witness for the reliability of the Word of God, and yet there are found some men who claim not to believe the Bible, and that claim is made in the light of evidence on every side for the Truth. We herewith append a clipping from an exchange which will be of interest to the people who believe their Bibles:

Important finds have been made recently by archaeological research parties. The ruins of an ancient fortified town in Patagonia have been discovered by Dr. J. G. Wolfe, who has just returned from a two years' tour of exploration in that region. These ruins are believed to be the remnants of a civilization earlier than that of the Peruvian Incas. Among other things, Dr. Wolf claims to have found a human skull of the tertiary period. Excavations in the Valley of Mexico reveal traces of five distinct civilizations, the first two of which seem to have been of Mongolian origin. Remains of the great walled temples, carefully carved figures of their gods, and fragments of pottery, sculpture and paintings indicate considerable development in the arts and sciences. Dr. C. Leonard Woolley, of the University of Pennsylvania, has made extensive researches in Mesopotamia, which have been very fruitful. He has been excavating on the site of "Ur of the Chaldees," the original home of Abraham, and unearthed some very interesting and impressive remains of that ancient civilization. The ruins of a great temple have been traced, containing historic tables dating back as far as 3000 years before Christ. And then, of course, there is the opening and investigation of King Tut's tomb in Egypt, which has provided so many sensations in recent weeks, not all of which have been scientific by any means. So that, taken altogether, it has been rather a busy year for archaeologists, and should provide them with considerable valuable data. One interesting feature of the case is the fact that whenever any important discoveries are made, we are immediately advised, either by the archaeologist himself or by his ambitious press agent, that the researches made, the silent story of the ruins unearthed, or the record of the inscriptions on tablets and monuments, will either confirm, or prove false, some portion of Scripture, some historic record of the Bible, which deals with the particular regions explored. The inference of the warning is that we must be prepared for revelations that will discredit the sacred record. But so far their anxiety and solicitude has been needless, for all discoveries of any real value only confirm the Biblical story of the human race.

WONDERFUL! BUT THE RIGHT IDEA

Florence Nightingale, who was a ministering angel in peace and in war, as she came near the end of a long life, gave one of the most concise and yet marvelous testimonies concerning the life she lived that we remember to have seen given by any other mortal. Even the dear old worthies, the prophets and apostles, never gave out a testimony concerning the life they lived equal in one respect to that which Florence Nightingale gave as she was looking back over a long life, she said:

"If I could tell you all, you would see how God has done all, and I nothing. I have worked hard, very hard, that is all, and I have never refused God anything." "Never refused God anything"—there is the secret of the life of service she lived. She worked hard, very hard, but God had His way with her life. She worked hard, but it was God working in her His will and through her His work. If our lives as Christians are not wholly a success, it would be well to test them by Florence Nightingale's test—"I have never refused God anything."

There is not a crown on the head of any ruler that we would not gladly lay down if we could truly give such a testimony as that of Florence Nightingale. The best any of us can do is to set our hearts on coming as nigh as possible to the life she attained by grace. Did you say it is too much to expect of any mortal? Well, one mortal seems to have reached it. Suppose we bend our best devotion to attaining the same high end in life. We thank God for the life of Florence Nightingale and for what she attained. Let us live lowly at the feet of Jesus and do our best to come as near as possible to what she attained, never refusing God anything. How wonderful is such a life!

We have reached the stage in our agricultural development where there is practically no more potential agricultural land left unutilized that does not involve unprofitable expense for reclamation or clearing, according to an agricultural economist connected with the Department of Agriculture. However, much of our agricultural land can be cultivated more intensively when higher prices for produce justify the increased costs of production.—Ex.

MONUMENTS OR MEMORIALS.

(Delivered at Antioch Church, May 16, 1923.)

Monoliths, a single upright stone, antedate authentic history. Monuments were erected to mark important events in human society, or to help remember important persons, usually kings. The greatest monuments of ancient times were Egyptian pyramids; and the greatest of these was Cheops, built by Khufu about 3000 B. C. It covers about thirteen acres at its base, is nearly 500 feet high, contains great chambers within for chapels and tombs, and was one of the seven wonders of the world. The custom of erecting monuments, large or small, to preserve the memory of the dead, is universal as to time and place. The least tombstone, placed at the grave of the least child, is a monument, and many of them are placed at great sacrifice. Monuments are cold stone, cheap or costly, plain or carved. Cemeteries are full of them. Monument-building is a business. The quarry and the lapidary present the cold facts. Monuments erected to great statesmen, great soldiers, and great events, remind us of their deeds and the histories of the world. Washington Monument, Confederate monuments, are permanent records for generations unborn. The monument at Yorktown marks the spot, the time, and the fact of the surrender of Cornwallis to Washington, October 19, 1781.

But there are more effective and affectionate memory helps; and they are found in memorial services. Monuments are laudatory; memorials are affectionate. Memorials are more recent in their origin, more universal in their application. The great pyramid has stood for nearly fifty centuries; memorial services are not yet one century old. They originated in the Northern States after the Civil War. May 30th was made the day, called at first Decoration Day, as the people assembled to place flowers upon the graves of the soldiers who laid down their lives to preserve the Union. Decoration Day, or Memorial Day, was made a legal holiday; and since that time most of the States have passed similar laws; and the custom of setting apart some day in May as Memorial Day is observed all over the United States. This year will place flowers upon Federal, Confederate, Spanish-American, and World War soldier graves. Ugly thoughts are forgotten in the beauty of the flowers, bitter feelings are smothered by their fragrance, and all breathe the atmosphere of reverence in the silence of graves. Songs are sung, prayers are offered, addresses are delivered, memories are revived, tears are shed, and tender emotions fill the souls of men. If we could, we would bury war, cover the grave with garlands, and sing a song of peace. We would do more; we would bury all animosities, all jealousies, all injustice, all greed, and then cover all the graves with rarest flowers, sing a new anthem of "Peace on earth, and good will toward men," and close the day with unutterable joy. Then the Church could "arise and shine, her light having come and the glory of the Lord having risen upon her."

Beyond the sweet memorials to war and war heroes, this beautiful custom has been extended to all the dead who sleep in Christian graves. "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance" (Ps. 112:6), "but the name of the wicked shall rot" (Prov. 10:7). "The wicked are buried and forgotten" (Ecc. 8:10). Who has ever erected a monument to a known wicked man? or cherished his memory? Why? After all, humanity at heart, seems to approve the good, and desires to preserve it. That feeling is universal in the human breast until disturbed by envy, hate and war. The memorial services as observed in these days are tender, far-reaching and really religious in influence over men. Memories are preserved in many ways; it may be by pressing a few flowers from mother's funeral, a little book given by the departed; a ring, a pin, a picture, an autograph, a song. But none of these touch the community like the memorial services. This day brings together the living with awakened memories, handgrasps, flowers, bright hopes, and praises. Grandpa's grave and grandbabe's are alike precious to the family. The cemetery is cleanest, brightest, and sweetest on Memorial Day. There is a strain of sweet sadness in the throng. The little tombstone is just as dear as the largest. It is like the family here—all one in the silence and the suggestion of the place. There is no speech nor language; their voice is not heard; but the message is plain to all: "In Adam all die." Love looks for the dearest grave, places upon it the sweetest flowers, bedews them with tears, gazes into the future by faith, then turns away with a new sense of the ties that bind souls in two worlds close together. Monuments are cold, compared with memorials. The Washington Monument does not touch your heart like the little tombstone at the head of your child's grave, or the grave of the man who dug your mother's grave. Jesus was at His tenderest at the grave of Lazarus, or the bier of the only son of a widowed mother; and the Communion service keeps alive the memory of Calvary more than all the crosses and paintings in the world. "This, do in remembrance of Me," is the sweetest memorial of all, because it is for all. The day would hardly be complete without the names of Lee and Jackson, Lincoln and Grant; but there are the Atkinsons, Barretts, Carrs, Clements, Eleys, Gays, Griffins, Marshalls, Roberts, Saunders, Watkins, of this congregation, great soldiers of the cross; then there were pastors faithful and true—Barretts, Beale, Wellons, Poste, Smith, I know not all—but they labored for the salvation of souls, and have gone to their reward. The memory of past workers and achievements inspires our hearts for the future in this world and the world to come. Heaven waits for those who look through cemeteries to God.

ELON LETTER.

The thirty-third Elon commencement, May 27-29, will be held this year under adverse circumstances. We are beginning to realize what a central and strategic part the administration building held in the college life. We are hoping for good weather, and if so the exercises, except the baccalaureate sermon, will be held on the campus. A temporary stage is being erected now for that purpose.

The baccalaureate sermon is to be preached by the venerable Francis E. Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavor Society, a world figure. Elon has been all along true to Christian Endeavor, and while Dr. Clark has been declining invitations for commencement addresses for some years, he did not think he should decline ours. His letter of acceptance was written on January 17 and was the first letter opened in our temporary quarters, following the fire of the 18th. Dr. Clark's coming is an event of State-wide interest and concern.

The sermon will be delivered in the Burlington Christian Church on the 27th of May at 11 A. M. The Southern Railway will carry three extra coaches to Burlington on the 9:50 train that morning and will attach them to the through train, leaving Burlington at 12:44. This train does not stop here ordinarily, but it will stop that day to accommodate the Elon commencement attendants. The college very much appreciates this kindness and courtesy on the part of the Southern Railway.

The baccalaureate address will be omitted this year.

Monday at Elon, on the campus, if the weather permits, otherwise in the alumni building gymnasium room, the class-day exercises, 10 A. M.; the society representatives, 3 P. M., and the alumni oration at 8 P. M., by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, '09—will take place.

Tuesday at Elon, on the campus, if the weather permits, otherwise in the alumni building gymnasium room, the graduation exercises and literary address at 10 A. M.; the laying of the corner-stone of the Alamance building at 3 P. M., and a specially arranged pageant at 8 P. M.—will take place. Forty seniors will receive their bachelor degrees, one will receive the master of arts' degree, and forty-six will receive diplomas or certificates in the various departments—a total of 87, the largest number to be thus recognized in any one year in our history.

For the first time in Elon history, a Governor of Virginia is to attend the commencement. Governor Trinkle will deliver the literary address on Tuesday morning. He will be introduced by Governor Cameron Morrison. Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, of Virginia, will be present as a trustee. It will be "Governors' Day" at Elon.

All Alamance County is expected to turn out that afternoon at 3 o'clock to witness the laying of the corner-stone of the $100,000 administration building now in the course of construction and donated by citizens of Alamance County. In recognition of this generosity, the trustees have designated this building as "Alamance Building." Colonel Robert L. Holt will preside, and Hon. E. S. Parker will deliver the oration.

The final item of the commencement program will be a pageant arranged by Prof. Walter F. Greenwood out of two pageants—"Columbus" and "Three Centuries of American Democracy." This will be a fitting close to the gala commencement occasion. Our friends know they are welcome to all these exercises.

May I beseech the earnest prayers of all the Church on the commencement exercises and on the Board of Trustees as they shall face the weighty issues arising out of our fire and the rebuilding program?

BURLINGTON, N. C.

Sunday, May 6, was a good and a great day with the Burlington Church—a day that will not be forgotten in the lifetime of many who were present in the worship and services of the Church that day. It was the occasion of the formal dedication to God of our house of worship, and all things seemed to "work together for good" with us at that time. Even the heavens declared the glory of God, and the firmaments showed forth His handiwork. The dedicatory services opened at 11 A. M. Rev. J. W. Holt, organizer of the Church and its first pastor, invoked God's blessing upon the exercises of the hour. The Scripture lesson was read by the present pastor. Dr. P. H. Fleming, who was pastor of the Church for almost sixteen years, then offered prayer. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Dr. A. B. Kendall, Springfield, Ohio, who was on the field at the time the idea of a new building was launched. The message was one of great inspiration and uplift. Dr. Kendall also read the dedicatory formula, after which the dedicatory prayer by Dr. J. U. Newman followed.

Dr. J. W. Wellons, now in his ninety-eighth year, made the closing prayer and gave the benediction. The historical sketch by Mr. W. K. Holt was very timely, and it brought back many memories of the years that are gone. It must have been enjoyed by all, and especially by the older members of the Church. The choir excelled itself in giving a musical program of unusual merit, which was enjoyed by those in attendance. At 8 P. M., Dr. W. D. Parry, pastor of the First Christian Church, of Raleigh, N. C., delighted a fine audience with an eloquent sermon on "The Uplifted Christ." All in all, the day was one of joy, blessing, uplift and hope.

Last Sunday, May 13th, was another good day with us. The Knights Templar of the local commandery and a number of knights from Greensboro met with us for their annual ascension service. The pastor had been invited to deliver the sermon for this occasion, and this he tried to do to the best of his ability, using as a subject, "The Christian Ascension." Our guests for the day came in a body and were dressed in their uniforms, making an impressive scene as they filed singly and silently down the Church aisle and took their places at the front which had been reserved for them, at the same time the choir singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." It was a pleasure to have this splendid body of men, about seventy-five in all, with us, and they expressed themselves as having enjoyed the message of the hour.

We are now looking forward with pleasure to the fourth Sunday in this month, at which time we expect to have as our guests the students and faculty of Elon College and their friends for the annual baccalaureate sermon, which will be given this year by Dr. Frances E. Clark, father of Christian Endeavor. The Southern Railway Company has arranged to operate extra cars from Elon to Burlington and return to accommodate the college for this great occasion. The Burlington Church is glad to be of service in this way to the college in this time when the institution is so much handicapped on account of the destructive fire there on the 18th of January of this year. Elon College has never been very far from Burlington, but she is closer now than ever before. And "day by day and in every way" the two are drawing closer and closer together. God grant that this spirit of fellowship and good will shall strengthen with the passing of the years.

FROM THE MOUNTAINS.

An Appeal for the Country Church.

I was not permitted to spend but a very short time at our Convention at Henderson, but so far as I could see it was a very good Convention. I heard only a very few of the problems that confronted the Convention discussed, and will mention only one of these at present. That was the very earnest plea to build and equip the city Churches. This was very timely, and received my hearty approval, but let us be careful and not go too far in the right direction with a good thing. And where we have failed to plant Churches in the city, as we should in the early part of our Church history, we should not now go too far in the other direction.

The city Church was spoken of as being great in its resources—in members, money, and material help—and this is true, and very true, as is shown from past history. But there are other things needed besides numbers, money, and material help. We must have ministers, and Christian workers. We must have men through whom God can speak, and work; men that will heed the call, lay down their business and go out and preach the Gospel. Where have these men come from in the past? What is our history as to this?

In one of our minister's meetings at Norfolk last year, in discussing the country Church problem, where there was thirteen ministers present, it was found that every one of them was called to the ministry while back on the farm and attending some country Church. While we need the city Church, and while it is a large field for service, and a great field from which to get material aid, let us not lose sight of the need of the country Church, but try to strengthen and encourage it also. I believe that if we will search our history that we can find some little country Churches, that were barely able to exist financially, that have sent out more ministers than all of our city Churches combined.

We are at this time giving thousands of dollars to build large city Churches, and this is good and timely, but there are some of our little country Churches just struggling for existence, and, as I understand, our Board is refusing to give them further aid. We speak of things being born of the Holy Spirit, and, in fact, every truly good thing is inspired by Him, and I had not thought to write on this subject, but it was revealed to me as I lay awake last night, praying over our Church work, that we might be in danger of going too far with a good thing, and forget some other that was just as important.

While we need the city, we need the country, and if we kill the country we kill the city in everything. The city is great in its material resources, but without the country the city will perish to death in a short time. Kill all of the country Churches and all of our Churches will famish for the lack of ministers, according to history. So let us not forget to encourage the country Church in our zeal to build up the city Churches, but let us strive to build, equip, and strengthen both, for both are needed.

I received some days ago from the good people of Henderson Church, North Carolina, a very substantial Communion set; this is to be used for our mountain work. Thanks to Dr. Barrett and his good people for this good gift. With an earnest prayer for their every success, I am,

Yours in the Master's service,

Elisha Bradshaw.

THE WORK AT DANVILLE.

We have just closed a very successful revival at Third Avenue Christian Church of this city, in which many were brought to the saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. On Sunday morning, May 6, 1923, the congregation of Third Avenue Christian Church, began a series of revival services in their Church, the pastor, Rev. P. T. Klapp, being assisted by the Rev. J. Lee Johnson, of Fuquay Springs, N. C. Bro. Johnson is a forceful speaker, and brought Gospel messages from night to night that would stir the soul of the wickedest of sinners. Bro. Johnson's sermons were of such a nature that many of our young people, both men and women, professed faith in Jesus Christ and united themselves with the Church.

Friday night, May 15th, was the closing service of this series of meetings. Bro. Johnson spoke on the second coming of Jesus Christ, when those who sleep in Him will arise from the dead, and those who remain on the earth and are prepared to meet Him will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and those who are not prepared at His coming will cry for the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of a great God.

The time has come when the Church of the living God needs to stay on its knees and wrestle with the power of God until endued with the power of the Holy Ghost, that they might do a great work in the world here below for the upbuilding of God's kingdom in the world.

The singing was a marked feature during the meeting, under the direction of J. W. Dixon, the choir leader of the Church, who had the Church choir rehearsed from time to time before the meeting, that it might be in a position to be of great help during the meeting. In closing, we asked the prayers of all Christian people for our Church, that it may be a Church of great power for Jesus Christ in this part of God's moral vineyard.

THE NEW PROVIDENCE MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

Hon. B. F. Long, of Statesville, N. C., will deliver the annual memorial address Sunday, June 3, 1923, at 11:30 A. M. Judge Long is a distinguished son of Alamance County, known and admired throughout the State for his excellent ability as a superior court judge. His coming to deliver our annual memorial address does our association a great honor, and assures a delightful day for the association and his many friends in his home county.

The Providence Cemetery, the care of which is the object of this memorial association, is in a well-kept condition.

That members and friends of the association may have a memorial of this sacred spot, a photograph, showing the cemetery with the New Providence Church in the background, was taken last October. The picture is good, is 12 inches by 17 inches in size, and suitable for framing. All friends of this sacred spot who contribute $1.00 or more, will get one of these pictures, until the issue of two hundred copies is exhausted.

Feeling confident these pictures will please, the association thanks you for your past and continued help in this commendable work.

Solicitors are getting busy. Recently we have received several fine lists of new subscribers, as well as renewals. With the opening of the summer season, the college commencement season, the picnic season, why may not The Christian Sun claim attention?

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE FAITHFUL AND THEIR PLEDGES.

There are promises from every quarter of our Zion that Men and Millions pledges will be paid, and the writer is of the opinion these promises are made in good faith. Of course, there were financial reverses which delayed payments, even on the part of the most faithful and determined. These are now in many instances being overcome; the financial outlook being better, those who really meant to pay and expect to pay are viewing with hope the early day when they can make good their pledges. On the other hand, of course, there were some who did not intend when they made their pledges to pay. These, I am inclined to think, are comparatively few in number. Then there are some who, at the time of making the pledge, were in good health and had high hopes for the future. Since then, sickness, unexpected misfortunes, calamities, and in some instances death, have come into the family. However these matters may be, the great body of the Church may be counted upon to make good their pledges to this the greatest and holiest, and, in every way, the best movement the Church ever undertook.

DISTINGUISHED MESSENGER FROM THE CHURCHES OF EUROPE.

The evangelistical Churches in Europe, which have recently established, with the aid and cooperation of the American Churches, a central bureau as a clearing-house in all matters of relief, are sending over Dr. Adolph Keller, of Zurich, Switzerland, to bring to the attention of American Protestants the present condition of the Protestant Churches of Continental Europe. No man knows better than he the situation in Europe as a whole.

Concerning the present conditions there, Dr. Keller declared:

"We appeal to the heart and conscience of the whole evangelical world to come to the rescue. Our fellow-believers are suffering sore distress in many countries in Europe where Protestantism is struggling. Many institutions, schools and charitable organizations are threatened with extinction or are in danger of passing into other hands, whether secular or Roman Catholic. Thousands of professional men, clergymen and their families, widows of clergy and retired pastors, are plunged in great straits. Many of the Protestant institutions, necessary to the life of the Church, such as home missions, missionary work or the Church press, are ruined or going to cease for lack of funds.

"This widespread and heavy affliction concerns the whole evangelical world. European Protestantism, as a whole, is at present confronted with one of the greatest dangers in its history."

Dr. Keller has been, from the very beginning, one of the moving spirits in outlining the project of a central body for Protestant relief administration in Europe, and has been untiring in his efforts to get it on a working basis. At the same time, he has maintained all his parish duties as pastor of the historic old St. Peter's Church of Zurich. Not only is he one of the few outstanding leaders of European Protestantism in a position to see the problems of the evangelical Churches as a whole, but he is also one of the few who have a thorough grasp and sympathetic understanding of our American Churches. His book on this subject, "Dynamic Christianity," is the first thorough-going presentation of American Church life as seen from the point of view of an European. In addition to this, he has a charming and sympathetic personality, and is a fluent and forceful speaker in English as well as in his native tongue.

Dr. Keller arrived in New York at the end of April, and expects to stay until the first week of July. He hopes to take advantage of the many Church assemblies and conventions which will be held during May and June, in order to confer with as many of our Church leaders as possible. He is expected also to get in touch with colleges and universities, relief organizations, and societies interested in international relations. His itinerary will take him to the Pacific Coast, and will include a brief visit to some of the Church leaders in Canada.

Cordial invitations to conferences, assemblies and meetings of various kinds are coming to Dr. Keller from all parts of the country. Both from these and from the generous response to the appeal for the administrative expenses of the central bureau, it looks as if this idea of a central agency for European Protestantism had caught the imagination of people over here almost in the same degree as it has done on the other side of the Atlantic, where the realization of the critical situation of the stricken Churches is much keener than it is at this distance. THE TRINITY.

(No. IV of the Series.)

THE VISIBILITY OF THE INVISIBLE.

"The Invisible things of him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being perceived through the things that are made, even his everlasting power and divinity."—Rom. 1:20.

Theophilus is the first man known to have first used the word "trinity." It is mentioned in his writings of about A. D. 180, and was used as follows: "The trinity of God and His Word and His wisdom." So far as we know, it was then and there the term was coined by him, and it has ever since been used to express the three persons of God. It is to be noted, however, that nowhere in his writings has he made an apology for using it, nor an explanation of its meaning, from which we would infer that the persons to whom he was writing were familiar with the term, and that the word must have been in use from the days of the apostles, certainly their successors. Anyway, from that time it became the theological designation of the three persons in the Godhead. A little later, about A. D. 196, Tertullian asserted: "We believe in only one God: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, as they are the very self-same person. All are one by unity of the same substance, while the mystery of the dispensation is still guarded, distributing the unity into a trinity in the order of the three persons." This is the first mention of the trinity as a Godhead and as persons.

Justin Martyr said: "Our Teacher is Jesus Christ, the Son of the true God, and we hold Him in the second place, and the prophetic Spirit in the third."

Plato, the greatest of Greek philosophers, is quoted as saying: "Around the King of all, all things are, and because of Him are all things; and He is the cause of all good things; and around the second are the things second in order; and around the third, the third," and this has been taken as nothing else than a reference to the trinity.

In the previous articles on this subject, I have tried to explain that there is a threeness in everything, and while we have little reason to believe that the apostles knew everything about this, the fact is now used to show that the apostles themselves were not only a product of God's nature, but that the product of their lives was in the same course, and that the trinity did not come by accident; that in the threefoldedness of things, God has manifested himself; and that through the things made by him, we see clearly the invisible but real things of Him. I will now ask you to go with me into the scientific world and let us see together some of these great things.

Scientists tell us that there is an invisible something in the air which we breathe called ether. It is everywhere, and it has all the properties of substance, viz: solid, liquid, and gas; form and force, and yet we cannot see it; it cannot be touched nor tasted, contained nor measured; it is not matter, but it can communicate its motion to matter so forcibly that in a tornado it can uproot trees and hurl them long distances, making path across entire sections of country, leaving desolation and death in its wake.

This ether, commonly called "wind," is something man has never seen, and yet he believes in it most thoroughly, for without it he cannot explain the phenomena around him. He cannot live without it; but with it he does live, and he can explain everything.

Although this great thing, ether or wind, as you like, is invisible and unknown; it is both visible and known when something gets in its path, for by contact with matter it is made visible. We see it in the rustle of the trees, the sweep of the wheat field, in our own sense of feeling, as we inhale and exhale with every breath, when it lifts roofs off and hurls them inconceivable distances, when it lifts the sea into mighty waves and tosses the giant ship like a cork and leaves destruction in its track. It is the energy of this invisible thing we call ether that is doing all this work, and when the work of the world is being done it is this same energy manifesting itself in contact with material things.

Is not this big energy of the world—one of God's greatest blessings—to be applied to our understanding of God himself? The Church believes in the invisible, eternal and infinite essence of God, and yet has it ever seen him? "No man hath seen him at any time"; and yet every one who comes in contact with His spirit sees Him and knows Him. As ether is invisible and unknown, unless matter be in its path which makes it visible, so God is invisible and unknown, except as we get in His path, let us say, and make Him visible. And how many of His children everywhere are ready to bear witness that they have thus come to know Him and have seen Him!

Let us carry the analogy a little further. When ether becomes visible by its contact with some object called matter (let it be a person, a tree, a house, or what not), it may be said to become incarnate in that object. The very moment it strikes an object it is manifested, and the moment it is manifested it becomes incarnate—that is, it reveals itself in all its characteristics in that object. Apply this as illustrative of the trinity and we have God the invisible first person, incarnate in Christ the second person, who becomes the image of His substance. In Christ, God reveals Himself in all His characteristics, and becomes divine energy through the third mysterious person—the Spirit—to do His will and pleasure and complete His work in man. As there are three distinct and separate essentials in ether which do the work of the world, and the three make one mysterious unit; so God has three conscious distinctions, or characteristics, or realities, or persons, which are Himself the one God—to work out the redemption of the world.

How reasonable does this all seem to us! Since many who will read this have not the good fortune of a trained mind, I question its clarity, and yet it is so simple it seems that no one can fail to understand. Further, we are not asked to believe the doctrine of the "trinity" because of its reasonableness and simplicity nor upon the force of argument; but on the ground of the authority of God, who openly reveals it to us in everything we see, and because it is an historical fact. This great truth must go on making its claim until science and philosophy, the entire Church—yea! the whole world—shall become profoundly convicted of its truth.

IT IS DAYBREAK WITH THE JEWS, AND THE LIGHT IS SPREADING.

As a matter of general and most encouraging information to Christians of every name, we give the following most interesting article from a recent issue of the Jewish Evangelist, which is the organ of the converted Jewish work in Brooklyn, N. Y.:

"Does the preaching of the Gospel of Christ make any progress in the Jewish field of endeavor"? asks a very interested Christian friend, "and if so, what is the present attitude of the Jews towards the Lord Jesus"?

In answer to same, we would say that the first progressive sign is that neither do the Jewish leaders of the present day instigate nor would the people obey if they did, to cry again as they used to—"Away with Him"! You very, very seldom can hear any Jew express hostility to Jesus; instead, however, they direct it towards nominal Christianity. We are living in an age of Jewish discrimination between the nominal and real Christianity. There was a time in our own day when a Jewish man's life was not safe when he merely uttered the name of Christ in connection with anything that was holy and good. Today, however, no Jew would dare stand up in public and call Jesus what used to be His wrong portion in Israel, namely: false prophet, traitor, blasphemer, destroyer, enemy of Israel and Jehovah, and other epithets of reproach that we would be ashamed of to put down in writing, and be left unpunished by his own brethren. No Jewish mission or missionary is in need of a hiding place for that name which used to be substituted by some with anything but the name which is above every other name, the breathing of which will forever and aye cast a spell of holiness over the human heart. For years we did not hear any Jew, be he learned or otherwise, ask of us any question as to the Christ and call Him the "hanged one," as they used to; they call Him now by His right name, the name in which is great power—Jesus, or Jesus Christ. Blessed, however, are the lips that call Him the Lord Jesus Christ.

How soothing to the bleeding Hebrew-Christian ear that used to hear nothing but curses and imprecations of evil and repetitions of defamations of Talmudic Judaism upon their own Messiah, are now the symphonic voices of Jews and modern Jewry upon Jesus of Nazareth. Here are just a few of them, the very flower and pride of Judaism in every land of their dispersion. What a new song of gladness to the friends of Jesus are the songs of praise of these Jewish historians, philosophers, scholars, and theologians recognized and beloved leaders in all the movements of present Jewry, here and abroad.

Gustave Gottheil writes: The keynote of prophetic religion of the Jewish prophets was holiness of life and purity of heart. Love and mercy shown by men, one to another, make up the acceptable worship of the Holy One of Israel. To place the Master of Nazareth by their side can surely be no dishonor to him, nor can it dim the luster of his name. If he has added to their spiritual bequests new jewels of religious truth, and spoken words which are words of life, because they touch the deepest springs of the human heart, why should we Jews not glorify in him?

Stephen S. Wise: Even if Jesus had not been born unto Israel, even if He had borne no relation to the people of Israel, it becomes of importance to Israel to determine for itself what shall be its relation to the man who has touched the world nearly two thousand years as has no other single figure in history. * * * It is no mean joy and ignoble pride to us of the house of Israel to recognize, to honor, and to cherish among our brothers, Jesus the Jew.

Kaufmann Kohler: A great personality, standing unlike any other midway between heaven and earth, equally near to God and to man, Jesus, the helper of the poor, the friend of the sinner, the brother of every fellow-sufferer, the comforter of every sorrow-laden one, the healer of the sick, the uplifter of the fallen, the lover of man, and the redeemer of woman, won the heart of mankind by storm * * * mounted the world's throne to be the earth's great King.

Joseph Krauskopf: But the simple truths which he, Jesus, taught have ever constituted his great glory, has ever carried his name to the ends of the earth, and from proudest palaces to humblest hut, these have ever come as a healing balm to hearts heavy-laden, and to minds sorrowing and despairing, these have for nearly nineteen hundred years formed the rule of right and the law of duty, the guide to virtue for countless millions of people.

J. H. Hoffman: I rever him, Jesus, for having brought home, by his own life and teachings, to the innermost hearts and souls of mankind, of all times in every station, the eternal truths as first embodied in the Mosaic code and proclaimed in undying words by the prophets. * * * I recognize in him the blending of the divine and human, the lofty and the lowly, showing the path for the dual nature of man by divine aspiration to gain the victory over the earthly life tending to draw him downward—the Son of God triumphing over the child of earth.

David Castelli: Jesus, in a certain sense, fulfilled in his person the prophecies of the Old Testament; they reached in him a height beyond which it is impossible to go. He was not the magnificent worldly king, since there could be no question of a worldly king in Israel again, for whom the Hebrews waited in vain; but he was the great teacher of mankind, spreading among all nations that principle of love and humanity which, until then, had remained confined within the limits of Judaism. His word, and after him, that of the apostles, who, like himself, were born and reared in Judaism, were a powerful means of carrying into effect the yet unfulfilled prophecy of the Old Testament: Jehovah shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall Jehovah be one, and his name one.

Morris Jastrow: From the historic point of view, Jesus is to be regarded as a direct successor of the Hebrew prophets. His teachings are synonymous with the highest spiritual aspirations of the human race. The long-hoped-for reconciliation between Judaism and Christianity will come when once the teachings of Jesus shall become the axioms of human conduct.

Moritz Lazarus: I am of the opinion that we should endeavor with all possible zeal to obtain an exact understanding of the great personality of Jesus, and to reclaim him for Judaism.

Oscar Lambrose: In my eyes, Jesus is one of the greatest geniuses the world has produced.

Joseph Reinach: The characteristic mark of Jesus' moral is love, the purest and noblest love that ever existed—love for all human creatures, love for the poor, love for the wicked. Love is joy, and love is duty, and love is life. Humanity, since its first day and to its last day, was and will be thirsty for love, and Jesus is and will remain one of the highest types of humanity, because his words and his legends and his poetry are and will be an eternal source of love.

Abraham Krochmal: Has he (Jesus) not brought millions under the wing of the divine majesty and taught men discipline, morality, righteousness, and faith through the power of the Holy Spirit?

Isidore Singer: I regard Jesus of Nazareth

as a Jew of the Jews, one whom all Jewish people are learning to love. His teaching has been an immense service to the world in bringing Israel's God to the knowledge of hundreds of millions of mankind.

Now, in the face of this happy announcement of revolutionizing opinions from the most extensively read pens of the most honored in Israel toward the Lord Jesus Christ, are we to fold our hands as spectators only, or are we to forge on and on, shout from the top of every elevation with voices louder than ever before to Israel and proclaim with authority as ambassadors of the King of kings and Lord of lords, and tell the common people that the proclamations of our enlightened brethren, the teachers and leaders of Jewry are still as our forefathers were, in error as to their conceptions of the Lord Jesus Christ. They are as false as is every other half-truth. The very fact that they make it appear as if the Lord Jesus Christ would be standing before these our Jewish satelites in judgment is worse than erroneous. The Christ of the twentieth century is not in need of their approval or disapproval. Therefore, now as never before, we, His true disciples, must gather strength from above and proclaim to the Jewish people, their enlightened leaders included, that our redemption draweth nigh only when He will be acknowledged as King and Messiah of Israel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth in Christ will make us free, indeed. Blessed of God are all those who call themselves by Christ's name, and whose acts are answered prayers of eracing bitter memories in the Jewish heart and mind of what they had to endure in Christ's name from the hands of so-called Christ's people. In this hour of daybreak of the Gospel of Christ in Jewry, when its leaders are helping the Jew to look up and see what God has wrought through Christ among the Gentiles, may we have your prayerful support to point out to the onlookers in Israel that Jesus is not only beautiful and holy, but that He is indeed a Saviour from sin and our rightful King Messiah. Help us help the weary in Israel to come unto Him Himself, who alone is able, and oh so willing, to give Israel rest.

THE KEYS TO THE SCRIPTURES.

The Bible, to the ordinary reader, is a closed Book. It is, in fact, the product of the Holy Spirit. For holy men of old wrote as they were moved of the Holy Ghost. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

But keys are within reach with which this Book of books, filled with spiritual treasures, may be opened. One of these is—

The Love of Truth.

Truth loves a lover and will respond to the quiet, reverent, and eager approach and search of those who make love to her. Truth, like flowers, has a language for all who will listen and understand. As the flowers are always saying, "Be beautiful like me, be clean like me, and be sweet like me," so truth says, "Be good like me, be pure like me, and be true like me." To be a lover of truth is to be a lover of the Author of truth, for the two cannot be separated. The word of God is both a spoken and a written word. It is more than either. It is a speaking word. The Holy Spirit speaks right out from its sacred pages. To properly read or hear read the Holy Scriptures is to listen to "the still small voice" of the Author speaking to the hearts, consciences, and lives of men.

The use of this key will enable one to come into possession of a large variety of truth. Many, many truths of priceless value will come trooping in to find a welcome in your storehouse of memory. "And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

Another most valuable key with which to open the Scriptures is—

An Acquaintanceship With God.

The Bible is at best a love letter from the heart and hand of God. In it is a record of His dealings in love in behalf of the race. In it are many precious promises of love to all who will love in return. In it is a statement of the wonderful provisions of redemption which love planned and procured. In it are the assurances of glorious destiny for all the finally faithful. In it is the guarantee of the sustaining presence of he divine Lover. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

To understand a love letter fully, you must know the writer. By knowing the disposition of the writer, you may easily discern the meaning of each line, and even read much between the lines. To know God in the forgiveness of sins, in the deeper life of the soul, and particularly in the joyful fellowship of the Spirit, is to get an understanding of the inner thoughts and purposes in the Book of the word of life.

The use of this key will bring to you especially a revelation of the value of the Word. You will find it a treasure mine of gems of inexhaustible extent and of inestimable value.

The third key that will further unfold the Scripture is—

Prayer.

It is said that truth has polarity; that is, it is spherical. At first sight, only one side or part of truth is observed. Prayer will enable you to get a deeper and larger insight into the meaning of the mighty truths of Scripture. Thereby you get to see these truths from different angles until all seeming contradictions and inconsistencies will flee away. The beautiful harmony of truth will appear to the earnest, prayerful student. The deep infinity of truth will be confirmed in the thought of the praying man or woman. Prayer has the power also to appropriate Scripture truth for immediate use, food for the soul, a weapon for defense, and a refuge in time of storm.—The Word of Life.

GREENSBORO PALM STREET.

The Church at Greensboro, Palm Street, has just closed one of the most successful revivals I was ever in, I think. Our meeting began on the fourth Sunday in April, and continued through until Tuesday night, May 1st. Rev. H. W. Elder, of Richland, Ga., came to us on Monday, and did the preaching for us, although Brother Elder had just passed through a trying experience, in the death of his wife, yet he was on fire for God. His messages were nothing but the Gospel of the Lord Christ, full of love for the unsaved. It seemed that the people of all the Churches were swept with the unsaved, to a closer walk with God, it seemed a pity to close the meeting when we did, but Brother Elder was on his way to the Southern Christian Convention, and he had to leave Greensboro on the night of May 1st, in order to reach Henderson in time for the Convention on Wednesday.

The results of the meeting were exceedingly fine; there were approximately thirty professions and reclamations. There were fifteen additions to the Church, all of which were of mature age. There are others who gave their names for membership, who have not as yet joined. Among those who joined were some of the most substantial men of the town. Some of them are capable of fine leadership.

We are predicting a great day in the future of this Church. They are beginning to take on new life and energy, and to count it a pleasure to serve the Lord. Our Sunday School also is increasing nicely, as well as all the other activities of the Church. We are planning, before it gets cold weather again, to install a heating system in the Church, which will be of great help to us.

We are planning now to have a home-coming day the first Sunday in June, and all readers of THE SUN who have been former attendants of our congregation, as well as former members, will be especially invited to come and be with us on that day. If you read this article and fail to get a special invitation, remember this is yours, and come. May the Lord bless the work at this place, and water it with the very dews from Heaven, until it springs up to be a great Church in our denomination.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

HIGHLY APPRECIATED.

Portsmouth, Va., May 9, 1923.

MY DEAR DR. SMITH:

I was deeply touched by the thought and interest of the Convention delegates as expressed by the check which you sent to me. The money helps very much materially just now, but I appreciate much more the hearts that are back of it. I feel very unworthy of such kindness, but I hope the Lord will grant me the privilege of showing my appreciation in service in the days to come. The prayers of the Convention have already meant much to me, and I feel that prayers are going to be answered.

I want my friends who pray for me to be assured that I have conquered self in this matter and I have no desire to recover for my own sake, but that, through my recovery, I might continue the work for Him which I love, and that He might work through me as His humble servant to the glory of His name.

If you are not too busy, I wish you might express my appreciation through THE SUN.

Again sincerely thanking you and all from the depths of my heart, I am,

Yours in Him,

GEO. D. EASTES.

FAMILY ALTAR

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

MONDAY.

"This is My rest for ever; here will I dwell." —Ps. 132:14.

Habitation is the crown of God's dealings with us. His desire is not to send us messages merely, or even to visit us, but to make His abode with us. "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; He hath desired it for His habitation. This is My rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it" (Psalm 132:13, 14). When Pompey captured Jerusalem he entered the Temple. On reaching the vast curtain that hung across the "Holy of Holies," into which none but the high priest could enter, and that only on one day of the year, he wondered what that dark recess might contain. He drew the veil aside, but the glory had departed and there was nothing there. How many Christians today are like that? Temples without a God. All beautiful outside. But when we lift the veil and pass beyond it to where the glory should be, there is nothing to be seen. The glory is gone. This brings to our remembrance the old legend which tells us that on the night before the temple on Zion was burnt, the solemn words of the retreating Divinity were heard sounding through it, "Let us depart." "I will arise and return unto my place till they acknowledge their offenses." Should this voice be heard today by you, let your cry be, "Abide with me, King of life and glory. Leave me not"! And the answer will come, "This is my rest for ever, here—mystery of love—will I dwell for I have desired it, even the temple of thy heart."

"Reign over me, Lord Jesus;
O make my heart Thy throne:
It shall be Thine, my Saviour,
It shall be Thine alone.
O come and reign, Lord Jesus,
Rule over everything;
And keep me always loyal
And true to Thee, my King."

TUESDAY.

"I will give him the morning star."—Rev. 2:28.

"This signifies the inner and personal intimation and confidential hint which will be given to every ready and waiting one in sufficient time. And as that star precedes and presages the morning dawn, and tells that it is surely at hand, so in our hearts the Day Star will appear before the Sun of Righteousness arises and the Lord returns, 'And as these things begin to come to pass,' our very bearing will become more marked, and we shall get ready for the expected hour, so that even our very mien will be different. The Lord has pictured this in strangely vivid language. 'Then,' He says, 'lift up your eyes and bend yourselves back, for the hour of your redemption draweth nigh.' Yes, our very form will speak of upward vision and immediate expectation. We shall be poised for our flight like the bird upon the branch, with its pinions fluttering and just ready for flight. Let us begin to walk in that attitude which will not linger behind His earliest summons." —DR. A. B. SIMPSON.

"Long we've waited, blest Redeemer,
Waited for the first bright ray
Of the morn when sin and sorrow
At Thy presence flee away.
But our vigil's nearly over,
Hope of heaven, oh priceless boon!
In the cast the glow appearing,
Christ is coming—coming soon."

WEDNESDAY.

"I will bless the Lord at all times; His praise shall continually be in my mouth."—Ps. 34:1.

"It is a law of the inner life that when we repeat an act often enough it becomes habitual, it comes to be a law of our nature and then back of it is the settled and established character of which it is the expression. For example, we begin to deny ourselves the disposition of fret and murmur and to say instead, "Praise the Lord." After a while it becomes natural and it is easier to say that than to flash out the word of petulance or the look of anger. Then this settles down into a character of joyfulness and thankfulness and becomes transcribed upon our very countenance, and our whole being and bearing speak of the joy of the Lord. So of any other spiritual exercise, the act induces the habit and the habit establishes the character." —DR. A. B. SIMPSON.

"Fill Thou my life, O Lord my God,
In every part with praise,
That my whole being may proclaim
Thy being and Thy ways.

"Not for the lip of praise alone,
Nor e'en the praising heart,
I ask, but for a life made up
Of praise in every part."

THURSDAY.

"Able to present you faultless before the presence of his glory."—Jude 24.

Sin has so perverted our spiritual and moral powers that we are as liable to mistake as to breathe; and every mistake is a breach of the perfect law which allows no deviation whatever from perfect rectitude. We do not say that these involuntary failures to keep the perfect law bring Christians into condemnation; they do not, or we should be always in bondage; but they need the blood of sprinkling. Hence it is appropriate for the holiest soul on earth to say daily, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." Christ's merit in this sense meets our demerit—

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merit of Thy death."

FRIDAY.

"He is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." But if these infirmities—involuntary transgressions of the paradisaical law—are not sins in the sense that they involve condemnation, they are faults and blemishes in human character; and we have no reason to hope that we may be delivered from them until this mortal puts on immortality. The broken pitcher of our human nature may be put together again, but it will never have the true ring it had before it was broken. To regain that it must be handed over to the potter to be ground to powder, and entirely reconstructed. Then when Jesus comes to take us to Himself, or when death has reduced us to dust, and the Divine Potter has remade us, body as well as soul, we shall be "presented faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy."

"My every weak, though good design,
O'errule, or change as seems Thee meet;
Jesus, let all my work be Thine.
Thy work, O Lord, is all complete,
And pleasing in Thy Father's sight—
Thou only hast done all things right."

SATURDAY.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15:7.

Are our prayers always answered? Nay. How often, after some season of confident supplication, have we been staggered. Our bleeding hearts have cried out, Why is it so? And the mystery has grown deeper, the pain more acute, as we have summoned to memory the severe condemnation of Jesus: "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss." But we could not feel we had asked amiss; for we believe our intentions were pure, our desire for the glory of God, supreme. "Prayer is not our compelling God's reluctance, but laying hold of God's willingness." Beloved, in our amazement over our unanswered prayers, have we paused to think that the knowledge of His willingness is the product only of the prayer life? Prevailing prayer is not a spasmodic act that in some crisis mounts to the heavens and claims and receives, for its very boldness. It is a life and a continuous life. Every interruption of that life by trivial aims and doings paralyzes its power. The dear Lord does at times grant favors to those who live irregularly. But this kindness is to lead them on to a nearer union. Therefore, if after glorious conquest there comes a period of reversals, this is not to make void the accomplishments of the past and drive us into unbelief. But the rather to raise us higher in the life of prayer. —KENNETH MACKENZIE.

"Long as our fiery trials last,
Long as the cross we bear,
O let our souls on Thee be cast
In never-ceasing prayer"!

SUNDAY.

"Preach the Gospel, not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect."—1 Cor. 1:17.

"I say it is a great delusion, and an insult to Jesus Christ to make out that His reign needs modern culture to help it! I say that a great deal of the modern culture has done more to render us effete and powerless than all that ruffianism and heathenism ever did in the world's history! Why? Because poor human nature is such a weak thing, and as soon as you give it anything human, it begins to lean upon it, to trust in it, and it ceases to subdue by faith, it goes in to subdue by knowledge or intellect, learning, wealth, numbers or power. But, "it is not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." The Holy Ghost can do without the culture. He sometimes, though very rarely, gets cultured agents, as, for example, Paul. But Paul abjured his culture, and declared that his preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but with demonstration of the spirit and of power. And the history of the Church proves that just in degree, as the Church has come to have the human, she has ceased to have faith in the superhuman; she has put her trust in her princes, her defensed cities, and her learned divines, and forgotten the God of Israel, in whom her strength lies. Now, we will have the Christianity, if you please. We don't need modern culture added to our religion; we will have our religion, and leave the modern culture to the philosophers and highbrows."

—CATHERINE BOOTH.

"Saviour of men, Thy searching eye
Doth all my inmost thoughts descry;
Doth aught on earth my wishes raise,
Or the world's pleasures or its praise?

"Give me Thy strength, O God of power,
Then let winds blow or thunders roar,
Thy faithful witness will I be:
'Tis fixed; I can do all through Thee"!

It may hurt a little to be told that some of the heathen are ahead of us in doing fine things in the spirit of Christ. But when we are forced to admit that one of our missionaries who is working for heathenism so nobly does such an exceptional deed, we feel that we at home ought to profit by the same. We are told by an exchange of such an example given in Japan: "Worth a dozen sermons was the simple act of a missionary in Japan. While he was riding in his jinriksha one day, his coolie stumbled, fell, and broke his leg. Without hesitation, the missionary put the coolie in the carriage and, taking his place between the shafts, bore him back eleven miles to their starting point."

Golden Text: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.—1 Cor. 16:13.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 94:16-23.

Reference Material: Jer. 9:1-9, 13:1-9, 16:1-4, 17:19-27, 19:1-10, 22:13-19, 31:15, 31-34; Matt. 2:17,18, 16:14.

The Lion-Hearted Prophet.

"I have appointed thee a prophet unto the nations."

God has a plan for every life! "What a wondrous truth is this! And yet how reasonable a one. Shall the architect draw plans for his stately palace? Shall the artist sketch the outlines of his masterpiece? Shall the shipbuilder lay down the lines for his colossal ship? And yet shall God have no plan for the immortal soul which He brings into being"? (James McConkey). Here was a youth, living in an obscure village—Anathoth. His father was Hilkiah, possibly the same high priest who found the book of the law in the temple. He was a timid, sensitive young man when called to be this "prophet unto the nations." He felt unworthy and incapable. "Behold, I know not how to speak; for I am a child," was his first thought and expression. But God can wonderfully use humble man in His work. After Jeremiah really heard God's voice, and realized that it was a divine call, he submitted his will to that of the Father, with the "Here am I" spirit of Isaiah. Jehovah touched his mouth, and after that his courage never faltered, his decision never wavered. His ministry has been described as a "life-long martyrdom." It called for courage and devotion. It challenged his faith and loyalty. His life is an outstanding lesson of boldness for God and righteousness.

"Amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of Jehovah."

Here is the burden of the prophet's message. Jeremiah's spirit was that of the reformer. He was a "hero of the lonely way" which a man must trod when he sees an evil and is unwilling to compromise. He faced unpopularity and opposition for a cause which he believed to be right. The Protestant Reformation had to have the zeal of a Luther. The prohibition cause was victorious through its Frances Willard and Neal Dow and a host of other courageous men and women. A single message is never sufficient. Over and over, Jeremiah cried, "Amend your ways." For years he pleaded to a people who would not hear.

"The great and mighty God, Jehovah of Hosts is his name; great in counsel, and mighty in work; whose eyes are open unto all the ways of the sons of men, to give every one according to his ways and according to the fruits of his doings."—Jer. 32:18, 19.

Here is the source of his courage and power. Jeremiah trusted in God continually for guidance. His commission was from above. If approval registered there, he cared little for men's words.

"Down from the heavens it drops like a scroll,
Each day a bit will the Master unroll;
Each day a mite of the veil will He lift—
Why do I falter? Why wander, and drift"?

"Be strong."

Jeremiah rebuked Judah by showing the fidelity of the Rechabites to their fathers. Their obedience to their fathers' commands kept them from accepting the wine placed before them. The fact that they were in a strange land, guests, did not deter them from being faithful to ideals implanted in their hearts. On this "World Temperance Sunday," their example stands out for our thought. The one way to permanently kill the liquor traffic is by planting such ideals of temperance and abstinence in the citizens of the lands of the earth, that they will say, like the Rechabites: "We have obeyed the voice of our father * * * to drink no wine all our days." And then there will always be men, strong and upright, to make a law-abiding, moral and Christian nation.

"And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not."—Jer. 45:5.

This verse has been called the keynote of the life of the Prophet of Courage. If he had stopped to think of self, he would never have delivered his messages as he did. He cared nothing for his own glory nor promotion to earthly honors. Yet his message has lived for centuries. He had that virtue, which Woods Hutchison declares is "absolutely indispensable"—courage. "Without courage you may as well be without convictions." Jeremiah had both, and "greater than the heroes of battlefields are these silent sufferers of the commonplace."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

June 3, 1923.

Subject: "The Shepherd Psalm."—Ps. 23:1-6. (Consecration Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

The psalmist felt very close to Jehovah. He was his Shepherd, who supplied all of his needs. No need could be known when shepherd was nigh.—Verse 1.

God gives men strength to provide for his needs. He does not encourage indolence, but in truth provides all things. When man has done his utmost, he may always count upon God to provide.—Verse 1.

Jehovah is a safe and wise Guide. To follow Him means to be in the best place, though to men it may seem rough. He cares for His child.—Verse 2.

"Guideth in the paths of righteousness." In any city rescue mission, you will hear men and women tell how God guided them to the meeting place by a song, by an earnest prayer, by a hearty invitation. There they found their God, and felt His restoring power.—Verse 3.

In the hour of death, God is still the companion, when all others must leave. Even in that time there is no fear of harm or evil when He is there.—Verse 4.

God will care for you even among your enemies. He is the place of refuge at all times.—Verse 5.

There is no end to His goodness and loving-kindness.—Verse 6.

"And I smiled to think God's greatness flowed around our incompleteness, Round our restlessness, his rest."
—Mrs. Browning.

"Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also shall I bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."—John 1:16.

"The sheep follow him, for they know his voice."—John 10:4.

"I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd layeth down his life for his sheep."—John 10:11.

Plans for the Meeting.

A little book of the psalms can be purchased for a small amount. Since several of the Scripture passages for this year are found in the Psalms, this would be a helpful gift to give to your members at this meeting, with an invitation to your meeting on the cover.

If your hymn books contain the Shepherd Psalm set to music, this would be an effective way of opening the meeting, following a soft prelude by the pianist. The Scripture reading may well be repeated in concert, since this is a portion of Scripture which most people know. See how many other of the psalms which we have had for consecration meetings your members can repeat at this service.

The following splendid reading for this meeting, the author of which is unknown, is taken from a recent number of the Herald of Gospel Liberty:

In pastures green?
Not always. Sometimes he who knoweth best,
In kindness, leadeth me in weary ways
Where heavy shadows be.
Out of the sunshine, warm and soft and bright,
Out of the sunshine into darkest night.
I oft would faint with sorrow and affright
Only for his—I know he holds my hand.
So, whether in the green or desert land,
I trust, although I may not understand.

And by still waters?
No, no, not always so.
Sometimes the heavy tempests round me blow
And o'er my soul the waves and billows go.
When the storm beats loudest
And I cry aloud for help,
The Master standeth by and whispers to my soul,
"Lo, it is I."
Above the tempest wild I hear him say,
"Beyond this darkness lies a perfect day,
In every path of thine I lead the way."

So whether on the hilltops high and fair I dwell,
Or in the sunless valleys where the shadows be,
What matter? He is there,
And more than this:
Where'er the pathway leads,
He gives to me no helpless broken reed,
But his own hand, sufficient for my need.
So where he leads us we can safely go,

And in the blest hereafter we shall know
Why, in His wisdom,
He hath led us so.

Suggested Hymns.—"Saviour, Like a Shepherd Lead Us," "Saviour, Lead Me Lest I Stray," "I Need Thee Every Hour," "He Leadeth Me."

CHILDREN'S WORK SPECIALIST TO COME TO CHAUTAUQUA.

Word has just been received that Miss Emma G. Lemen, children's division superintendent of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association, will be able to come to the Chautauqua and School of Methods, at Elon College, July 30th to August 5th. Miss Lemen will conduct a class daily for workers in the children's department.

Miss Lemen has been in children's work in Pennsylvania since November, 1920. For seven years prior to that she had been State superintendent of the children's division of the State of Indiana, and before that she had been in State Christian Endeavor work as State secretary. She has spent much time in summer schools, both as a scholar and instructor, in addition to her scholastic training at Shortridge and Indianapolis Normal Training School, and is a graduate of the Geneva International Training School. Her record in both States has been a splendid one, and her work is very constructive in every particular. Mr. Walter E. Myers, general secretary of Pennsylvania, says: "She leaves behind definite programs and ways to get at them which makes her work a genuine contribution wherever she goes."

The program committee feels especially fortunate in being able to secure the services of Miss Lemen for Chautauqua week, and hopes that very many of the workers with children in all the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention will take advantage of this opportunity to know Miss Lemen and receive her help for their work.

TRAINING FOR LEADERSHIP.

The world today is demanding a trained leadership. Every field of activity is calling for able men and women, adequately prepared, to organize and direct its forces. In the business world it is a commonplace that there are more ten-thousand-dollar positions than there are ten-thousand-dollar men to fill them. The education needed a generation ago no longer suffices. The general level of education and efficiency is rising, and the man who would lead must have exceptional training.

This situation is as true in religious life as in any other field. Churches that face difficult and delicate tasks find it exceedingly difficult to secure ministers of large ability and adequate training. Moreover, nearly every Church is handicapped by the lack of trained leaders among their young people and adults. The crying need is for the rank and file of our Churches to fit themselves for higher usefulness in the kingdom.

It is a striking fact that the outstanding characters of the Bible were men of the most thorough training. Moses was eighty years old when he was called to lead the Hebrews out of Egypt, and these eighty years had been filled with experiences of the highest educative value. Joshua was nearly eighty when he took command of the Hebrew host, and all those years had been spent in acquiring the training he would require as commander-in-chief. David must have been fifty when he became king of all Israel, and every one of these years had made large contribution to his ability. Paul was almost fifty when he started on his first missionary journey, and even the Son of God was thirty years of age when He began His public ministry.

God wants us to get the very best training possible. He expects it of ministers and He expects it equally of all Church leaders. Sunday School superintendents who never read new books on Sunday School work and who never go to Sunday School conventions or summer conferences are back numbers, a hindrance rather than a help. Young people who aspire to usefulness as teachers, young people's society leaders should make it their business to attend conventions and assemblies.

During this summer a large number of splendid conferences are being held all over the nation for the training of Church and Sunday School and young people's leaders. It is not merely a great privilege which these offer; they present an imperative obligation upon all who desire to hear the Master's "Well done"! Make your summer count for God and leadership, as well as for all the joys which enter into these experiences. God wants us to be our best and achieve our utmost, and they most completely fulfill His plan who most adequately fit themselves for life's tasks and service.—From the Young People's Service.

Plan now to attend the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods, July 30th to August 5th. Has your school or society selected its representative yet? This is the time for them to be planning for the trip and the Church to be planning for their expenses. The Elon Chautauqua is planned by the Southern Christian Convention to meet this very need of training for more effective service. What are you planning to make your summer count for in carrying forward the work which you are doing for Him?

Windsor Sunday School is first! Children's Day has been held, and the offering received is nearly twice as large as last year. Who will be next?

The Daily Vacation Bible School in the Bethlehem Church, Valley of Virginia, Rev. A. W. Andes, pastor, opened Monday morning, May 21, for its second year's session.

Wanted: Every Sunday School in the Convention to hold a Children's Day service. The offering on this day will go to extend Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work. Offering envelopes will be furnished free by the Board of religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

The annual session of the Virginia Valley Central Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention opened last Wednesday night at Dry Run Church. The opening address was delivered by Rev. W. C. Hook, of Harrisonburg, Va. Mr. Roy A. Larrick presided. Mr. A. C. Boyce welcomed the Convention, to which Mr. Irvin Cather, of Winchester, responded. Many Churches were represented at the opening session.

NO SPECIALS NEEDED.

"I don't seem to have a single thing to be specially thankful for this year," said Monica, but she looked cheerful nevertheless.

"Isn't that fact, itself, something to be thankful for"? asked Uncle Kenneth. "I take it that you haven't been cured of any serious illness, you haven't been rescued from any special danger, you haven't had any loved one given back to you from the verge of death. But isn't that something to be thankful for? Not any of these dreadful things have happened to you; you haven't needed any of these special deliverances"!

Yes, that surely is one of the great blessings of life that we often lose sight of—to journey pleasantly through a fruitful land where sun and showers fall evenly.—Queen's Gardens.

Christian Orphanage

THE GOOD WORK GOES ON.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We received a donation a few days ago that brought to us a great deal of delight. Our farm has lots of newly cleared land and is full of stumps. It has been very difficult to work the land with any degree of satisfaction. Then, too, it prevented us from using machinery in harvesting our crops, and when we did use machinery, the breakage was no small item. We decided early in the spring that we would invest some money in dynamite and blast the stumps out. We spent about all we felt able to spend, and still had lots of stumps left. We wrote to the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc., Wilmington, Del., manufacturers of dynamite, and asked them to donate to the Christian Orphanage ten cases of dynamite to help us finish the job. They wrote me that they could not, as a company, make the donation, but Mr. J. Thompson Brown, general manager of the explosive department, and Mr. Arthur La Matte, manager of the technical section, would personally make us this contribution. Then ten cases of dynamite, with fifteen hundred feet of fuse and five hundred caps, have been received, and the stumps are taking trips up in the air. This was a contribution that will mean much to us, and we are very grateful. It will aid us in getting our farm in better shape for cultivation, save our machinery and make the work more pleasant for the boys.

It falls to the superintendent's lot to blow out the stumps.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Ladies' Aid Society, Franklin Christian Church (Va.), 20 sheets, 3 pairs pillow cases, 1 pair slippers; Mrs. W. Sellars' class, Burlington, N. C., Church, 3 pillow cases, 6 towels, 2 sheets; Ladies' Aid Society, Antioch Church, Valley of Va., 21 sheets; Nat M. Pickett, Madison, N. C., 1 bag beans; Mrs. R. L. Ingram, Ingram, Va., 5 dresses, 1 pair hose; E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Wilmington, Del., 10 cases dynamite, 1,500 feet fuse, 500 caps, freight.

THE LAND OF SARAH'S NATIVITY.

The Babylonians were of the Semitic origin, and during the last forty years excavations about Nineveh have shown that they were possessed of a civilization that surpassed most any country. One of the most valuable things unearthed at Nipper was the temple library, showing their ways of writing, which was the peculiar arrow-headed and wedge-shaped forms. The writing material was clay tablets almost six inches in length, three in width and in thickness. The tablets of special importance were written upon and baked, were covered with a thin coating of clay, rewritten and baked again. If the outer writing were rubbed out or altered, the inside coating would show the true text.

Ur, of the Chaldees, where the early part of Sarah's life was spent, was an important city of Babylonia on the banks of the great Euphrates River and near the Persian Gulf. It was the center of commerce and of religion, called the holy city of Babylonia.

Sarah was surrounded by neighbors or people that believed in nature gods—the sun, the moon and the earth. They believed in spirits, and particularly in wicked spirits; another feature of religion was astrology, the foretelling of events by the stars. The higher and purer beliefs are illustrated by the penitential psalms, which show a spirit much like the psalms of the Old Testament. One of the Babylonian psalms is: "Instead of food, I eat bitter tears; instead of datewine, I drink the waters of misery." David says, "My tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually say unto me, where is thy God."

Sarah believed in the one and only King, who is God, whose mercy endureth forever.—MRS. MITTIE. SUMMERAL HUGHES, in Free Will Baptist.

Did you ever hear of such a thing as a maniac nation? Well, they now say that there is such a thing abroad in the world today. We know that a man who is a maniac is considered very dangerous, if allowed to go at large, and if such a man is dangerous, how much more dangerous must a maniac nation be?

One of our exchanges says: "Lord Robert Cecil, of England, declares there are maniac nations which need the restraint of normal nations associated in the League. Some nations have been doped with militarism, and like opium fiends, they demand more, more, more." Maybe that was the trouble with Germany when she went to war. If so, we fear she has not recovered her sanity yet.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

THE WORD SHALL NOT RETURN "VOID."

It is scarcely possible to discuss the relation of radio to the Church without bordering on frivolousness; but the subject may be ended with the assurance that a free and untrammeled pulpit has nothing to fear from any invention that broadcasts the Word of the Lord. One of the miracles of Jesus—that of the healing of the centurion's son—is described as being wrought over the distances—as if the power of Christ went over wireless ways to touch the body of the sick child. "Speak the word only," said the believing soldier, "and my son shall be healed." Our trust in the Gospel should be so confident that we may commit it to the wave-lengths and send it out to invisible audiences in the faith that it shall not return "void," but shall accomplish that whereunto it is sent by the God of all wonders and graces.—Zion's Herald.

AUGMENTING A MAN'S REACH.

Radio has found a new use in Philadelphia. The pastor of one of the largest Presbyterian Churches in that city is Rev. Dr. C. E. McCartney, of whom the Presbyterian, published in the same city, says: "He is now well and widely known as the exposer of rationalism and the defender of evangelical faith. Dr. McCartney is preaching a sound, solid, scholarly Gospel to an audience that crowds the spacious auditorium and its galleries." To accommodate those who cannot get in an overflow meeting is arranged for in another auditorium, in which a radio set has been established, so that those who cannot get into the Church can still hear him preach. This shows that the simple Gospel preached earnestly and forcefully without any sensational methods will draw the people. When all the preachers realize this and do their best, with God's help, to present His message to men in simplicity and earnestness, there will be no trouble to get people to come and listen.—Presbyterian of the South.

FERRELL.

Brother H. B. Ferrell passed from earth and laid aside the working tools of life, being about 76 years old. He died October 11, 1922. In the absence of the writer, his pastor, his funeral was conducted by Rev. J. E. Amerson. Bro. Ferrell lived a consistent member of New Harmony Church since it was organized, he being a charter member. He was a faithful husband and father and a good neighbor in his community. He leaves to mourn their loss a widow, two daughters—Mrs. Young and Mrs. Edmonson—and one son, Mr. John Ferrell. May the Lord comfort all the bereaved.

SOCIETY NOTE FROM BABYLON.

The dance craze is sweeping the country, and young men and women have danced for nearly three days without rest. It is only another evidence that the fool-killer is neglecting his work. It is said that 63,000 paid admissions were received here in Baltimore. The noble manager of the theatre closed the show early on Sunday morning, owing to his scruples against Sabbath desecration and —the fact that he was not allowed to collect entrance fees on the Sabbath.—Exchange.

RECONCILED.

To be reconciled to God is to be reconciled to Him in His holiness, and all it appoints for us and all it requires of us. God beseeches us to be reconciled to Him just as we are, but it is to Him as He is, for in nothing less can we be truly blessed.—John Oman.

BROWN.

W. W. Brown, aged 57 years 6 months and 21 days, died May 8, 1923. He leaves a wife, one sister, two brothers, besides many other relatives and a host of friends, who lament his passing.

He was a member of the Christian Church at Pleasant Grove until the organization of the Bennett Christian Church, of which he died a member.

He loved his Church. I am told by friends he had much to say regarding death, and freely expressed his readiness to depart. May the Heavenly Father comfort the hearts of his loved ones. Burial service by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. R. Underwood, pastor at Pleasant Grove, in presence of a large congregation, and his grave was completely covered with flowers. T. J. GREEN.

HARRELL.

Edward R. Harrell was born March 19, 1833. United with Cypress Chapel Christian Church when very young; married Sarah Parker in 1857, and died May 12, 1923, at the age of 90 years 1 month and 22 days. He is survived by seven children—Mrs. D. W. Henderson, Mrs. J. L. Johnson, A. L. Harrell, C. C. Harrell, W. H. Harrell, A. P. Harrell, and E. M. Harrell. He leaves also fifteen grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. He had been an active member of Cypress Chapel for many years, and leaves many friends who praise his name.

The funeral services were conducted from the Church on Sunday afternoon, May 13th, the Church being crowded to its full capacity. In the absence of Rev. J. M. Roberts, the pastor, who could not be present, and Rev. H. H. Butler, a former pastor, too far away to come, the services were conducted by Revs. W. W. Staley, L. L. Lassiter, and C. G. Lowe, a Baptist minister from Whaleyville. A long-lived, happy and useful Christian entered into rest, leaving a splendid posterity and a good name.

W. W. STALEY.

CREECH.

J. Creech died Saturday, May 5th, at his home, Garner, N. C. The funeral was preached at the home of the deceased by the pastor, Rev. M. T. Sorrell. The remains were taken to the Christian Cemetery, where the Junior Order conducted a beautiful and impressive ceremony in the presence of throngs of friends.

The deceased is survived by his wife and six children—four boys and two girls—one daughter-in-law and one son-in-law. He spent practically his entire life in the community of Garner. He was for thirty-four years a devout member of the Christian Church.

M. T. SORRELL, Pastor.

MARY MORRILL AND GEN. FENG.

The absorbingly interesting story of the conversion of General Feng, the "Chinese Christian Fighter," was told in the Literary Digest of August 12, quoting in part the Christian Advocate and the Sunday School Times. Mary Morrill was an American missionary who, in 1900, was beheaded by the Boxers; and Feng, at that time a young Chinese cadet, was one of the witnesses. The impression must have been similar to that which, doubtless, was made upon Saul when the latter witnessed the martyrdom of Stephen.

"Feng heard the woman missionary plead for the lives of the missionaries and of the Chinese Christians. When that plea was of no avail, he heard her beg that they might slay her and spare the others. He saw her on the way to the place of execution, speaking quietly to some of the people who watched the procession, and giving silver from her purse to a poor creature in the crowd. He saw the fortitude with which she met her death. The sacrificial love which stood there revealed made an unforgetable impression on him."

It was Mary Morrill's martyrdom, together with other deeply impressive incidents, which finally resulted in Feng's conversion in 1911, and during the eleven years that have since elapsed General Feng has probably been the most mightily used Christian in China. Not only has his own brigade, numbering not far from 10,000 men, been led in large part to Christ, but thousands of others have been pointed to the Lamb of God, and in addition many needed reforms have been successfully instituted.

When Mary Morrill went to China, she went with the spirit of revival in her heart. That spirit of revival was communicated to Feng, and later, through Feng, to thousands of other Chinese. And now the story is being told throughout America and all the world, and out of it will come, under God, flaming evangelists and revived pastors and missionaries. Think what it would mean for God if every one of the 200,000 pastors and missionaries and evangelists of the world were as imbued with the spirit of revival as was Mary Morrill and as is today General Feng. Multitudes will be if you who read these lines pray persistently and believingly and prevailingly—if you pray for revival.

MARRIED.

At the residence of, and by, the writer on April 22, 1923, Mr. H. Franklin Brady and Miss Edna Gardner, both of Bennett, N. C., were united in marriage. Happiness to them. T. J. G.

MARRIED.

Miss Flossie Owen and Mr. Eustace Yow, of Seagrove, N. C., were united in marriage at the home of the writer on the 2nd day of May, 1923. May much happiness be theirs. T. J. G.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Wake Chapel Church, Wake County, N. C.

Wake Chapel Christian Church had its beginning in 1856 in a school-house a few miles from the present site. Later a small building was erected on the present site, which was added to and ceiled in 1875. In 1900 and 1901 a new building was erected, Rev. J. D. Wicker being pastor. This building is now torn away and is being replaced by a splendid brick structure. It will contain ample class-rooms and gallery.

The building committee is composed of K. B. Johnson, R. M. Dickens, J. B. Johnson, E. B. Utley, W. J. Ballentine, C. D. Powell and C. N. Johnson. They expect to have the building ready for the North Carolina Conference, November, 1923. C. N. Johnson drew the plans and is erecting the building. He is brother to Dr. L. F. Johnson.

Dr. J. W. Wellons helped with his own hands to build the first Church and was its pastor. Rev. W. G. Clements served the Church longest, this being altogether thirteen years.

J. Lee Johnson.

Mexico and Labor.—

The 1917 Mexican Constitution contains, in Article 123, a remarkable charter of rights for labor:

"The article decrees the eight-hour working day; the seven-hour working night; the six-hour day for working children, twelve to sixteen; no night work for women and children; one day of rest in seven; a vacation on pay for child-bearing; a living wage; no garnishment of the living wage; enforced profit-sharing; cash wages; double pay for overtime; housing for workingmen; accident compensation; safe and sanitary work places; right to organize; right to strike or shut down; three months' wages for unwarranted dismissal; worker's lien; immunity of wages from attachment; free employment bureaus; no contracting out of workingmen's rights; social insurance; co-operative building associations. Although some of the States have legislated, so far the Mexican Congress has failed to enact laws to carry into effect these benevolent provisions."

A Lesson for Study.—

How beautiful is the following—yea, how true it is to the real side of the Christian life: "If we 'admit' Christ as Lord, 'submit' to Him in everything, 'commit' everything to Him, and 'permit' Him to be everything, and to do all His will in us, then we shall indeed 'transmit' His life and grace to others, and all that we are and have and do shall be to the glory and praise of God."—Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D. That is a good lesson. Study it carefully and prayerfully and it may be to you a real blessing—so we believe. How much we miss by not being fully and truly submissive to His will—surely!

A Jail in a Railway Station.—

The Chicago union station, now under construction, will include a jail, a chapel and a morgue, says the Railway Age (New York). It continues:

"The jail will consist of two cells, each completely equipped, capable of accommodating several prisoners, and will be built in the basement. A reception-room, heavily barred, will give access to the cells. The jail will be used for holding prisoners passing through Chicago and will eliminate the necessity of an officer being handcuffed to the prisoner while waiting for trains. When the jail is completed, an officer will be able to receive the cell keys from the custodian, lock the prisoners in the cell and be free until train-time. The chapel will be completely furnished and equipped for funeral services."

An Awful Situation.—

What can be done about it? Even the most determined optimist will stand aghast at these facts and figures. We clip them from the Literary Digest as follows:

"The suicide of children is a matter particularly distressing, and a most serious problem, to be carefully considered. In 1919 we reported 477 child suicides. In 1920 there were 707. In 1921 the number had increased to 858. In 1922 there were over 900, or nearly 3,000 in four years. The average age of boy suicides is sixteen; girls, fifteen. Most girls use poison; the boys use a gun. When five school-girls in four days commit suicide it is time the public asked the reason why. The conclusion reached probably will be that they were temperamentally disordered, or home conditions were intolerable, or that the school system was at fault. All three are the chief causes for child suicide.

"Child marriage is another serious cause. In 1920 there were 1,600 boys and 12,000 girls fifteen years of age in the United States listed as married, and nearly 500 of them were recorded as widowed or divorced. The married boys of sixteen numbered 3,222. Those of seventeen numbered 7,960, those of eighteen 24,644. Girls who had married at sixteeen numbered 41,620, at seventeen 90,930, and those at eighteen 186,645. Many of these children soon after marriage find that they have made a great mistake in their choice, quarrel, separate, get divorced and supply many of our suicides as well as homicides. Parents and teachers should educate children to avoid emotional excesses, to meet bravely the unpleasant things of life."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. and Mrs. R. L. Williamson greatly enjoyed their visit to the Henderson Convention. To them it was not only going to the Convention, but it was a home-coming, as Henderson is an old charge of these beloved servants of the Lord. Come again, Bro. and Sister Williamson, for the people will be ready and glad to see you.

This we may know surely that no man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure, and good without the world being better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness. —Bishop Phillips Brooks. There is certainly a strong incentive in that thought for us all to make an effort to do our best.

Dr. D. A. Long seems to have caught the spirit of the good farmers. On May 21, he writes: "We had a delightful rain last night. The farmers go forth today whistling and singing—corn in the crib, money in the pocket, baby in the cradle and a pretty wife to rock it." That has quite a swing to its ideal. We are wondering if our brother will turn poet under the delights of farm life.

Never was it more true than now that "We are living, we are dwelling in a grand and awful time, in an age on ages telling—to be living is sublime." The truth of this quotation should not be lost in its triteness, nor should its meaning be drawn away from future implications. We must today supply the foundational necessities for future demands.—Rev. Frank G. Coffin, D. D., in Inducements to Purity.

Referring to the dear ones who have gone on before, the Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis says: "Happy those who have prepared for an abundant entrance. Blessed are they that have sent on in advance a company of celestial pilgrims, who linger about the gate, waiting to give tumultuous welcome to one beloved. Thrice blessed, these who come in like some noble king returned from their holy war on earth's far-off frontier."

Here is a very beautiful thought, and it is not only beautiful, it is truth and very comforting to the child of God. It was expressed by the celebrated English poet, Alfred Tennyson. He expressed his thought thus: "I should be sorely afraid to live my life without God's presence, but to feel He is by my side just now as much as you are, that is the very joy of my heart." Do you, dear reader, have any such experience in your life?

Rev. Robert Dick Wilson, D. D., in referring to the accuracy of the text of the Old Testament, says, and he is one of the ablest scholars in the world: "You can be absolutely certain that we have the text, substantially, of the Old Testament that Christ and His apostles had, and that was in existence from the beginning." Considering that Dr. Wilson is not only one of the ablest scholars in the world, but that he is also a devout and faithful student of the Word of God, we believe that we can trust his word as to this matter, and when you hear any one question the certainty of the text of the Old Testament, you can safely fall back on the assurance that Dr. Wilson gives us as to the present text of the Bible being just what Christ and the apostles had in their day. Let us cling close to the truth as it is given to us in the Bible which Christ and His apostles had in their day.

"I am expecting to hold a meeting at Rocky Ford Church about the last of May. I wish the prayers of our people for the work there. Then I expect to hold a meeting at Elk Spur some time in June. Pray for this work also."—Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, Fancy Gap, Va. Our brother has a big and needy field in Carroll County, Va., and he really needs all the help we can give him by our prayers. Do not forget our mountain work.

We acknowledge the receipt of a kind invitation to attend the commencement exercises of the High School at Windsor, Va., for June 4th. We are indebted for the same to Miss Mary Herbert Watkins. Wish we could go, but previous engagements and work will not consent, but we wish for the young people a pleasant occasion. We recall school life in Windsor a great many years ago. It was the camping-ground of some of our early days in school. Thank you, Miss Mary Herbert.

We have already announced the death of Mrs. H. W. Elder, of Richland, Ga., but we cannot let the occasion pass without a word of personal appreciation. We met her only once. We had dinner in her home on one occasion and saw enough of her to keep her busy and useful life in mind. She stood at the head of a large family, and, as her husband is a minister, she had very largely the cares and the responsibilities of that home, most of the time alone, for her husband's work called him away often for weeks at a time. But she took her place bravely and served her day and generation well. Now that she is no more with us, she is called blessed by those who knew and loved her best. We lament her going away so soon in life, but she went away as one who had quickly earned her reward, but not to be forgotten. Our sympathy goes out to her lonely and overburdened husband in this day when there is no wife in the home.

Rev. M. W. Butler, pastor of our First Church at Muncie, Ind., seems to be enjoying his work much. When he first went on this field, the situation was almost forbidding. He buckled down to hard work and has been permitted to see the outlook and the real work of the Church greatly improve. The regular attendance has much more than doubled and the growth is most encouraging. That is a fine situation and we rejoice with our brother that he sees the work of the Lord prosper in his hands. We have a bit of personal knowledge of the Muncie field, and to say it has for years been a most difficult field is not putting it too strong. It has been indeed a hard field, but we rejoice that conditions are greatly improving under the labors of our brother and the leading of the Holy Spirit. If Bro. Butler can, by God's help, bring things to pass there, we should think he could, with God's help, grapple successfully with any Church in any part of our denominational territory.

How do we beginners in life ever get to be experts in any chosen life? Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis says it is done this way: "Faith in life immortal helps men endure the limitations and incompleteness of their lives. Observation and experience assure us that this world is a school room for the development of an appointed gift rather than for the performance of the work itself. Schools and colleges develop capacity—afterwards comes the life work. It is style that turns the raw silk of knowledge into the brocade of literature. Robert Louis Stevenson was willing to spend a full morning perfecting a half-dozen sentences. Preparatory to his lifework, Stevenson practiced upon his style through twenty volumes of short stories, essays and poems. At forty-five years of age he felt that he was ready for his first big novel, but suddenly death withdrew the artist from the scene. The same principle holds in the realms of music, painting, sculpture and invention. Men toil all their lives long, trying to master the chosen task. Not until the evening shadows fall and the day is far spent does the amateur become an expert."

If you ever get an idea in one's head fully, you may rest well. It will be hard to get it out. There is one exception. If you get a very good idea settled in one's mind, well in some strange way it seems quite easy for that to slip away, not in all, but in many instances. But if you once beat an error into the head of some person, it then seems to have staying qualities and you can hardly get it away at all. Take the case of a certain letter, purporting to be written by Jesus and carrying with it such promises of reward for obedience to its teachings, and though the thing has been exposed and denounced hundreds of times, there are many people who hold on to it as if it was salvation itself. What a pity that we cannot hold truth as tenaciously as we do error? Then, take the old idea of predestination, and though you may expose its error again and again, yet the people keep right on believing it, even though the Bible itself declares against the idea that doctrine holds forth as truth. When even the Bible decides against the same error, many professing people of God will not give it up. It is indeed a strange wrinkle in human nature. The only explanation that we know is the fact that the devil knows that his one sure chance to cheat Christ out of a soul is to get that soul to believe a lie, and that gives him satisfaction. We really think the devil has much to do with inducing men and women to hold to error.

That is a notable article in this issue from the pen of Mr. William T. Ellis on "A Night in Constantinople. It is an awful picture, and the more so because it seems to be true. Mr. Ellis is regarded by the Christian Herald, from whose columns this article is taken, as an authority on Near East affairs. Surely a good house-cleaning in Constantinople is terribly needed. One is not easily persuaded to believe that these worldly Christians have wrought so terribly to the pulling down of the strongholds of the Christian faith, as Mr. Ellis thinks they have done in Constantinople. They are making the work of the Christian missionary doubly hard in their efforts to win the Moslem world to Christ. An inconsistency in the life of a professing Christian there works more mischief in an hour than the missionary can undo in a year. If we could only keep these worldly Christians away from such great centers, how much easier it would be to give the Gospel to the men who are in darkness. It is just as true at home, is it not? If worldly Christians and hypocrites would hide themselves from public view, then we might win men and women to Christ rapidly. As it is, these men and women are hindrances to the spread of the Gospel, both at home and abroad.

A FEW HOURS AT FRANKLINTON CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

We took a few hours off May 23d to run up to Franklinton, N. C. (less than one hour's drive from Henderson by auto) to attend the commencement exercises of our Franklinton Christian College, and we were glad of the privilege, for the commencement exercises were splendid. Bro. J. Byrd Ellington took us on his big Chandler. It was a splendid ride, and you may think we are joking, but we are not—we passed through some fine scenery, but the most interesting part of the afternoon came in the exercises in the college chapel. Rev. J. A. Henderson is president, and he is making a fine success of the institution. The commencement exercises were of a high order—every number was first-class. The singing was very good and the speaking was in good taste and well delivered. One of the best efforts was by one of the girls of the graduating class. She gave a demonstration of a model home. She did it well and finished by having her kitchen table and a cook stove on the platform and telling her audience how to make a certain cake, and when she had her cake made she put it into the stove and in a short while she took the cake out, beautifully cooked, and to prove it she told how to tell when the cake was well cooked, and then she cut the cake and let her audience see that it was not only well, but beautifully cooked. It was what is called the "checker" cake, and it was checked through and through. She received much applause. Dr. D. A. Long was present and delivered the diplomas —some twenty or twenty-five of them—to the graduates, and in doing so, he made a taking speech and was much applauded. The college is nicely domiciled in its new building on its new campus, but it is growing so that even now they much need an additional new building. Rev. J. A. Henderson is doing splendidly as president. He is the right man in the right place. We believe Franklinton Christian College has a great future, and Henderson, under the blessing of God, is the man to lead it on to realize the greatness and usefulness of that future. One other thing we must tell. In the graduating class there must have been twelve or fifteen girls. They were well dressed, and the president said each girl had cut and made for herself the dress she was then wearing. That was a high compliment, and it shows what the institution is doing for its pupils. They are not merely teaching them book learning, but they are teaching them how to work and how to do their work well. Those who have furnished the money to establish this institution may well be proud of their investments, for they are paying a high rate of interest and compounding it oftener than every six months.

Franklinton Christian College is doing a great work for the Church and for the colored people in a general way. President Henderson is a Southern colored man, and the Booker Washington of the Christian Church. He deserves well at the hands of the Christian Church.

COMMENCEMENT AT ELON.

The class-day exercises' program of the graduating class was the feature of the Monday morning session of the thirty-third annual commencement of Elon College, which began here on Saturday night and will conclude with the afternoon session on Tuesday, the 29th.

The program opened with a welcome address by E. C. White, Waverly, Va., president of the senior class. The forty-one members of the class participated in these exercises. J. M. Fix, Burlington, N. C., gave a history of the class during its four years in the college. The class poem was rendered by Miss Mary Swanson, the author of the same.

The class prophecy and the last will and testament by Mary Nelle Holland and Irene Goff, respectively, were of interest and were amusing, as was also the delivery of trophies by J. M. Fix.

The exercises were concluded with the delivery of the senior mantle by L. J. Perry, which was accepted by J. C. Whitesell, member of the junior class.

On Sunday morning the baccalaureate sermon was preached by Dr. Francis E. Clark, Boston, Mass., founder of the Christian Endeavor Society. This feature of the Elon commencement season was removed to the First Christian Church at Burlington on account of the college having no auditorium since the burning of its administration building in January. In beginning his sermon, Dr. Clark declared that there had never been a generaton of young people to whom so much has been given, in God's good providence, as the one now entering upon the most active period of life. "This fact," he continued, "brings with congratulations for the fortunate youth of this country, whose natal day was so auspicious, and it also brings, with every opportunity, a tremendous responsibility."

"To be educated in these days," he said, "is not simply to be able to construe Latin and Greek, not simply to be able to turn Latin odes into poor English poetry, but is to know something of many things, and, if possible, everything about one thing."

He charged the class "never to be discouraged or doubtful of final victory," and that it was the business of educated men and women to range themselves on the side of God and an aggressive Christianity.

The pageant given on Saturday night under the direction of Prof. W. F. Greenwood of the music department, was a new item on the commencement program, and took the place of the annual oritorio which had been left off this year. "Columbus" was the title of the first section of the pageant, which put into scenes the happenings from the time Columbus became possessed with the idea the world was a sphere on through the discovery of America and until his death in prison. The second division was entitled "Three Centuries of American Democracy," which began with a representation of the Puritans and the Revolutionary War to the present day.

Those taking the leading parts in the pageant were L. J. Bray, who played the role of Columbus; R. S. Nelms, who characterized John Hancock; Jennie Gunter, representing "Immortality and Religion"; G. L. Williams and Madge Moffit, who represented the king and queen of Spain. More than 100 students took part in the presenting of the historical pageant.

Tuesday will be the graduating day, at which time the seniors will receive their diplomas. Governor E. Lee Trinkle, of Virginia, and Governor Cameron Morris are both to be present and speak during the morning. In the afternoon the cornerstone of Alamance Hall, the new administration building, will be laid. C. M. Cannon.

"JESUS, THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD."

He says, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto Me." So, let us, as His children, hold up Jesus as our Saviour who cannot only save from sin, but He will save if we will let Him. In John, He says that His blood cleanses from all sin. We know this is true because we have tried it. And we ought to let our light so shine that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father which is in Heaven, and let us ever be ready to rebuff sin and also try to live above sin. In Matthew 1:21, "Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins." The writer wants to say that when you accept Jesus as your Saviour and join the Church, then the fight starts. That is the time the devil starts, but Jesus says watch and pray, lest you enter into temptation. In Romans 12:1, "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Sometimes we say and do what is not becoming to Christians. We should live so the world will not have room to criticise, and if we get the beam out of our eye we can see how to pull the mote out of our brother's eye. Let us be doers of the word.

We are getting along nicely on the Church. We are hoping to get in it soon. We are praying for success here, and by the help of the Lord we believe we are going to have it. We are looking forward to our opening service, and if nobody else shouts, I expect I will.

I am talking the Church on the street cars and at my work; I am inviting people out to our services; I am doing all I can, and others are doing the same.

I want to say that our Sunday School is growing nicely. We expect to go into our new Church with 100 on roll or more, but don't want to stop there. We want to keep growing. One of our loyal members, P. J. Carlton, has gone over to England; we hope he will have a good trip; we are looking for him back next month.

We believe our Church will be a blessing to Richmond. We have lost by not having a Church here long ago. Now, when our people come to the city they will have somewhere to go. Let us, by God's help, do our best as Christians to win souls for Jesus. J. W. Price.

PLEASANT HILL, OHIO.

Since coming to this field, I have been very busy getting adjusted to the work. This place certainly lives up to its name. We have received a most pleasant and most cordial welcome here. The people of the North are not so indifferent to strangers, and are not as difficult to get acquainted with as they are said to be. We have never enjoyed any Southern hospitality that surpassed the hospitality and kindness we are enjoying here. Truly, our lines are fallen in pleasant places.

The reception given us by the Church and community was very encouraging and gratifying. On the evening of April 11th the members of the Church and people of the community gathered at the Church and engaged in a welcome service that made the pastor and his family feel at home and feel glad once more that we cast our lot with these good people. The speeches that were delivered were inspiring, and the words of appreciation and delight were many. They spared no time or money in making this a great occasion. We shall always remember this as one of the most inspiring events in our lives.

Since coming here, I have conducted a series of meetings lasting two weeks. The services closed Easter Sunday evening with an inspiring musical program—an Easter cantata, rendered by the community chorus. The house was packed to the doors, and many people were turned away. At the morning service Easter Sunday I received eight members into Church fellowship.

It has been the custom of the Church for many years to take an offering for missions Easter Sunday. The offering this year surpassed any offering of previous years, amounting to $420.00.

At the suggestion of the editor, I will contribute an article to The Christian Sun occasionally. And, by the way, speaking of the Editor of The Sun, I hear a lot of nice things said about him in these parts. R. F. Brown.

A SPECIAL REQUEST.

How many will join me in a special prayer for five minutes every Monday morning at 10 o'clock sharp for the completion and equipment of your new buildings now being erected at Elon College to take the place of the property destroyed by the terrible fire January 18th, and for a large development of usefulness as a Christian college, and especially for the chair of theology now being established in connection with the college work? The close study of the English Bible, and for the right man as director. I hope a large number will join me in this prayer.

SEVERAL IMPORTANT MATTERS AS TO MARRIAGE.

WHERE WILL THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH STAND?

It is time the whole Church of Christ was awaking to see what is to be the end of all this divorce business! Not many of our people have any adequate idea of the havoc this divorce business is working to the serious detriment of the Church. We ought to awake and cry aloud and spare not! A good many people seem to think if anything against divorce is said when there happens to be such an one in the circle of their friends that it is cause for offense. We hope that is not the case generally, but if it is we say where God has spoken as He has in the matter of divorce, let not the fear of man silence the true ministers of God. If there is anything about which the ministers of the Gospel should speak out fearless, but kindly and firmly, it is the matter of marriage and divorce in this country, and in this day when so many think they can get married today and be divorced tomorrow, and then be married again right away, if any one should come along who had no more sense than to propose marriage to such a person. We have from several sources a good many facts bearing on marriage and divorce, and we herewith submit the same for the consideration of our readers as follows:

Bishop William T. Manning, in a Lenten address at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, declared, according to the New York Times, that to allow men and women to live together for a time and then with legal sanction to separate and form new alliances as often as they please is in principle to abolish marriage and to adopt a system of legalized free love.

"It is worthy of notice that those who seek to break down and destroy the life of the Church seek also to destroy the institutions of marriage and the family," he said.

"We must not think in hard and unsympathetic spirit of the human sufferings connected with this question, but on the other hand, we must not allow our feelings for this suffering to make us unmindful of the supreme moral principles involved.

"Let me say at once that separation of man and wife is not forbidden by the Church. The Church in some cases even advises this. It is divorce and remarriage which the Church opposes and which is bringing such disastrous consequences upon us.

"The case with which divorce is secured by the rich is increased by the facilities now offered in Paris and in other places. And no matter how scandalous the circumstances of the divorce, some ministers of religion, it seems, can be found willing to perform the ceremony of remarriage.

"The teaching that marriage should last only while love lasts means in reality that marriage should not exist at all. It means, in plain words, the abolition of marriage and the substitution of the system of free love. If marriage may be ended by any passing quarrel; if the man and woman are united by nothing more fundamental than mutual consent and agreement to continue together while things go happily, the principle of monogamy is abandoned.

"It is time for all the Churches to act together in this matter. At present the influence of religion against divorce is weakened immeasurably by the varying standards of different Churches, and even of different ministers of the same Church. Those whom one Church refuses to marry go immediately to another and are married without question. In a matter of such vital importance to society, this ought not so to be. In these days when so many are working and praying for Christian unity, it should certainly be possible for us to co-operate in upholding the sacredness of marriage. All religious organizations—Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish—might well agree upon common action for the preservation of the home."

Marriage Laws Differ.

It is equally true that the laws as to marriage differ in the various States. There is prohibition of marriage of certain blood relations in some States which does not exist in others; in some States white and colored people may intermarry; there are differences as to the marriage of minors and as to the residence of parties.

"Runaway" couples are licensed and marriage solemnized by connivance of officials and ministers. School children of this city have been known to go to Kentucky towns where they have sworn that they were residents and were of age; have been believed by the accommodating officials, and started on their brief journey to the divorce court.

Uniform Laws Needed.

Uniform laws of marriage and divorce are imperative.

The States acting individually would never pass uniform laws. South Carolina, with no divorce, could not be expected to agree with Ohio, where ten grounds of divorce are recognized. The only hope of uniformity and regulation is in an amendment of the United States Constitution empowering Congress to pass uniform laws on these subjects. Congress now has power to pass uniform laws upon naturalization, bankruptcy, patents, copyright, and why not upon these more important subjects?

But what should the regulations be?

As to Marriage.

1. One of the parties must be an actual permanent resident where marriage is to be performed.

2. Marriage shall not be solemnized until fifteen days shall have elapsed after license is issued and published.

3. No license shall be issued to minors under sixteen years of age; and to those above sixteen only by consent of parents or proper guardian.

4. No license shall be issued except upon certificate of a physician of the freedom from communicable disease and insanity.

5. No license to divorced persons until at least one year after divorce.

6. Marriage between white and colored people prohibited.

As to Divorce.

1. Plaintiff must be an actual bona fide permanent resident (and not a colorable resident) for one year.

2. Actual notice must be given to party sued, or if that is impossible, notice by publication may be given and an attorney appointed to resist the divorce.

3. No hearing for three months after suit filed.

4. Prohibition to marry for one year after divorce.

5. Grounds for divorce to be simplified, but no divorce for insanity acquired after marriage.

6. Suits may be filed in the State courts and severe penalties provided for breach of the regulations.

Alarming Increase of Divorces.

In 1870 there were twenty-eight divorces to the 100,000 population. In 1910 there were 112 to each 100,000.

During the ten years ending December 31, 1876, there were 122,121 divorces. During the ten years ending December 31, 1916, there were 975,728. During the past fifty years, 4,500,138 people have been separated by divorce, with hundreds of thousands of children as the innocent victims.

At the present time, divorces are frequently granted by courts which have no proper jurisdiction in the matter.

Child Marriages in United States.

Capper's Weekly gives the following facts in support of the bill recently introduced by Senator Capper to secure uniformity in marriage and divorce customs throughout the United States:

Thirteen thousand girls, fifteen, legally married; 50,000 girls, sixteen, legally married; 1,000 boys, fifteen, legally married; 3,000 boys, sixteen, legally married. No minority age limit for marriage in seventeen States. Legal marriage age for girls, twelve; for boys, fifteen, in nine States. No prohibition of marriage of feeble-minded in nineteen States.

To Curb Divorce Menace.

Synopsis of an address by Judge Thomas H. Darby before the Protestant ministers of Cincinnati, January 8, 1923:

That divorce is an evil which threatens our social life and is a menace to our nation, in that it tends to destroy homes and family life, is hardly open to question, and seems to be generally accepted by those who have observed and studied the subject.

Extreme youth of many married couples, ignorance of duties, disregard of responsibilities, presence of disease, the lightness with which the marital state is assumed, the ease with which marriage licenses may be had for the asking, are among the many causes of divorce suits brought in our courts.

There is justification for many divorces which are obtained, and probably good grounds for divorce where action is brought.

Grounds for Divorce Vary Greatly.

Among the grounds of divorce recognized in Ohio, and in different forms and phases in other States are "gross neglect of duty" and "extreme cruelty." As to what constitutes such gross neglect of duty or extreme cruelty no rules are laid down, but the matter is entirely within the discretion of the particular judge presiding at the time. His views may be entirely different from those of another judge presiding in another county or State. So that on the same facts a divorce might be granted in one jurisdiction in one case and denied in another.

In South Carolina no absolute divorce is recognized; New York gives absolute divorce only for unfaithfulness; while in Ohio ten grounds for divorce are specified.

Home life, family life, welfare of married people and their offspring, are not mattters which should be regulated by territorial boundaries, but are national in their scope. Neither the right to divorce nor the effect of divorce should be determined by the residence of a party in South Carolina, New York, or Ohio.

In some States the injured party alone is released from marriage by an absolute divorce; in others, both parties are released. The laws of the States differ as to the time of residence necessary to sue for divorce. In some States the decree of divorce operates at once, while in others its operation is deferred. Appeals from divorce decrees are allowed in some States, but not in all.

IN WHAT SPHERES SHOULD THE CHURCH BE THE LEADER?

We are living in a great day, but even in a great day we are all liable to make mistakes, for we are all human. It is, therefore, fitting that we examine closely as possible some of our tendencies—some of the tendencies of this age, in Church as well as State.

The cry of our day is for leadership. If it may be wisely directed, the cry is a wise one. If ever the wisdom of a great leader was needed, it is in this day of great movements, when the full resources of the Church seem so greatly demanded to meet the exigencies of the outstanding needs of humanity. It really seems that every one is burdened with his or her part of the call to do and to dare for the sake of the kingdom of Christ.

But in the midst of the cry for leadership, and especially the call for the Church of Christ to take the lead, are we not in danger of too greatly enlarging the sphere of the Church and putting it to too great tasks, and with all too varied? It is a common thing today to throw the responsibility of leadership in almost every enterprise upon the Church. But is this wise? Is it in keeping with the ideals of the Great Commander of the Church? Let us keep in mind that Jesus Christ is building the Church, and that He is the Commander of its energies and its resources. It, therefore, seems that we cannot afford to put the Church to tasks which the Commander of the Church has never assigned to it. Who else would have authority to assign the Church to new tasks or tasks other than those given her by her Lord and Master?

The man who undertakes to do one thing, and do it well, is the man who is likely to succeed. Abraham Lincoln made the greatest success of his life when he dedicated his all to the saving of the Union. Woodrow Wilson made the greatest success of his life when he dedicated his life to the work of saving the world to democracy. We name these two outstanding men for a reason. They were both great men and capable of doing a great deal of hard work; but suppose they, or either of them, had undertaken in the days of their highest usefulness to look after a hundred other great undertakings in the time they were giving to the one great task in hand, then what would have become of the Union and what would have become of democracy? There can be but one answer—their great wisdom and untiring labors might have been very helpful to the other enterprises, but the Union would most likely have been lost and democracy would have been an emp y memory.

If we enlist the Church in the leadership of every great work which may be in this day, looking for some strong hand to bolster it up, what will become of her great mission to the world? If the Church is to take care of good roads, of proper housing of the people, of the public schools, of amusements, of sanitation, and every philanthropic work, what is to become of the salvation of the world? The Church is big-hearted and capable of handling things in a masterly way, but if her energies and her talents and her means are to be used in the many humanitarian efforts of this day, pray tell us who is to look after the saving of the lost?

If the Church may be left with her God-given task of bringing the world back to God through Christ, great things will be done by her in that work for the betterment of the world, but what if she spent her strength on a thousand philanthropic and humanitarian efforts and let the world go to wreck spiritually? Humanitarian efforts may be all right in their place and in proper hands, but they will never win this world to Christ. That is the great task of the Church, the work which her Lord gave her to do. Under the blessings of God, she can do that work, but if she is to assume the leadership of all philanthropic and humanitarian effort, then she will dissipate her saving power and so hinder the great work of bringing the lost to Christ for salvation. Indeed, it will be a mistake to divert her leadership from her one legitimate work and then dissipate it to a hundred other good causes. Jesus is building His Church, but not for the leadership of mere enterprises for the betterment of the world. If the Church is to do her best for the betterment of humanity, then by all means let her give her time and talent and means and labor to the one greatest undertaking the world has ever known—that of winning the world to Christ. It is in this particular sphere that the Church can do her best even for the humanitarian purposes of the day in which we live. Her best leadership in these enterprises will appear when she has given her all to her one divinely given mission of saving the world through Christ. We plead for the liberation of the Church from these many good but hindering enterprises as the surest way to gain her best help for the good works from which she may be thus liberated. They are good enterprises, but in no sense are they worthy to usurp the power of the Church for themselves, and the more surely is this true when we consider that her one great mission, well served and accomplished, will be the best thing she can ever do for them.

The influence of the Gospel upon the hearts and minds of the people is the best preparation that can be given them for the performance of these philanthropic and humanitarian duties. Then why not let the Church do such work? For the very good reason that the Church cannot take the leadership in her stupendous mission to the world and then also take the leadership in all these affairs of the world. Let the Church do her part well, and that will pave the way for great things to be done by the people under the influence of the Church. We insist that the Church be allowed to give herself to her legitimate work, for that will do more in the way of world betterment than all she could do, were she to divert her strength, energies, talents and means from the salvation of the world and place them directly at the call of philanthropy.

The Presbyterian Standard sees the danger, and is putting in a plea for a better way. The editor of that paper writes of—

The Church's Leadership.

In some sections the demand is urgent and persistent that the Church take the lead in everything that looks to the betterment of the world. In the newspaper that comes to our desk this morning are the glaring headlines: "Church to Lead in Fight on War." From the lips of distinguished preachers we have heard it said that the Church should place itself in the lead of all moral reforms. One easily gets the impression that those who thus talk think the Church belongs to us and that we can use it for any purpose that we see fit. If it can be used as an agency to stop war, use it for that. If it can be used to settle the labor disputes, use it for that. If it can be utilized to promote reforms of any kind, use it for such purposes. Let us use the Church freely, and do all the good with it that we can.

Whose Church is it that we propose to use so freely? Is it our Church? Not so have we been taught. It is recorded in our official standards that it is the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. If this be true, then had He not better be consulted as to how it is to be used? Has He expressed any will on the subject? Has He given us any clear intimation as to what He wishes His Church to do? Can any one cite chapter and verse where He authorized His Church to head social reforms? Did He head any reform movements? Did He settle any labor disputes? Did He organize a campaign avowedly to put a stop to war? Had we not better consult Him as to what we shall do with His Church?

Can you really promote moral reform by using the Church as an agency? Of course. Then, why not do it? We may raise the same questions about Christ. No doubt He could have made a first-class king. He could have framed a wonderful code of laws for Palestine, and cleaned it up, and made a model little kingdom of it. If the Romans objected, He could have taught them in short order to pack up their duds and go home. Why did He not do it? Presumably because He did not wish to. It is altogether possible, then, that He does not wish His Church to take the lead in all sorts of social and industrial and political reforms. You can peel potatoes with a razor, but that does not prove that it was made to peel potatoes with. Peeling potatoes with it is very likely to render it less fit for doing the thing it was made to do.

It is a great pity that we have to preach the same sermon over so frequently. Especially is it a pity that we have to preach it to those who ought to be able to preach it themselves. How any one can study the New Testament with the care that every preacher should give to its study, and not see that Christ restricted His Church to purely spiritual ends, to be pursued by strictly spiritual methods, we cannot understand. The apostles so understood Him. Paul leaves us in no doubt. "Though we walk in the flesh, we do not war according to the flesh, for the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh, but mighty before God to the casting down of strongholds." Now, all these reforms which the Church is asked to lead are dependent for success on carnal weapons. They can be brought about only by means of civil legislation. They can be maintained only by the use of physical force. When the Church is engaged in reform movements, it is simply lending its aid to the State. That was what the Church avowedly did, and did on a large scale, during the World War—it lent its aid to the government to help the government kill Germans and win the war. The Church is disposed to glory in this performance. We have just noticed a call for all the Churches to observe an annual memorial day to keep alive the memory of how the Church helped to break the Hindenberg line and start the enemy on the retreat. Now the Church is asked to take the lead in putting a stop to war. But how? By preaching the Gospel of Christ and expelling the demon of war from the hearts of men? No, but by urging the civil governments to band themselves together and stop it by force, if necessary.

We Southern Presbyterians ought to know our lesson. We were put out of the Church of our fathers by those who taught that the Church should lend its aid to the State, especially in time of war. Instead of inquiring of Jesus Christ what He would have His Church do, they sent a telegram to President Lincoln to know if it would strengthen the hands of the administration for the General Assembly to give an expression of its loyal support. When he answered that such an expression would be a great help, the assembly proceeded to pledge its support to our noble Constitution and to the Federal government. It was equivalent to expelling its Southern members. Those who now hold that it is the duty of the Church to lend its aid to the State in the conduct of civil affairs, would do the same thing today in the same circumstances. This is the reason why many of us are decidedly apprehensive of the Federal Council of Churches. The leaders in this council hold this utterly false theory of the Church's mission, and they spend most of their time in devising ways to help our government manage its affairs.

ELON LETTER.

The corner-stone of the Leonard Hume Whitley Memorial Building was duly laid on the afternoon of May 23d, under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of North Carolina. Rev. J. W. Patton was deputy grand master in charge of the impressive ceremony.

Preceding the laying of the corner-stone, Bro. J. M. Darden met with the building committee, the architect, and general contractor and went over the plans and specifications of the building he is erecting to the memory of his father-in-law, Deacon L. H. Whitley. Brother Darden approved the plans, and the work will proceed to speedy completion. It is planned now to dedicate the Whitley Memorial on the opening day of the fall session, September 5th. When completed, it will be one of the most attractive auditoriums on a college campus in North Carolina.

Elon Lodge, No. 549, A. F. & A. M., acting in conjunction with the Grand Lodge of North Carolina, laid the corner-stone at 4 P. M., according to the ancient ritual of the Masonic order. Deposited in the stone were the following items:

Holy Bible.

Masonic apron and gloves of Leonard H. Whitley. On the apron was the following: "Presented by Black Water Lodge, No. 134, A. F. & A. M., to Brother Leonard H. Whitley at his initiation. Initiated October 20, 1883; passed, November 17, 1883; raised, December 17, 1883. S. B. Edwards, secretary; George W. Jordan, W. M."

Brief sketch of the facts of Leonard H. Whitley's life written by his son, George F. Whitley, Elon, '02.

Following the laying of the stone, the writer presented the donor to the concourse of assembled friends. He received an ovation. Mr. George F. Whitley, Elon '02, son of L. H. Whitley, was then introduced and read a brief account of his father's life. The services were concluded with an oration befitting the occasion by that prince of orators, Dr. J. O. Atkinson. Dr. Atkinson has promised his remarks for publication. No language but his own can do his eloquence justice.

At 7 P. M., Brother Darden made an address to the students in the girls' gymnasium. He was greeted on entrance by the singing of the stirring anthem of the college, "Here's to Dear Old Elon." Every word that he uttered was listened to with rapt attention. Students will always listed to a man whose life tallies with his words. So, when Brother Jack spoke on sight, vision and action, declaring duty to be the first mark of manhood, he was roundly applauded. He figured that three cents would lay a brick in the new buildings, and appealed to those present to sacrifice this summer to make it possible to complete the buildings. Almost to an individual all arose to their feet.

May 23d was a good day in Elon's history.

GOD'S PART AND OURS.

The earth is the sphere where God is carrying out His "plan of the ages." There was a time when there were no human beings on the earth, and such a time may come again. Whether life will be swept off this planet very suddenly by some great catastrophe or the end come in ten million years are questions we can more easily ask than answer. God has brought this earth into existence, and it seems quite reasonable to suppose that the object for which the earth exists, whatever it is, will be fully accomplished—that the human race has not been created in vain. Yet we cannot help asking the question, "What are we here for"? Is there any wise and worthy purpose behind your life and mine? And what is to come of it? If we could know, or if we could restfully believe that the power which brought us here really means something good, really has a large plan and provisions for us, and really cares for our present and lasting welfare, how greatfully we might accept this strange gift of life, and how comfortably we might occupy our seats on the planet as it "plunges eyeless on forever."

In all our higher moods and activities, what we most deeply want is to feel assured that we are being prepared for a worthy destiny by changes for the better going on within ourselves. Make us sure of that, and all misgivings will give place to peace and joy. But why cannot all mankind feel this happy confidence? Why do we suffer this sense of incompleteness and self-satisfaction? Why are we doomed to feel that we are capable of becoming and doing and enjoying immensely more than we have yet attained? The question carries with it its own answer. We ask it because we aspire, because we are inwardly in motion, because we are made to grow in wisdom and goodness. Here is the patience of the saints, or of those who are in the way of becoming saints. This is Paul's encouragement to his struggling brethren at Philippi, "Being confident that he who hath begun a good work in you will perfect it until the day of Jesus Christ."

But our fears, as well as our hopes, have inward causes. No man ever felt full confidence in God while willfully breaking His laws. No man feels forgiven till he forgives, nor takes hold of divine help till he tries to help himself. How can we feel that all things work for good unless we are working for good? If we have accepted the divine plan of the ages, and find our lives unfolding into conscious spirituality, into wisdom and love as vital and guiding principles, into trustful, happy sonship, it will slowly dawn upon us that this is a sharing of the infinite—a oneness with our Heavenly Father.

Here the Christian Gospel and the gospel of science utter the same message of evolution. All forces and processes conspire to produce character. As Humboldt says, "Property, government, society, books, religion—all are but scaffolding to build a man." The man is the end, and not a part of the perishable means. No matter how good God is, I must be good, too, from loving and rational choice of good, or I shall miss the blessedness of goodness as surely as I shall miss of health by intemperance or of sunlight by blindness.

Whenever we fall into the order and keep step with our own duties and the divine procession of events, we are inwardly tranquilized; we gain self-possession and assurance; we move with the moving forces, and all things work together for good. Even seeming hindrances become helps—as savage warriors believe that the courage and strength of the enemies they kill will pass into their own hearts and muscles. When we accept life as a training-school in patience, fortitude, service, and faithfulness, then it is that we are working out our own salvation as God works in us, according to His good pleasure. Around us and within us are ample provisions for the best life we are capable of at our present stage of development. Could we ask for more?

The state of childish weakness, ignorance, error, and evil in which we find ourselves must be a good state to start from, because it is not a good state to stay in. But there is always an open way out of such a state, and I know of no better evidence that this world is a nursery of souls than this: we are made capable of discerning and choosing the better of two ways of life. To make this choice is to ascend. I take this kind of existence as a perpetual opportunity and invitation to come up higher. It is the Christian interpretation of the life as a Father's loving gift; it is an assurance that His laws and our own nature are parts of one system; that His help is always within reach of us all. This assurance, this faith in the order and in the Orderer, is enough of itself to set our life in harmony, enough to reconcile and restore the most sinful; for in "yielding ourselves unto God" or trusting ourselves to the guidance of light and the support of love our boat swings into the right current. Are not our aspirations his inspirations? The true germ of all spiritual life is found in that life which is hidden in God through Jesus Christ.

Then he will find himself in fellowship with all good men of all times and of all names; for he will belong in their company, he will be one of them. Then he will understand the open secret of Jesus. The great Son of God will be recognized as a brother, for the same spirit of sonship will bear inward witness to their joint heirship. And what is this spirit of sonship if it be not the sharing of divine qualities, this life of willing obedience and trusting love, which ever turns to the light and follows it wherever it may lead, though it be to the cross?

Suffering, in most cases, perhaps in all cases, is a part of the necessary program. With nearly all of us it is the fire that drives out the dross and leaves the gold pure. We must pass through the school of trial, self-denial, struggle, pain; we must learn to go without what we like when it is hurtful to ourselves or others. He who has begun a good work in us can only complete it by taking us through a series of births and deaths. If this world were an easier one for us; if we could more frequently get the best things without cost, or if we could nearly always have our own way—would it be so well for us after all?

I am sure that God will do His part, and no power in the universe can put any fatal obstacle in my path to perfection if I do not. Therefore, I will never charge my faults or my sins upon any one but myself; but I will put all my sins behind my back, simply by turning my face and my feet toward the upward way. This is repentance as set forth in the Scriptures.

Whatever may be said about the fall of man, and its effects upon the moral and physical world, I believe the universe is made on a plan which favors the growth of plants and planets and suns, and a system of worlds. The power which is busy and constant in all these processes among the atoms is just as dependable and as near at hand for whatever processes are needed to guide and enlighten our minds or to inspire and cheer and purify our hearts. The critical and delicate point is to secure the harmony and co-operation of man's thought, love, and will with God's through Jesus Christ. Can a man explain his life without recognizing a divine purpose in it and behind it? If he can, all this talk of faith and hope and love will be thrown away; for to him it will not mean anything at all. But if a man can rationally and honestly look up and say, "The power that made me cannot have made me in vain; I will accept my life as a great opportunity; I will take all my experiences as a part of my education; I will try to fit myself to every situation I am called to fill; I will keep step toward the light; I will do what I can to make this world and this day good for everybody"—then that man takes his place with Jesus Christ; and in his heart will grow a feeling: "I am a child in my Father's house; He has given me being; He has redeemed my soul; He has made a place for me; He has prepared for me an inheritance; He will carry on His own work to completion. From Him is my origin, with Him is my destiny. His will shall be my law; His purpose shall be my purpose."

MUNCIE (IND.) LETTER.

The "Quarterly" of the Eastern Indiana Conference met with the Blountsville Christian Church April 24-26. I am advised that they had very interesting and helpful services, with good attendance and hospitable entertainment. Because of funerals in this parish, I was there only one afternoon. Rev. Ernest Treber, the president, presided. We are in the midst of a series of evangelistic services here, with Rev. C. I. Roush, of the U. B. Church, assisting the pastor. Mr. Roush is an excellent preacher and possesses real evangelistic gifts and abilities. He belongs to the old school of belief, stresses the importance of the Holy Spirit's work, and his preaching is awakening interest in the Church. Rev. Arlie E. Cortner, pastor of the Albany Christian Church, was with us one evening and gave us an excellent sermon. Brother Roush is with us only through the week days.

It may be of interest to our friends and the brotherhood to know that attendance in our Sunday School and Church services is steadily increasing, and for several Sundays has been much better than in several years. Just before this writer came to this field it was practically abandoned, a large number of families, and some of the most active and prominent, withdrawing at the same time, and with the thought that it was abandonment and dissolution of the organization. Following that incident, the remaining few were for a time without a pastor, finally securing one who remained a year and left them on one day's notice. Then, following that interruption, eight months passed without a pastor, until the writer reached them two and a half years ago. It has been most difficult and tedious to overcome the psychological effect on the public mind of such misfortunes, but it is being overcome and the Church is again taking her place among the Churches of the city. It was my privilege to attend an afternoon session of the district meeting of the "Boys' and Girls' Congress" recently held at Eden Christian Church. The attendance was good, the enthusiasm pronounced, and I heard two very fine addresses, one by Judge Clarence W. Dearth, of the Circuit Court here, and one by Dr. Wilson P. Minton, of our Mission Board. The Boys' and Girls' Congress is an organization of the young people of the Eastern Indiana Conference, and has been divided into four districts. They have held one annual meeting, last August, and the next will be held at Portland, Ind., some time in June. Miss Marguerite Strong, of our Muncie First Church, is the president and executive of the organization. Our Church here has recently lost four members by death. Two of them were young women just entering the prime of life, and the other two were aged ones, who had passed their fourscore years.

WHY SHOULD OUR YOUNG WOMEN ATTEND A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE?

The above question is one of such vital importance, having such a far-reaching influence upon the three great factors of our civilization, the home, the Church, and the State, that it calls for the most profound consideration of parents, educators, and, indeed, all who have at heart the future welfare of these three great institutions which form the foundation upon which rests the entire structure of human society.

When we remember that our girls enter college at the most impressionable period of their lives, when they are susceptible to influence for weal or woe, it behooves those responsible for them to consider wisely the environment in which they shall be placed. Any neglect or carelessness at this point may have most disastrous consequences, bringing incalculable sorrow into the lives of both parents and children. The college period is a time of final decisions upon some of the weightiest questions of life; a time when the judgment is maturing, and the emotions are reaching out to entwine their tendrils about some strong and sure support. It is a time when the wavering, unstable nature of early growth is crystalizing into the solid form of feelings and opinions of mature life.

How important that this crisis should take place under most favorable conditions for securing right direction! Where, outside of the Christian home, can this favorable environment be more surely found than in the truly Christian college, under the guidance of genuinely Christian teachers? The last is of especial importance, for the personality of the teacher is a greater influence than what he may teach. It has been tersely said that "character is caught, not taught." This being conceded, what wise parent would fail to take into consideration the kind of character-influence that he would wish to have imparted to the plastic mind and heart of the young? He would no more expose his child to moral contagion of unchristian influence than he would expose her body to some foul disease. The mental and moral nature must be at least as carefully guarded from contamination as the physical.

In this we find one answer to our question, viz: the highest good of the individual. But since no one lives to himself alone, but from each there radiates an influence, we may well insist upon Christian education for our daughters for the sake of those who will come within the radius of that influence.

The future home-makers of our nation must be prepared to make the homes in which its future citizens shall be reared centers of all that is pure and ennobling, where the Christian graces may shed the sunshine and warmth in which Christian character may be nurtured, for in such an atmosphere alone can the great qualities of mind and heart reach their highest development.

It is largely the home that determines the character of a people; and out of our Christian homes must come the leadership of Church and State. It is only when our homes train up leaders that will go out into the world in Christian service that we can hope for the Church to fulfill her missions in the world, and to furnish a citizenship that will make us a nation of Christians in truth rather than in name.

Such a consummation may be brought about through educated and consecrated womanhood. Is not this, then, a sufficient reason why our young women should receive their life-training in Christian colleges?—MRS. LUCY H. ROBERTSON, in N. C. Christian Advocate.

THE DANVILLE REVIVAL.

We began this meeting the first Sunday (the 6th) and closed the 15th. It was indeed a glorious meeting. We cannot fully give the results, for God only knows. The congregations were large to the very close. The last service was glorious. The singing was fine, being led by Bro. J. W. Dixon. I may say just here, the junior choir didn't fail to do their part, and did it well. The services were prayer-meetings in various parts of the community in that part of the city at 9:30 each morning; preaching at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. We think there were more than sixty who professed to accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour; between twenty and thirty united with the Church, and there may be others who will do so later.

Rev. Bro. J. Lee Johnson came to our assistance Monday evening and did the preaching until the close of the meeting; and his messages were real Gospel sermons, there being nothing light or trashy in them. They were real soul-food. This is the third time that Brother Johnson has been with this Church in revival meetings and is still in demand. If I were to tell you the purse that the congregation gave him, you would fully believe it. He has won for himself many friends, not only among the members of this Church, but also among the other Churches, and this is not surprising, for he preached the real Gospel. God bless him in his labors of faith and love.

P. T. KLAPP, Pastor.

FROM THE MOUNTAINS.

I take this privilege of thanking each and every one that has helped in any amount by sending money to purchase a Ford car, for some have, to my knowledge, helped out of their very small income; other individuals have helped, and one pastor and Church have responded very liberally, but as a whole the response has been small.

Now, this money is needed, and if all will help just a little, no one will feel it, so I am going to make another proposition, and that is that every Church or Sunday School that has not responded, on either the fourth Sunday in May or the first Sunday in June take some kind of an offering for this purpose, and let each one give as his heart directs him or her. This will bring the needed money. Try it, Bro. Pastor or Sunday School Superintendent, and see the results.

Now, this Ford will not be for myself, but for the work; when I go, it will still be here for the next man. Thanking you in advance, as I feel sure you will do this, I remain,

Yours in the Master's service,

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

SURPRISE FOR REV. AND MRS. WHITTEN.

Following the preaching services at Rose Hill Christian Church Monday night, conducted by Rev. R. A. Whitten, who on last Sunday assumed the duties of the pastorate of the Church, members of his congregation marched unannounced from the Church on Waverly Terrace to the parsonage nearby, where Mr. and Mrs. Whitten and their estimable family were bounteously pounded with valuable and useful gifts, their action coming as a complete surprise.

The revival services were attended Monday night by a large congregation of members and friends, and the services were generally lauded. Mr. Whitten, who is by no means a stranger in Columbus, having lived here before, is impressing his congregations and others who hear him as a most earnest worker in the cause of Christianity. The singing last night, directed by Mr. Kline, was considered as especially good.—Columbus News.

A NIGHT IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

By William T. Ellis.

Because of the black bitterness that is in my heart I am perhaps in no mood to write. The detachment and poise which a journalist should preserve in all conditions have gone from me. The tolerance of a cosmopolite has given way to the indignation of a Christian and an American. All the primitive morals that I have learned and taught throughout my life have risen up militant within me. I have been for ten days saturating myself with Constantinople. Last night I made the "rounds" with the chief of the American naval patrol and his commanding officer; and today I am wishing that the Turks had stipulated at Lausanne that every "Christian" be expelled from this ancient capital of the early Christian empire.

The "Christian" quarter of Constantinople contains the world's worst plague spots, alongside of which the menace of the city's frequent epidemics of smallpox, typhus and cholera and, occasionally, bubonic plague, is negligible. Greek and Armenian panderers and parasites have created a moral condition that is a blight upon civilization. What these "Christian" levantines have done to American, British and other European sailors and soldiers is less merciful than what the Turks did to the peoples they massacred.

For a home paper like the Christian Herald, it is obviously impossible to write in detail of what I have seen and know of a surety. To say that, as one who has studied Shanghai and Port Said and Hongkong and Bombay and Singapore and the ports of the western world, I declare Constantinople to be the most sodden in vice of all of earth's cities, means as little as most generalizations. I could write of the thousands of women who prey upon men and boys, and of the other forms of vice that are not to be named. I could tell of the spread of the drug habit here, and of the menace to America of this city as an export center for the various derivatives of opium. Still the facts would remain nebulous. If the reader could have heard an American woman say the other day, in tones of intense conviction, "This is a rotten city," perhaps he would have got a distinct impression.

My pen fails me as I think of the havoc wrought among American and British boys; for I would not affright the kindred of those who stay clean, and who may be found, when on leave, in the attractive and successful Y. M. C. A., rather than in any of the city's resorts of evil. If there are thousands of brothels and of liquor saloons in Constantinople, there are also militant agencies of homeland Christianity. But it will be a good day for Christendom when the forces of the western powers leave this city.

The news is good, although humiliating, that the Turkish government, as soon as it gets back full control of the city from the European allies, means to put into operation the prohibition law that is in force elsewhere throughout nationalistic Turkey. Except where corrupted by contact with "Christian" customs, good Moslems do not drink any form of intoxicant. Whether they can exterminate the corrupt and corrupting drink traffic from Constantinople, where bribery or "backsheesk" has immemorially superseded all laws, is much to be feared. Every lover of decency and righteousness will wish godspeed to the Turks as they strive to suppress the various forms of professionalized immorality that have made Constantinople a byword for sodden sin.

Frankly admitting that if their new nation were to establish its capital in Constantinople they would be unable to withstand the corrupting influences of the "Christian" powers, the Turkish Nationalists have set up the seat of their government at Angora, far in the interior of Anatolia. Here they hope to be able to escape the intrigues of the western nations, and the demoralizing influences of contact with a debased "Christian" population, such as dominates the Pera and Galata quarters of Constantinople. By the plan agreed upon at Lausanne, no Greeks will be permitted to reside in Anatolia; and practically all of the Armenians have been deported or have fled, or else been massacred. It is a pity that, while getting rid of the peasant and artisan class of Christians, Turkey should have to keep the debauched and debauching "Christian" parasites of the port cities. It may be that, with the capital and embassies removed from Constantinople, the city will lose some of its prestige, and consequently of its power to corrupt the world.

Two or three points stand out clearly for the consideration of all persons who think in large terms. One is that the word "Christian," as employed in the Near East and concerning the Near East, does not at all imply those qualities of character which it is supposed to connote in the nations of the West. "Christian" out here is a political designation. It tells nothing of a man's spirit or personal faith. Most foreigners long resident in these parts seem to prefer the Moslem to the Christian, though by no means admiring the former. The terrible truth is that practically all the professional immorality of the Near East is the trade of "Christians." Degenerate Greeks and Armenians are the leeches of society. They seem without any code of morals whatsoever, either in business or in ethics.

When Americans become aroused over the fate of the "Christians" of the Levant they should, in all fairness, be advised to discriminate; such a blanket designation includes thousands of men and women who richly deserve prison bars or the gallows. That all "Christians" are good and all Moslems are bad is a pernicious idea that has been responsible for unmeasured evil in the world. As a Christian, it is my judgment that Constantine the Great wrought more harm than history can ever record when he made Christianity the imperial religion and a political designation; thus destroying the New Testament significance of the name.

Another point to be pondered is that politics, especially international politics, cannot longer be kept divorced from moral considerations. Moral hygiene is a more important matter than commercial expansion. The contagion of evil that flows from Constantinople to all the earth is a graver concern for statesmen than the oil that flows from the earth around Mosul. Business men from half a dozen countries have sought "concessions" to make a financial "clean-up" in Turkey; who will seek the task of cleaning up this center of social pollution, for the sake of the whole world's welfare? It is a task for an Apostle Paul; yet it certainly should appeal to the League of Nations, which for the present, apparently, must limit its activities to ameliorative activities outside of the realm of high politics.

Frankly, the task is too vast for individual or private reclamation; the cleaning up of Constantinople is an international enterprise. As a concern of this entire interrelated world, this central port should have the best usages of civilization imposed upon it. Such conditions as at present flaunt themselves are an affront to all the standards of life which the experience of centuries has proved right. Good political housekeeping demands a drastic cleaning-up of this city which sits astride the Golden Horn. The burning of Smyrna or Salonica is less of a disaster than the continuance of existing conditions in Constantinople.

While I am writing in these general terms I am thinking of definite incidents. There is before my mind the picture of a girl of sixteen, who has for four years been an inmate of one of the houses I visited last night. She seemed childishly proud of the official certificate which she exhibited to the officer, and of the gaudily decorated room, with its huge paper flowers and tinsel In one window-ledge stood a toy bed, and a flaxen-haired doll, with which she played when left to herself. Instead of a normal childhood, she had for the past four years had this!

Here, as everywhere, commercialized immorality is built upon sacrificed innocence and life. A ceaseless stream of virtue must be poured into this city in order that a greater stream of vice may flow outward. This is the modern Moloch. While my heart is raging at the demoralization of boys that I witnessed—I cannot trust myself to write details that I have seen—I cannot forget that these poor creatures, the Greek and Armenian and Russian girls, have likewise been sacrificed.

It is high time that some voice be lifted in the councils of nations in behalf of fundamental human morality and righteousness. We have watched to weariness as "statesmen" have squabbled over their political "spheres" and commercial "rights." Now, in the name of our common civilization and of our common welfare, let us hear some highly placed man arise, with the flame of Bible truth on his tongue, to champion decency and justice in the world. Why quibble over boundaries, when such festering centers of human corruption as the "Christian" quarters of Constantinople go unrebuked? Volumes have been written about the political control of these straits; who will write, in behalf of the sons and daughters of unvocal homes, that such a moral plague spot as this should be either cleaned up or quarantined? If public morals are to be classed as outside the consideration of statecraft, then civilization must confess itself heedless of the major teachings of history. Nations have perished from rottenness in the bones oftener than from the armed onslaught of foreign foes.

I used to be zealous to see the cross supplant the crescent above the ancient Church of St. Sophia in Constantinople. Now I am more solicitous that the teachings of Christ, and the Decalogue itself shall come into the unspeakably debased life of this city which always has been a center of world influence.

THE FOOLISHNESS OF THE CROSS.

By Rev. A. A. McGeachy, D. D.

Text: "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness."—1 Cor. 1:18.

Amiel once said, "When the cross became the foolishness of the cross it took possession of the masses." Religion can interest a few people if offered as a cult, a philosophy, a system of morals. But it makes an appeal to the masses only when it speaks the language of the heart, addresses itself to the instincts and urges its claim with arguments that mere intellectuals will say are foolish and unreasonable.

Paul uses this word foolishness several times in this chapter. He says that the preaching of the cross is foolish. Again he speaks of the foolishness of preaching. Again Christ crucified is foolishness to the Greeks. And, finally, he speaks of the foolishness of God. What did he mean? Well, Paul was afflicted as we are today, with a lot of high-brows and literary diletantes who were not interested in anything unless it was obscure nor satisfied with the statement of anything unless it was complicated. Their rhetoric was florid, their metaphysics Teutonic, their logic transcendental. I will give you a sample of it. The Gnostics at Colossae repudiated the direct mediatorship of Christ as being too simple. They postulated a chain of mediators running up from man to God, each of diviner type than the one below. Christ, the first link in the chain, was a little more than human. The last link in the chain was a little less than divine. You shook the chain on earth and the vibration ran up through all the links to heaven. You prayed to Christ, He to the one above Himself, and so on and on until your prayer was relayed to the Father. The Gnostics scoffed at this simple gospel as too easy. Anybody could understand it. It was foolishness. Paul took the word out of their mouths and said, I preach the foolishness of the cross.

I want you to examine with me the foolishness of the cross and then the foolishness of those who say it is foolish.

Take such matters as the virgin birth of Christ, which involves His divinity. The inerrancy of the Bible, which involves the reliability of what we depend upon for salvation. And the miracles, especially the miracle of His resurrection, which witnessed the truth of His claims. A constant effort is made to discredit these things as beneath the dignity of modern scholarship, as inconsistent with the discoveries of science. It is the old charge of foolishness.

Now, I don't want to be foolish myself in answering the charge. I am no more of a scientist than some of these men are Christians. The shoemaker should stick to his last, and all of us should be modest. In the strife between orthodoxy and unbelief there is too much ridicule on the one side and dogmatism on the other. I simply do not see that these things are foolish.

It seems to me perfectly reasonable that Christ should have been conceived and born in the way described. It was prophesied, and I believe the prophets. It is a matter of history, and must be believed until disproved. It has been accepted by the great and the good of every generation, including the first.

It will not satisfy me to discredit it by representing it as strange, unnatural, contrary to precedent, miraculous and a contravention of the laws of nature. Religion is nothing to me if not miraculous. And I think it perfectly reasonable that God should break in upon the established order when conditions required it.

But did conditions require it? Yes, we were in a bad fix in consequence of sin. Justice had to be done, for the soul that sinneth, it shall die. Our moral nature had been poisoned and had to be cleansed by blood, for without the shedding of blood there is no remission. We had lost the truth and had to be taught it again. We had become alienated from God and were afraid of Him and had to be reconciled. Now for all this great work, an extraordinary personage was required. One who had no sins of his own and so could bear ours. No mere man, but a God-man.

Again it seems entirely reasonable that God should have written a book, in which should be compiled the fragmentary revelations of His will that had been given through prophets and apostles. And that this book should be accurate and dependable in its main thesis. I won't insist that it must be biologically abreast of the times. But in matters concerning God, duty, character and salvation, it must be exact, and I maintain that it was and is.

Is there anything foolish about such a position as this? Can't a sermon be a perfectly good sermon and yet contain an historical inaccuracy. Last Sunday a child convicted me of misquoting the catechism. And the Sunday before that I made O. Henry die in Asheville, though he died in New York. Yet both sermons were blessed of God in the conversion of souls. Why, then, all this pother and pow-wow about the six days of creation? They were not writing geology. The Bible is right on the deceitfulness of sin, on the wickedness of the unregenerate heart, and on the way of peace and salvation through Christ.

Look now at the foolishness of those that talk about the foolishness of the cross. If a man does not accept the Bible account of creation, that God made all things of nothing, he must explain the creation in some other way, and he can't do it.

If he does not believe in the inspiration of the Bible he must explain how 40 authors writing 66 books over a period of 1,600 years could stick to the same theme and develop the same system. He must show how four ignorant fishermen could draw a perfect and identical picture of Christ presenting the carpenter's son as the ideal of the ages.

If he doesn't believe in the resurrection of Jesus he must explain the 11 appearances of Christ after His resurrection, one of them to above 500 people who were still alive when Paul was circulating his story.

If he does not believe in the actual forgiveness of sins he has a controversy with you and me and millions more who say that their sins have been forgiven. Really, it seems to me that, in view of the difficulty, it is rather foolish to deny these things.

Yet some men do. Out of Germany came the theory that Christ swooned, and did not die on the cross. This, in spite of the broken legs of the thieves, the pierced side of our Lord, the faith and enthusiasm of His disciples, and their final martyrdom for the truth. Men are willing to believe this fiction rather than the simple story.

A gentleman told me that what we call the divinity and humanity of our Lord were His subjective and objective mind and that where He failed to work miracles it was because His subjective mind was not in working order. The Bible account declares He could do no mighty works "because of their unbelief," yet the gentleman believes his own theory rather than the scriptural explanation.

I am constantly amazed at the credulity of unbelief. There is no story too big to swallow, no theory too absurd to adopt, no trouble that men wont take to get around the truth when the truth is unacceptable. Like the leper Naaman, they are not content to wash in the waters of the Jordan, but want the prophet to strike an attitude and call on the name of his God. Like Tom Sawyer, freeing the negro Jim, they are not content to unlock the door and let him walk out, but must follow the books and dig a tunnel and go to all manner of unnecessary trouble, only at the last to release a negro who had already been made free by his mistress' will.

In conclusion, I bring you the old Gospel of your fathers. I have no quarrel with science.

"Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell."

However, there are some things in which we can only make progress as we are taught of God, and in which the men of our generation have no advantage over the men of the first. The heart is the same in all ages, and the problem of sin and its forgiveness. There are no higher types of character now than Abraham and Moses and Joseph. We shall never outgrow the Sermon on the Mount nor grow up to the statue of Christ.

Therefore, I preach you this old Gospel, to the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the wisdom of God and the power of God.—The Presbyterian Standard.

HYMN STUDY.

By Rev. Geo. C. Wilding, D. D.

All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all.

Crown Him, ye martyrs of your God,
Who from His altar call;
Extol the stem of Jesse's rod,
And crown Him Lord of all.

Hail Him, ye heirs of David's line,
Whom David's Lord did call;
The God incarnate, man divine!
And crown Him Lord of all.

Ye seed of Israel's chosen race,
Yet ransomed of the fall,
Hail him, who saves you by His grace
And crown Him Lord of all.

Sinners, whose love can ne'er forget
The wormwood and the gall,
Go, spread your trophies at His feet
And crown Him Lord of all.

Let every tribe and every tongue
That bound creation's call
Now shout the universal song,
The crowned Lord of all.

Many changes have been made in this poem. The above is the original text of this splendid, triumphant old hymn. It was taken from a rare volume entitled "Occasional Verses, Moral and Sacred," published for the instruction and amusement of the candidly serious and religious, London, 1785. There is a copy of this old book in the library of Drew Theological Seminary at Madison, N. J., and one in the library of the British Museum in London. This hymn is called by a prominent writer "The most inspiring and triumphant hymn in the English language." The author is a benefactor to the human race. What a fitting expression it is for any meeting that has in it the victorious note the sweep of triumph!

The author was a man of great humility of character, but was sustained in the midst of many severe trials of life by an all-victorious faith. He was the son of Rev. Vincent Perronet, a devoted English clergyman of the old school, who was the vicar of Shoreham, England, for fifty years. Edward left the Established Church in early life and became a Methodist. He was a bosom friend of Charles Wesley, in whose diary mention of him may be found, beginning about the year 1750.

He was one of the preachers appointed under the patronage of the Countess of Huntingdon, and, adding an ardent zeal to a humble and sympathetic nature, his labors in the ministry were for some time attended with marked success. But Perronet was at heart opposed to the union of Church and State. At best, he published a poem anonymously, entitled "The Mitre," a keen satire on the national establishment. This hostility brought him under the displeasure of his former friend, the Countess of Huntingdon. He severed his connection with her society and became the pastor of a small congregation of dissenters. Here he preached up to the time of his death, which took place in January, 1792.

His death was triumphant, and may be taken as an evidence of the sincerity and piety which inspired this rapturous hymn. His majestic faith seemed to lift his soul above the world and to antedate the coronation day when the cherubic hosts and the redeemed shall—

"Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

His dying testimony was:
"Glory to God in the height of His divinity!
Glory to God in the depths of His humanity!
Glory to God in His all-sufficiency!
Unto His hands I commend my spirit."

Questions and Answers.

Question.—What is the International Purity Association? Where are its headquarters, and who is at the head of the body?—John.

The International Purity Association is an organization which is devoted to race improvement, eugenics, conscious evolution, prenatal influence and the right of every child to be well-born through harmonious mental processes. The predominating purpose of the association is to keep the sex life pure and holy. The national headquarters are at Chicago. Bishop Samuel Fallows is the president of the association, and John Butler Caldwell is the first vice-president and editor of the Welfare Journal, Chicago, Ill. The association has an office in the East, at Tenafly, N. J., with Rev. Albert Godley as vice-president and evangelist. We believe that the organization is doing a great work and deserves encouragement by Christian people everywhere, as well as by all good, decent citizens throughout the country.

Question.—What is this thing the papers are talking about under the guise of heavenly mindedness?—William T.

We presume the reference is to men and women who are endeavoring to live a saintly life, taking Jesus as an example. Paul presents a similar thought in Col. 3:1-3, where he says: "If ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Then he tells us how to do it, by saying: "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth." Then he explains why we should do so, by saying: "For ye are dead, and your life is hid within God."

The Western Christian Advocate tells us of what heavenly-mindedness is when it says: "Heavenly-mindedness, so earnestly enjoined upon all Christians, is not 'otherworldly-mindedness,' as is often assumed. The kingdom of heaven is to be established for every man in this life. Heavenly-mindedness is the result of three things:

"1. An assurance of our acceptance with God.

"2. Daily communion with Him.

"3. The utter subordination of the material to the spiritual, whose vision is ever on the shining headlands of faith."

In other words, heavenly-mindedness is a state of heavenly thought given to the people of God, who are prepared to receive it, while they are yet on the earth.

Question.—Who was John Howard Payne and what gave him his fame? As I understand it, he was a very poor man.—Seeley.

John Howard Payne was an American. It is true that he was a poor man, but that was not necessarily against him. A poor man who does something notable only shows what is in the man. Some one has said that the man who wrote the best thing on home, himself had no home, and that was John Howard Payne, for he had no home. Though an American, he was in England when he wrote "Home, Sweet Home." It is said that "Home, Sweet Home" touches the heart of all English-speaking peoples in all parts of the world. The 8th of May, 1923, was the one hundredth anniversary of the singing of "Home, Sweet Home" in Covent Garden. Leading English musicians have proposed that "Home, Sweet Home" be sung in concert throughout the world on that date. One of our exchanges, referring to the same matter, says: "So, after all and in a manner, it is an English song. It is so much an American song, however, that one cannot escape a feeling of joy that the English suggestion has been taken up and greatly extended by Americans. The New York Times points out that it would be appropriate for American daily newspapers to print the song on May 8th, and from another source comes the suggestion that schools, public and private, throughout the country have the song sung with appropriate exercises. Payne was the child of a Yankee schoolmaster father and a Jewish mother, the family in comfortable circumstances. The "lowly thatched cottage" of the song is poetic license. His father was determined that John Howard should be a banker, and sent him away to be trained for that work. Before that training was completed, two disasters befell the family. The mother died, and the father failed financially. As a result, young Payne was permitted to go on the stage to make his living.

Question.—What about the increase in ministers of the Gospel? Do you think the number of active preachers is gaining or are we losing?—Truth.

It is not possible at this time to be very sure as to the answer to your inquiry. The best I can do is to give you a few stray facts, which are floating around in the religious papers. The Presbyterian Standard recently declared that if all the young men now studying for the ministry in Presbyterian seminaries were to graduate this spring, there would not be enough to meet the demand in the Presbyterian Church. We think there are 1,000 Baptist Churches now without pastors. There are many Methodist Churches without pastors, and we presume the same is true in other Churches. Last year the total increase for all Protestant Churches was 4,238. To say the least, that is a very small number for all Protestant Churches. We have no means now at our command of knowing what the losses in the ministry was. It may be as much or it may be less, but the losses of the last year would make a big hole in the total number of additions for the same time. The need is great Question.—Do you think that the membership of the Protestant Churches in the United States is gaining or not?—Minister.

In answer to your inquiry, we are glad to report that, according to the best Church statistics available, during the last year there was quite a gain in Church membership. The Presbyterian of the South reviews the report of Dr. H. K. Carroll, who seems to be the best authority in Church statistics in this country, and that paper says:

"Growth of Churches is always interesting. Dr. H. K. Carroll, who is probably the best authority on Church statistics in this country, says that during the past year the Protestant Churches in the United States increased 828,000 in membership, while the Roman Catholic Church gained 89,000. The small increase in the Catholic Church is due to the fact that its increase has always largely come from immigrants coming from Catholic countries, and recently this immigration has been greatly reduced by government regulations. This Church does not gain much from outside of its own families, while Protestant Churches secure a large part of their gains from outside. Dr. Carroll states that the Roman Catholic Church claims 18,000,000 members in this country, but as that Church counts in its membership all who have been baptized by the Church, no matter what their age or whether or not they have identified themselves with the Church by confirmation, he says that the number ought not to be more than 15,500,000. He assumes that those who are too young and those who are too indifferent to assume the obligations of Church membership amount to fifteen per cent of the claimed membership. Judging from what we know of conditions in Protestant Churches, and what we know of people in general, we are inclined to think that his estimate is entirely too low of those who, under similar conditions, would not be recognized as members in Protestant Churches. We are inclined to believe that thirty or forty per cent would be a more correct estimate. He gives the Protestant Church membership as 27,000,000."

DR. HENRY VAN DYKE'S LATEST BOOK.

Reviewed by William Thornton Whitsett.

Henry Van Dyke's latest book was completed at Seal Harbor, Maine, the latter part of August, and is just from the presses of Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. He has given to it the pleasant title of "Companionable Books," and it would be difficult to find for two dollars more genuine help and delight than can be had in these four hundred pages. It is written in the spirit of all of Dr. Van Dyke's more than two dozen books; at once helpful, inspiring, suggestive, and scholarly. It is dedicated to Maxwell Struthers Burt, "author and ranchman, once my scholar, always my friend."

To one needing guidance along the line of reading; to one wanting inspiration concerning authors of permanent fame; to all lovers of the genuine in the world of letters—"Companionable Books" will have special appeal.

"Many books are dry and dusty, there is no juice in them, and many are soon exhausted, you would no more go back to them than to a squeezed orange; but some have an unfailing sap, both from the tree of knowledge and from the tree of life.

"Here I have written about a few of these books which have borne me good company, in one way or another; and about their authors, who have put the best of themselves into their work. Such criticism as the book contains is, therefore, mainly in the form of appreciation with reasons for it. The other kind of criticism you will find chiefly in the omissions.

"So I send forth my new ship, hoping only that it may carry something desirable from each of the ports where it has taken on cargo, and that it may not be sunk by the enemy before it touches at a few friendly harbors."

There are eight excellent illustrations of Keats, Dickens, Thackeray, Wordsworth, Browning, Johnson, Emerson, and Stevenson. In the beautiful cover design by Margaret Armstrong, the various books and authors here treated are represented by symbolic flowers—Bible, grapes; psalms, wheat; George Eliot, ivy; Keats, bleeding heart; Wordsworth, daffodil, etc.

The book devotes sixty pages to a remarkably fine essay on the beauty and influence of the Bible with special treatment of the psalms. The author is here at his best, and the dignity and value of the Bible from a purely literary standpoint was never better shown. The Book of Books is held up for its real value in the field of letters, and its great store-house of treasures in style, in vocabulary, in range of thought, is well set forth. As a successful preacher and experienced teacher in the class-rooms of the university, Dr. Van Dyke speaks that he does know, and testifies to what he has seen and learned of the literary worth of the Bible. This part alone of his book would make it a valuable possession.

Dr. Van Dyke takes his readers by the hand and leads them on a loving pilgrimage to the enchantment of Dickens, the real men and the real women of Thackeray and of George Eliot, and together they listen again to the poet of immortal youth, John Keats. He classes Emerson as a Puritan plus the addition of poetry in his make-up, and with good old Izaak Walton as a quaint comrade he wanders by quiet streams in his review to "The Complete Angler or the Contemplative Man's Recreation," which since its publication in 1653 has been the delight of those who woo the joys of the sunny streams.

This is a pure, clean book; it will take rank with the best work of Dr. Van Dyke, and will be helpful to many who need kindly direction in the wilderness of the world of books. It is a pleasure to review such a work, free as it is from much that runs through the pages of so many of the new books. No sex problems, no jazz doings, no family scandles to air; but, instead, guidance and tribute to some of the undying treasures of our English and American literature. It is the fine, high ideas and ideals of a poet, a scholar, a sensitive gentleman concerning some of the finest things yet produced by other noble minds of the years now dead. We cannot have too many of such works as this, and we cannot grow too enthusiastic in their praise. It is work such as this that will live, will grow, and will add to the sum total of human happiness. Add to your list of companions, then, this "Companionable Books," and life will be the richer for so doing.

WHO IS THE MAN SO GRAPHICALLY DESCRIBED?

We have received the following description of one of our Christian ministers. It was written by a friend of ours, whose name we will not give—for the present, at least. We know the man who wrote the description, but we have no idea what minister is thus described. If any of our readers think they know the minister thus described, we shall be glad to have them send his name (the name of the man they believe it is) to the editor of this paper, and he will submit it to the writer for approval or disapproval.—Editor.

Can You Name the Minister?

From his youth, felt "woe is unto me if I preach not the Gospel." Labored on farm and in town. Attended school and college. Known among his fellow-students as a clear, logical and deep thinker. After his ordination his qualities as a literary and classical scholar singled him out in the Christian denomination. His articles are always read. He is an orator in demand in all Conferences. Always deeply convinced of the truth of the message he brings. His great experience, quick mind, observant eyes, have given him a wonderful insight into the world whose sins he attacks without truce or mercy. While a "lamb in the Christian home," he is a "lion in the pulpit," and gives out his message with a fearlessness that brings back to mind the days of O'Kelly, Haggard and Abner Jones. His profound learning is not shrouded in the technical language of the schools—intelligible to even the unlettered. He has a directness of appeal that is pleasing and captivating. He speaks "to" his audience, and not "at" them, and he leaves one under the impression that one's individual self has been addressed, and not a whole congregation. His voice is clear, without being harsh; soft, without being effeminate, and is smoothe and musical, while his jestures are forceful and virile. You may watch him closely in all of his sermons, addresses and newspaper articles, and you will see that he draws upon all sources for illustrations; while still within the reach of his audience, takes comparisons and similes from mythology, science, ancient and modern literature, history and the Scriptures, always with dignity and reverence, so that you keep feeling greater faith in God and His Word—"a light to our feet and a lamp to our pathway."

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF YOUR MOTHER?

It seems quite out of the thought to ask such a question. How could any man or woman think otherwise than most highly of his or her mother? Do not commend to me any person who cares nothing for mother. If a boy or a girl, a man or a woman, has gone so far away from virtue and honor as to care nothing for mother, then we think it is time for such a one to hide his face in shame. We would be ashamed of any man or any woman who did not love mother in a real sure way. Let us never forsake mother; let us never in any way give her pain. Rather, let us do our best to make her comfortable and happy through all her days, for when mother is gone, you cannot have another, nor can you do anything to make up for the wrongs you have done her. We thing of one mother who, though she had boys and girls amply able to minister to her every want, was left to herself in her old age. How awful is the thought! But we will let another tell the sad story of her old age:

"The fire had gone down, it was a cold night and the wind howled dismally outside. The lamps grew dim and flared, casting weird shadows on the wall. By and by, I heard a smothered sob from the corner, then another. I looked. She had risen from her seat, and oh, the look of agony on the poor, pinched face!

"I can't believe it! I can't believe it! My babies! How often have I held them in my arms and kissed them, and how often have they said to me, 'I love you, mamma,'—and now, oh God! they've turned against me. Where am I going—to the poorhouse! No! no! I cannot! I will not! Oh, the disgrace"!

And sinking on her knees she sobbed out in prayer, "Oh God, spare me this and take me home; oh God, spare me this disgrace, spare me"!

At last, she became quuieter and ceased to moan. Then after twelve o'clock some one entered the station with the brightest light I had ever seen. It seemed to fill the place full of glory. I could see the person was a man. He walked to the kneeling figure and touched her on the shoulder. She started up and turned her face wildly around. He said:

"'Tis train-time, ma'am; come"!

She whispered, "I am ready."

"Then give me your pass, ma'am."

She handed him a worn old book which he took and from it read aloud, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

"That's the pass over our road, ma'am. Are you ready? Come."

Oh, don't treat mother like that after she has toiled and slaved all through life for you. Give her a happy ending to her days—free to do as she wishes. Don't neglect mother.

If you have a gray-haired mother in an old home far away,
Sit down and write her a letter; don't put it off from day to day.
If you have a tender message or a loving word to say,
Don't wait until you forget it, but whisper it today.
Don't wait until her weary feet reach heaven's pearly gate,
But show her that you think of her before it is too late.

Be good to mother. Even He that died upon the cross for us, in the last hour, in the unutterable agony of death was mindful of His mother as if to teach us that this holy love should be our last worldly thought, the last point of earth from which the soul should take its flight to Heaven. Follow the example of Christ. Accept the love which mother is eager to pour out for you, for the mother's love is that which points the nation to Heaven, that by which the nations of earth are kept from savagery and led to the Christ. God grant that the United States will be given good mothers—mothers fit to rear children to fear God, to keep His commandments and to lead our nation victorious in this and all coming time.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Subject: "Nehemiah, the Bold Builder."—Neh. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8:9-12, 12:31-13:31.

Golden Text: "Be not ye afraid of them: remember the Lord."—Neh. 4:14.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 46:1-7.

"The soldier, when he lets his whole self go
Lost in the common good, the common wrong,
Strikes truest even for his own self."

The men, who have been remembered longest, have been unselfish leaders. Men with patriotic spirits and God-fearing hearts, long to serve their fellow-men by leading them to higher and better things. And through such service they find the path to honor. So judged, Nehemiah merits a prominent place among the heroes of the world. Others who aspired to fame are forgotten. He sought the welfare of Jerusalem and her people, and still speaks to the world through his life and through his written words. Millions are today studying the record of that life. A great host of Sunday School students are seeking for the secrets of such a career, and the dominant characteristics of his life, and the spirit which impelled him to action are best revealed in his own words. Here we find his attitude toward man and nation and God.

*"I sat down and wept, * * * and prayed." "The God of heaven He will prosper us." O God, strengthen my hands."*

Nehemiah was a man of prayer. His first thought was of God, with a trust in Him that was sincere and child-like. The book of Nehemiah begins with a prayer of confession and supplication. Its closing words are "Remember me, O my God, for good."

In a foreign land, far from kinfolk, living in a palace of royal wealth and luxury, holding a position of honor, Nehemiah was sad. He had heard of his people's desolation. He had not forgotten Jehovah of His fathers. In a faithful Jewish home, or synagogue, the precepts of God had been so firmly fixed in his mind that they guided his whole life and drew him close to God. They were a part of his very being. To develop Nehemiah-like lives, close to the Heavenly Father and servants of the Lord Jesus, is the purpose of our Christian teaching.

"O how you'll love Him when you know Him:
Know the Christ who died to set you free"!

The man of prayer is a man of power. Dr. Henry Foster, founder of Clifton Springs Sanitarium, was a man of power with God and great insight into His ways in guiding in the affairs of life. What was the secret? In answer to this question, an older physician on the staff led the inquirer to Dr. Foster's office, and showed two ragged holes in the carpet, worn there by the knees of God's saint in his life of prayer. "That, sir, was the secret of Henry Foster's wisdom and power in the things of God and men," he said.

The real secret of Nehemiah's success was that he always had time and a desire to pray.

Does Your Life Shine as a Life of Prayer?

"And I arose in the night."

With the permission of King Artaxerxes, under his protection and with the promise of aid from his resources, Nehemiah returned to Jerusalem. Here he studied the situation. He spent a night in investigating conditions, preparing for the campaign of building. He called together the rulers and talked the matter over with them. The work was thoroughly understood and planned, and so speedily accomplished, for together they said: "Let us rise up build." They worked together according to a definite plan. God, who knows all things, has a plan for every life. The vital question is, "Are you interested enough to search for God's plan for your life"?

What Plan Has Been Worked Out in Prayer and Conference for Building Your Sunday School?

"So built we the wall."

Nehemiah was a leader. He worked with his people. He said, "We," not "I"—willing to give them a share in the task. He inspired others. He entrusted responsibility to others (7:2). In the hour of fear, he encouraged. In the hour of discouragement, he cheered. With such a leader, the enemies were powerless, although they tried ridicule, and threats and trickery to stop the work. Together they conquered opposition, and together they accomplished the task. The "people had a mind to work" because they were inspired and cheered by a great leader, who used his powers of leadership wisely and for their good.

Is Your Influence as a Leader of Men, or as an Earnest Follower, Bringing Folks Nearer to God?

"I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down."

Nehemiah had a sense of the greatness of his task. Such an appreciation of the worth-while character of an endeavor strenghens the soul, and dispels discouragement. Any task for God is great. There is no such thing as a small work to a successful worker. So let us, whenever we are tempted to give up, even for a short time and for whatever seemingly reasonable excuse, our God-appointed task, ask ourselves Nehemiah's question: "Why should the work cease, whilst I leave it"?

Nehemiah, a man of prayer, led his people nearer to God. He was not content to rebuild the wall alone. He came to them as a reformer to re-establish the sanctity of the Sabbath, to oppose intermarriage with heathen people, to teach the people how to worship God intelligently in the Temple. With Ezra, Nehemiah was a great teacher, as well as a leader and builder with a vision which called him to a great work. He left an indelible imprint upon the life of the Jewish nation, and lived a life which still teaches great lessons to men and women of modern times.

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime;
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

June 10, 1923.

Subject: "Lessons from Everyday Objects."—Prov. 24:20, 26:20, 27:17; Jer. 23:29.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Lives will be judged by everyday deeds of good or evil. The wrongdoer has nothing to look forward to beyond a possible momentary pleasure, which will blacken his whole life.—Prov. 24:20.

Before repeating a story, ask yourself three questions:

1. Is it true?
2. Is it kind?
3. Is it needful that it be told?

Conversation thus tested would avoid many a quarrel and sweeten the lives of both speaker and hearer.—Prov. 26:20.

A true friend is one of life's greatest blessings. Such a one makes life better and more happy.—Prov. 27:17.

God's word has great power to transform individual lives and the destiny of nations. Before it, sin must disappear.—Jer. 23:29.

"Recollection that trifles make perfections, and perfection is no trifle."—Michael Angelo.

Little snowflakes, steadily falling on the track, grow into a heap that brings a great engine to a standstill. So little habits grow into big ones, and wreck a life. Every-day life counts in building a character.

"He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much."—Luke 16:10.

"Nothing is too small to be thoroughly done. A small thing is a pin, for example; yet it takes seven men to make a perfect pin."—Edwarn Bok.

"No one has ever accomplished great things who hasn't first accomplished a great many little things."—George H. Knox.

The every-day things make life possible; the many little things for which we forget to render thanks—fresh air, pure water, nutritious food, good sleep.

Nature furnishes many lessons to him who studies her lore. Rich is that life which always can appreciate her beauty and wonderful effects.

Illustration for the Meeting.

George was an architect. He had just designed a large and beautiful dwelling, and he laid the sketch before his brother, who admired the stately front and delicate, refined decorations. "It is fit for a prince to live in," he said. "What a delight it must be to form a conception of such a beautiful building and then make it real"!

George's assistants were busy with drawing up the specifications for the house, to be given to the builders. They appealed to him at every point.

"Of what size shall this waste-pipe be, sir"? queried one.

"What will be the dimensions of the pantry sink, sir"? said another.

"Of what wood shall the dado in the dining-room be"? asked a third.

An hour later, when the brothers were alone, John said: "Do you look after all the petty details of the building, George? I supposed the grand plan was yours, but that you personally entrusted the minor details to subordinates."

"And yet the strength and the beauty of the whole building depend on my attention to the details," George said. "Until the house is finished, I oversee everything. That which seems to us to be one of the most petty may be one of the most important parts of the building." He was silent for a moment, and then said earnestly:

"Do you not think, John, that the great Architect who plans a human life knows and cares for each incident in it, however small? Why not carry your little needs as well as your great troubles to Him? His wisdom planned the foot of a fly as well as the courses of the sun. I cannot believe that He will fail you, no matter how petty the anxiety for which you ask His help."—The Youth's Companion.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "Sweet Hour of Prayer," "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," "Higher Ground," "Wonderful Words of Life," "I Walk With the King," "Does Jesus Care"?

A SUGGESTION TO THE LEADER: Attentions to little things may mean a great meeting. Meet with the prayer meeting committee for a few moments of prayer before the meeting. Begin on time. Plan your meeting. Give every one a part in the service. Welcome all.

Ask some one, or more than one, to speak on "How Jesus Taught," showing how His parables and teachings, over and over again, use everyday objects familiar to all for illustration.

WHEN DO YOU OBSERVE "CHILDREN'S DAY"?

The following Sunday Schools have arranged for "Children's Day" services, and secured their offering envelopes: Sanford, N. C.; Winchester, Va.; Holland, Va.; Rosemont, Va.; Newport News, Va.; Burlington, N. C.; Morrisville, N. C.; Windsor, Va.; Elon College, N. C.; Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va.; Wadley, Ala.; Randleman, N. C.; Richmond, Va.

This is the one offering asked from the Sunday Schools during the year for the work of the Board of Religious Education, to be used in extending the work of Christian education through Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, Daily Vacation Bible Schools, and in every way possible through our Churches.

The time to take the offering is on "Children's Day."

If you do not observe this day with a special program, the day is the second Sunday in June. Offering envelopes sent free of charge upon request.

How much does your Church believe in Christian education?

Let your offering tell!

BETHLEHEM VACATION SCHOOL.

The second session of the Daily Vacation Bible School of the Bethlehem Church, Valley of Virginia Conference, opened Monday morning, May 21st, and continues through June 1st. The attendance and interest was splendid from the opening day. Teachers and workers in the school this year are Mrs. R. C. Myers, Miss Ella Pickering, Miss Georgia Layton, Mrs. John Driver, Mrs. Sellars and Miss Frances Cline. The program is from 9 to 11:30 daily, and includes the worship service, period for Bible stories and memory work, a contest in finding verses in the Bible which is creating much enthusiasm, music, handwork, flag drills, and missionary instruction.

The spirit of the school at Bethlehem, which is a Church in the open country, where children have to come from a distance, and teachers are busy housekeepers, is best revealed by the children themselves in their statement written on the theme, "Why I Like Vacation Bible School," a few of which are here quoted:

"I like Vacation Bible School because I can learn more of the dear Lord. I can learn to pray and sing to Him. I can learn to love Him more and more every day I go to Bible School. I learn to play games of the Bible and many stories of it."—Frances Arlene Cunningham.

"The reason I like Vacation Bible School is, it teaches us to learn more of God, and to work and pray to Him. It teaches us to take care of His house and to be closer to God. It helps us, too, to learn of people who never heard of God, and we ought to be thankful we know about Him."—Pauline Brown.

"I like Vacation Bible School because we learn more about God and learn how to live to be better boys and girls and how God watches over and cares for His children in times of old. Then we learn to sing the songs, and get to hear the verses out of the Bible which stay deep in our hearts all our lives."—Everett Sellers.

"I come to the Vacation School to learn about God; to learn the books of the Bible, to learn songs, and to learn to pray, and learn Bible verses and to learn the Twenty-third Psalm."—Edith Phillips (9 years old).

"I come to the Vacation School to learn of God, and to do what God wants us to do. To pray to God, for God teaches us to be good to one another, and for us to help God by being kind."—Alice M. Combes (9 years old).

"I come to Vacation School to learn about God. To learn the books of the Bible. To learn to sing songs of God. To learn to say a prayer. To learn to be kind to one another. To help poor people."—Madalene Grim (9 years old).

Can the Daily Vacation Bible School have any better witnesses than these, and a score and more like them, boys and girls who are going to Bethlehem Church every day for two weeks to learn these great truths?

Will your boys and girls have such an opportunity this summer?

A REQUEST FROM THE MOUNTAINS.

The fourth Sunday in May a series of revival services began at Rocky Ford, which will continue until the first Sunday in June. Beginning Friday night before the third Sunday in June, we will conduct a series of meetings at Elk Spur, continuing through the fourth Sunday in June.

I earnestly request that every Christian remember these meetings in earnest prayer. I would also ask, if you feel you have time, just drop me a card, stating that you will try to remember these meetings. Pray for the convicting and converting power of the Holy Spirit. Pray that He may take full possession of me.

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Fancy Gap, Va.

I WILL.

I will start anew this morning with a higher, fairer creed;
I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;
I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear;
I will waste no moment whining, and my heart shall know no fear.

I will look sometimes about me for the things that merit praise;
I will search for hidden beauties that elude the grumbler's gaze;
I will try to find contentment in the paths that I must tread;
I will cease to have resentment when another moves ahead.

I will not be swayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;
I will not deny his merit, but I'll strive to prove my own;
I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine;
I will cease to preach your duty and be more concerned with mine.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

I was in heaven one day, when all the prayers
Came in, and angels bore them up the stairs
Unto the place where he who was ordained such ministry
Should sort them, so that in that palace bright
The presence chamber might be duly light;
For they were like the flowers of various bloom,
And a divinest fragrance filled the room;
Then did I see how the great Sorter chose
One flower that seemed to me a hedgling rose;
And from the tangled press of that irregular loveliness
Set it apart, and "This," I heard him say,
"Is for the Master." So upon his way
He would have passed; then I to him:
"Whence is this rose, O thou of cherubim, the chiefest"?
"Knowest thou not"? he said, and smiled,
"This is the prayer of a little child."

THE ONE ESSENTIAL.

If Christ has stamped His signature and superscription upon any soul, at its rising again its eternal fortunes are bright and safe and sure. The one essential thing is union and communion with Jesus Christ, both now and forever.

THE FIRE THAT DOES NOT CONSUME.

By Howard W. Pope.

As Moses tended his father's sheep
In a desert land far from home,
He saw what made an impression as deep
As though Wonderland now had come.

He saw a bush burning so very bright
That the skies around were illumed,
But the strangest thing about this sight
Was—it burned, but was not consumed.

As he turned aside, for he was discreet,
He heard a remarkable sound;
God told him to take the shoes from his feet—
He was standing on holy ground.

This is a picture which God did give,
His people to greatly inspire;
In the heart of His Church He still doth live,
And speaks to them out of the fire.

All through the ages when doubt did chill,
And for morals there was scant room,
The fires of devotion kept burning still,
Yet the Church was never consumed.

The fire of conviction: slavery was wrong,
And that in our land it was doomed,
Did thrill God's people and made them strong,
Yet the Church was never consumed.

The fire of passion to make Christ known
Should inspire our youth in their bloom,
To girdle the globe where God's lead is shown,
And yet this fire will not consume.

WHY DO WE BELIEVE THAT JESUS CHRIST IS THE SON OF GOD?

For two reasons, especially, namely: the Bible tells us that Jesus is God's Son and is our hope of eternal life. After seeing the earth and sky, and the fullness thereof harmonizing with the teaching of God's Word, we are convinced with proof of its truth. This same Bible teaches us that Jesus is the Son of God. All the way through, His teaching, healing, suffering and dying proves His divinity. God chose to show us in a human life just how He feels for us. All that God is in His moral character is seen in Jesus, and we believe Him to be the Son of God, because He is all that we want our God to be. If we did not believe Him to be the Son of God, there would be no need in believing there is a God. Jesus plants Himself squarely between us and God and says: "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." So we can readily see that if we fail to believe that He is the Son of God we have no hope of eternal life. After a short life here of trials and temptations, sickness, sorrow and death, if we did not have hope of a better life beyond the grave we would of all men be most miserable. There are those that believe and teach that Jesus is a mere man only. Away with such doctrine, and may God pity that class. If He was only a mere man, as other men are, He would not have the power to save us from our sin. His divinity does not exclude His humanity as God sent Him in the likeness of sinful men. He prayed. He felt human emotions, as shown in His weeping at the grave of Lazarus. He could be tempted, but in all He did not sin. Jesus Christ claimed divine Sonship. He said He came from God and was going back to God. He had glory with God before the world was (see John 17:5). He said before Abraham was made, I am (John 8:58). After God created man in His own image, through disobedience he brought sin into the world, causing death. Is it not reasonable to believe that a wise and loving Father would do His best to save His lost children? To do this He had to manifest Himself in the flesh and live among us (John 1:14).

Notice how John and other apostles base their belief in Jesus as the Son of God on their experiences (1 John 1:1-2). What we have seen, heard, and our hands have handled, the eternal life that was manifested unto us, we declare unto you. Perhaps argument will not convince unbelievers, but we can at least testify to what we have experienced of the power of Christ in our own life.

Since Jesus is the Son of God, we may remember a few points.

First.—We may pray to him. We should not pray to a mere man. The soul wants God, but is satisfied with Jesus, because in him it has God.

Second.—We may worhip Him. We would not worhip a human being. Even the angels refused to let John worship them (Rev. 22:9). God alone claims our worship, yet the angels in heaven worship Jesus in the very same way they worship God (Rev. 5:11-14).

Third.—We may seek His aid, as a present help in time of need, for He has promised to be with us always, even unto the end of the world.

Fourth.—We must hear and obey His words, for He is Truth itself. His words are God's words. They are not to be disputed, but honored above all others. Let us plant them deep into our hearts, practice them in our every-day life, as our hope of eternal salvation through faith in Him. Jesus is the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by Me, are words our Saviour said.

RELIGION AS A BAROMETER.

We once heard Roger W. Babson say that prosperity in business means decline in religious interest, while business periods of depression bring an increase of interest in the Church. In hard times people are more religious than they are in times of great prosperity.

This saying illustrates the proverb that people go to God in their troubles, but to the devil in their pleasures. That is, of course, because they have wrong ideas as to what real pleasure is.

An Old Testament prophet would possibly interpret the appearance of hard times as a divine punishment for forgetfulness of God in good times. And perhaps he would be more nearly right than most people think. For extravagance and waste, which accompany prosperity, inevitably lead to loss and idleness and want, and therefore to hard times once more. On the other hand, enforced discipline, such as hard times bring, very naturally leads to thrift, industry, and so to better conditions.

The trouble is that we are all caught in the flood of hard times and swept onward, good and bad alike. That is one side of brotherhood. We stand or fall together.

Nevertheless, the good man has a better chance when hard times come than has the pleasure-seeker. He has not wasted his living in the good years, so that when lean days come he is ready for them, or should be. Thrift is a truly Christian virtue, and we should learn to practice it when skies are fair. —Ripple, in "S. S. Times."

WHAT GOD HAS SAID OF PRAYER.

"All things whatsoever ye ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matt. 21:22.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15:7.

"Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do."—John 14:13.

"If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father, which is in heaven."—Matt. 18:19.

"And Jehovah saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor."—Isa. 59:16.

"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not."—Jas. 1:5.

"Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."—Luke 11:9.

"Before they will call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear."—Isa. 65:24.

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things unto them that ask him"?—Matt. 7:11.

"Ask of me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."—Ps. 2:8.

REGULAR BUYING.

The government's attempt to stop the prevailing rise in the price of sugar has probably come too late to be of much service during the present summer. The greater harm has already been done, and prices will rise to new levels during the months of heavy consumption from May to September. It is, however, a time for the consumer to keep steady and cool-headed. Not to hoard is sage advice, and to buy when and as needed is the wisest policy, even though for some purchases one pays a higher price than now prevails. There is plenty of available sugar to give every man, woman, and child all that is normally needed and used.

A buyers' boycott broke the sugar speculation of 1920, when prices were crowded past twenty-five cents per pound. An "as-needed" buying policy is the one sane, effective method to use at present.

To boycott is not wise; to hoard is the high road to calamity.—Jay Arc, in "S. S. Times."

"LIFT UP YOUR EYES AND LOOK."

By A. B. Simpson.

The heathen world is lying in darkness and crying to God against the unfaithfulness of His people. * * * The first step in the work of the world's evangelization is to look intelligently at the field. And so the Master says to us (John 4:35), "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest."

An intelligent conception of the needs of the world is the foundation of all true Christian work; but how little Christians, as a rule, know or even think about the great outlying world. How many even in this congregation could give an intelligent account of the needs of India, Africa or China? Our own little family circle or our Church society absorbs our interest and is more to us than the millions who are perishing abroad. Our eyes are so limited that we cannot see beyond the bounds of our own denomination, and millions and millions of dollars are being wasted in multiplying Churches, simply because we feel that we should spread our particular sect, when whole nations are without even a single voice to proclaim the story of Christ and His salvation. * * *

Our business is with the present generation. A thousand million souls must be saved within twenty-five years or they never can be saved.

The fields are white, the doors are open, the needs are urgent. Let us understand them. Let us study missionary geography under the burning light of the Holy Ghost, and God will so write on our hearts the names of these peoples, and tribes and tongues, that we cannot rest until we have gone to them with the message of salvation. * * *

If we look out on the fields, the most ardent and hopeful heart comes back from the vision utterly discouraged, as we look at the need and the apparent resources. A view of the heathen field, and the result even of one hundred years of missions, while it has many gleams of encouragement, is, upon the whole, heart-breaking. Two millions of souls have been saved from heathenism, but two hundred millions more of heathen are to be found in the world today than a century ago. * * *

Modern schools, medical missions, industrial teaching, and a thousand other things can never take the place of the baptism of the Holy Ghost and the fulness of this power will never be known except in connection with the world's evangelization. It is for this that Christ especially promised it. As we seek it, that we may be witness unto Him, we may claim it without limitation, and the more wide our witness bearing, the more glorious the power will be. A mighty baptism of the Holy Ghost on all the machinery on the mission field could bring the world's evangelization in a few years.—Selected.

PRAYER.

O merciful God, who hast made of one blood and redeemed by one ransom for all nations of men, let me never harden my heart against any that partake of the same nature and redemption with me, but grant me an universal charity towards all men. Give me, O Thou Father of Compassions such tenderness and meltingness of heart that may be deeply affected with all the miseries and calamities outward or inward of my brethren, and diligently keep them in love. Grant also that I may not only seek my own things, but also the things of others. O that this mind may be in us all, that was in the Lord Jesus, that we may love as brethren, be pitiful and courteous, full of lovingkindness, and endeavor heartily and vigorously to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. And the God of grace, mercy and peace be with us all.—Anselm.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The Chautauqua.—

Notice for accounts of the Chautauqua in THE SUN'S columns. The officers are making a special effort to have this the best Chautauqua we have yet had.

In the Old World.—

We have of late been reading a book of "Travels in the Old World," by our honored confrere, the Rev. J. M. Rowland, D. D., editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate. He is original and unique, and his book is very much like himself. If you find it hard to keep awake when you read, then try this book, for we doubt that any ordinary man could well go to sleep while he is reading what this inimitable writer says. He is a close observer and has the power to grasp things as he passed them—just the qualifications of the man who is to write a book of travels. Dr. Rowland is not only a writer, but he is an editor as well. He knows how to get out an interesting paper, but he has not yet learned how to please every one who may chance to read his paper, nor has any one else yet accomplished that task. But we believe most people who read this book will like the book and want to finish it. It is useless to attempt to describe the book, as that is a task out of the question. If you wish to get the entertainment it can give, send to Rev. J. M. Rowland, D. D., Richmond, Va.

Billy Sunday Not for Sale—

"One of the most common criticisms of Billy Sunday is that he gets too much money. Maybe he does. We are not passing on that. But here is a refreshing report: "Paul Berg manager of the State Theater at Cleveland, offered Mr. Sunday $2.500 and expenses for himself and family if he would make two six-minute talks every day for a week at his theater, permitting him to choose his own subject." It is needless for us to tell our readers that "Billy" turned this offer down. That is what they would expect him to do. He said that to accept would contradict his attitude and activities in religious work. There is another angle to this incident, too. It illustrates what is generally true of the theater. The theater exists as a money-making institution, and anything, good or bad, that "will pay" is suitable to theatre managers. We are glad to believe that there are a few exceptions to this rule."

The Negro in the North.—

There seems to be a tremendous rush of the negro population of the South to the North, and it is making quite a stir in both sections. For instance, the Literary Digest tells us what is going on as follows:

"While the negro shift northward gives rise to many social problems here," points out the Philadelphia Bulletin, "the loss of indispensable farm labor is a serious blow to the South." "It means much to the cotton trade," agrees the Wall Street Journal, in another editorial. For—

"This movement of the colored people is not like the spring migration of the birds that go north for the summer, but is mostly a permanent change of habitation. A continued colored migration inevitably means a decreased cotton production in the future, while demand is on the increase.

"Cotton cannot be successfully raised without colored labor; neither is it like wheat or corn, which yield to mechanical invention. It is essentially a hand-produced crop, and the loss of a few thousand laborers in any Southern State would seriously affect the cultivation of the ordinary acreage of cotton.

"The world is now using American cotton at the rate of 13,000,000 bales a year. At the end of this season, July 31, 1923, there will be only a small surplus in the world to begin a new season. At the maximum estimate, the new crop will be a little more than sufficient to feed the spindles of the world, to say nothing about leaving a surplus to carry over into the next year. Therefore, the supply condition next year bids fair to be as bad as now, and may be worse."

Despite the foregoing, "a growing number of Southern folk, looking past the temporary condition it creates to the future, accept it philosophically, even cheerfully," reports the New Orleans Times-Picayune, "for as the north grows blacker, the south grows whiter." "South Carolina would be tremendously improved were 400,000 of its 800,000 negroes to migrate," agrees the Columbia (S. C.) State, and the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer predicts that "the outgoing of negroes will be followed by the incoming of the tractor, the modern supplanter of the negro and the mule." The editor of the Atlanta Constitution, moreover, maintains that the spring exodus "is not as alarming as has been pictured. There is no acute shortage of farm labor in Georgia because of it." In fact, caustically observes the Louisville Courier-Journal, "the prophets of pessimism, strange as it may seem, are not the Southern planters, but the Northern newspapers."

Assuming, in view of the Department of Agriculture's figures, that the northward migration may reach such volume as to curtail the production of cotton, what is to be done about it? In the opinion of the Richmond News Leader:

"The solution lies in improving the conditions under which the colored man works and lives. He is enjoying educational opportunities, and is being taught how he should live, but he needs help in securing better living and housing conditions both on the farm and in the cities.

"Nothing will take the place of good housing and fair treatment. Along with these things there can be efforts to acquaint the colored man with the fact that the high wages of the North are, as a rule, offset by high rents, high cost of living, frequent 'shu[College Library]ns of unsympathetic employers."

From the negro's viewpoint, notes the Baltimore Evening Sun, going North has certain advantages to balance against higher wages and better educational opportunities. Chief among the disadvantages, it says, is the fact that the negro does not thrive as well in the colder climate and under the more strenuous industrial competition as he does in the South; and it cites statistics showing that deaths outnumber births among negroes in the big Northern centers of population.

But there is another side to this question—the negro side. Dr. Moton, the successor of Booker T. Washington as president of the Tuskeegee Institute, Alabama, says that with the going of the negroes North, certain problems are facing the Northern people. Hear him:

"With the sudden increase in negro population in these Northern industrial centers, it was found that housing facilities were wofully inadequate in those districts already occupied by negroes. At once the newcomers, as well as the old residents, began to seek homes in other sections. This threw negroes into close contact with whites in sections where it had previously not obtained. Their coming was, in many cases, resented, and the result was in not a few cases an organized assault upon these newcomers, who threatened not only the existing industrial status, but at the same time raised unaccustomed social questions by their yet relieved, but this phase of the situation is very presence. Riots followed. The strain is not rapidly adjusting itself.

"Another problem that has been introduced into the North by the presence in large numbers of negroes from the South is in the matter of schools. For the most part, in Northern cities, there has in the past been no discrimination in the public schools. White and colored children have attended the same schools, usually with white teachers, and things have gone on smoothly. Usually there were only a few negro children in any one school, but with the large increase in negro population, the number of negro children in any one school was greatly increased, and, as has always been the case, the increase in numbers has precipitated the race problem. In one place and another the attempt has been made to segregate negroes in the public school system, but thus far without any general success.

"The migration has also introduced a religious problem into the Northern cities. So rapid was the increase in many cases that the Churches were unable to take care of those who sought their ministrations.

"One other phase of the reaction of negro migration on Northern conditions is the influx of a vast voting population into the doubtful States of the North. In Ohio, in Illinois, in New Jersey and in other States, the negro has become a tremendous political factor."

NOTES-PERSONALS

There is some probability of Brother Hermon Eldredge locating in Richmond, Va., as he is now one of the field workers in Christian education. It will likely be some weeks yet before the matter will be finally decided.

Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett has been called to the pastorate of the Gulf Mills Church, Conshohocken, Pa., and the call has been accepted. He will enter upon his duties there early in the summer, likely. He is now in Defiance College, Ohio, where he is completing a course of study in preparation for the work of the ministry. The Gulf Mills Church is a fine field for useful hard work. They have a beautiful house of worship, modeled after one of the great English Church buildings.

The Long family held a reunion at Graham, N. C., June 3rd. It was expected to be an occasion of much interest, as it is quite a large family. Several of the members of this family have been in public life for many long years. There are two ministers, viz: Revs. W. S. and D. A. Long; there are two lawyers, viz: Mr. J. A. Long and Judge B. F. Long. Dr. George W. Long was a prominent physician, but passed away several years ago. Mr. Jacob Long, the father of this family, passed away years ago at quite an advanced age, as did also Mrs. Long, the mother of these stalwart sons. Mr. John Long, another brother, lived for many years in Missouri. He also has passed away. Mrs. J. N. H. Clendenning, if we mistake not, was an only sister.

The many friends of Judge and Mrs. J. F. West will learn with sorrow of the recent death of their daughter, Miss Grace West. She was in the bloom of young womanhood, and was greatly loved in a large circle of friends. She was beautiful and highly accomplished—so well prepared for living; but the Master called her unto Himself, and the home is lonely without her. The burden is heavy, and the heart aches, but dear ones, in faith look up to Him who gave her to you and remember that He does all things well. Some time, not now, we shall understand what it all means, and then we may see, as now we cannot, how God often hides a smiling face behind a dark cloud. It is He who says: "Be still and know that I am God." The lesson is sometimes hard to learn, but we shall know hereafter. God bless the weeping ones in their great sorrow.

But the truth in which we believe is not the product of our own reasoning or speculation. It (the truth) comes to us as a supernatural revelation from God. As members of the Christian Church, we believe in the truth which God has revealed to us in Jesus Christ. But we believe this not because it is imposed upon us by some arbitrary and fettering authority, but because it is the truth, and speaks as such to our minds and souls. Believing in the deity of Jesus Christ, we believe naturally the facts in regard to Him which the Scriptures declare.—Bishop William T. Manning, D. D., New York City. We ask all ministers and other students of the Bible to notice especially the first sentence in this paragraph—"the product not of our own reasoning, but a supernatural revelation from God. That is the thing that Christian ministers need to believe and teach. Beloved, let us give ourselves to this work.

And so with those of us who have been called to the work of the ministry. We have pledged ourselves to teach and preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. But this is no restriction upon our liberty. It places no fetters upon our thought. It is not an obligation imposed upon us, but one which we have voluntarily assumed because it is in accord with our deepest faith and conviction.—Bishop William T. Manning, D. D., New York City. We like that idea. The Church does not impose some irksome obligation upon us to cramp us in our thought, but we have voluntarily assumed because it is in accord with our deepest faith and conviction. Did you hear that, brethren?

This is the Gospel which we have undertaken to preach, and this is the Gospel which the world needs. It is this alone which can overcome the sin of the world and bring us peace and salvation. Not by mere organization or by force from without, but by a force from within, are the visions now before men's minds to be realized. It is Jesus Christ reigning at the right hand of God and transforming the hearts and lives of men, to whom we must look and in whom we must trust, and whom we must preach, if there is to be real hope of world brotherhood and of the bringing in of the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.—Bishop William T. Manning, D. D., New York City. Beloved brethren of the Christian Church, these are wise and timely words to us as ministers of the Gospel. We cannot afford to turn to them a deaf ear. In this day of unrest and upheaval in religious thought, it becomes us as ministers of the Gospel of the Son of God to hear Him and do as He commands.

As ministers, we are not men bound by some irksome restriction. We are men who have sought and have been admitted to the unspeakable privilege of preaching Jesus Christ. We who hold this ministry have placed ourselves under most solemn obligations. We have undertaken to be the messengers of Jesus Christ. We do not go into our pulpits merely as seekers after truth. We do this only in a secondary sense, the sense in which we must ever seek to enter more deeply into the truth and meaning of His Gospel. We are men who have found the truth in Christ and who, in the joy of its discovery, have pledged ourselves to teach and proclaim it to the world. We have committed ourselves to this, we have pledged ourselves to preach the Gospel because it is that which we fully, freely and joyously believe.—Bishop William T. Manning, D. D., New York City. These are words well worth the careful thought of any man who has been called to the sacred work of the ministry.

We had the pleasure of stopping in Graham, N. C., recently for a few hours. This little city is full of historical facts connected with the Christian Church. The Old Providence Church was the home of our people for many years, but now we have two Churches—one in the town and one near the Southern Railway station. This was the scene of the religious activities of the Hardins, the Whitsitts, the Holts, the Longs, and many others whose names I cannot make sure of from memory. There is living here now another family which have been and still is prominent among the people of the Christian Church. We refer to the Kernodle family. The father of this family, Mr. Lovick Kernodle, lives here. His son, Mr. John D. Kernodle, is editor and publisher of the Alamance Gleaner, published in Graham. A second son, Prof. P. J. Kernodle, lives in Richmond, Va., and is the publisher of The Christian Sun. They have a sister also, Mrs. Williams, living either in Guilford or Alamance. Brother Lovick Kernodle, the father, is now quite aged, but still able to be up and around. For the most of his life he was a thrifty farmer, but now has retired. Rev. S. L. Beougher is the pastor of our Graham and Old Providence Churches and is greatly loved and honored. The work seems to be doing well under his supervision. A history of Old Providence Church would be interesting reading. It should be written by some competent hand.

The people are getting aroused on the question of Evolution. Only a little while ago the Legislature of Kentucky undertook to pass a law to allow no teacher in the public schools of that State to teach evolution, and we believe lacked only one vote of carrying the issue. Then, out in Minnesota we believe it was, a similar effort was made, but with what success we do not now recall, but Florida has actually carried a vote of that kind, so that it is unlawful now to teach anything which is "subversive to the best interests of any professor, teacher or instructor in any school, college or university supported, in part or in whole, by taxation, to teach Darwinism, atheism, agnosticism or any hypothesis that links man in blood relationship to any other form of life." That is sweeping and in the right direction. Beloved, who would have thought a few years ago that this thing would go so far as to have our State Legislatures taking this thing in hand to stop it in its career against the truth of Almighty God? The friends of evolution, atheism, agnosticism, and such like cults will, we believe, see something yet when the people become fully aroused.

Our Baptist brethren evidently dread any division in their ranks. The fact is, they are afraid of losing a part of their members. But, brethren, are you not also afraid of losing truth? In their recent convention at Kansas City, Mo., Rev. Mr. Brownlow, of Tennessee, offered a resolution providing for a commission to investigate in our South-wide institutions, and recommending that the commission co-operate with the managers of other schools in order that our people might know to what schools they could safely send their children. The resolution was to the point, but fearing a division of their body, they passed the resolution in a negative way, which, though it means the same thing, is not quite so strong as was the original thought of the man who offered it. They passed it this way: "Our convention has arrived at a situation which was not contemplated in the founding of this body. The interdependence of our convention institutions seems to call for a reaffirmation of certain great truths, such as creation by divine fiat as set forth in the Word of God, the incarnation, involving the virgin birth of our Saviour, and His atoning death. But not less should our convention avoid the dangers of interference with the sovereignty of the Churches and the autonomy and individual control of many institutions not under the auspices of this convention. Your committee reports adversely upon the resolution offered by Brother Brownlow, of Tennessee, not because we dissent from the principles contained in the paper, for we not only do not condemn the content nor intent of the resolution, but look upon our situation regarding the truths of such serious nature as to call for firm adherence to the doctrine of creation and salvation. We recommend non-concurrence on the ground of interference beyond the province of the convention." The Baptist of the South have expressed themselves in this indirect way pretty plainly as to the doctrine of evolution—they are against it, for they reaffirm the creation by divine fiat, as set forth in the Word of God, the incarnation, involving the virgin birth and atoning death of our Saviour, including the firm belief in the doctrine of creation and salvation. That is a back-handed slap at modernism, but it was a broadside slap all the same, and commits our Baptist brethren to the good old way of an unshaken faith in the Word of God. We are rejoicing—and because the people are being aroused, and that means action to the front.

AS TO UNION AMONG THE PEOPLE OF GOD.

We have heard a great deal of Christian union for the last many years. We have talked and talked, and much has come of it. The present spirit of union would have been impossible fifty years ago, but today it is possible because the people of God have been talking union. It is true there have not been many actual examples of real union between the various denominations, but there have been many efforts put forth in the direction of union, and while they have not as yet succeeded in uniting together any two bodies, nevertheless there has been real progress. Of course, it is to be regretted that actual union has not rsulted, so far as we are informed, in any single instance where the efforts have been made, but the Protestant fold is much nearer together than it was fifty years ago, and that is a hopeful sign, promising much for the future.

We know of but one way to real union among the people of God, and that is union with Christ, and then with one another. Real union with Christ will be sure to be followed by union of all who are in deed and in truth in union with Christ. Our union with one another is, we believe, in proportion to our union with Christ. We do not mean professional union with Christ, but real and actual spiritual union with Christ will surely be followed by union with one another of all who are really united with Christ. When the believer's union with Christ is fully cemented by the gift and power of the Holy Spirit, then we shall speedily find a way to unite with one another. That is the short cut to real union, as we believe, and in the long run such a union will stand and mightily promote the cause of Christ, as predicted by Himself in John 17. Until there is real union with Christ, we shall continually find a barrier in the way.

Questions and Answers.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Question.—What of Palestine? What of its population and its development since it is under Christian government?—J. L. J.

It has been but a little while since Palestine was rescued from the rule of the Turk, and yet there are signs of forward strides in the development of that country. If we go back to King David's time, when it took him nine months and twenty days to take a census of the people, yet when the British undertook it they used only one-seventh of the time David took, but they got only one-tenth of David's magnificent total, which was 1,570,000 for Judah and the northern kingdom. When the British were taking the census, one man was asked to state his nationality. He answered: "Born in Germany, of Russian extraction, Polish citizenship, but now, thank God, I am a subject of Palestine, the land of our fathers." Another, being asked a similar question, said: "Born in America, of German descent; religion, Jewish; subject of God." Pretty good! But now as to the population and development of the country, the following is considered correct: The population of the land is 757,182, of which 590,890 are Moslems, 83,744 Jews, 73,010 Christians; or 78.03 per cent Moslems, 11.06 per cent Jews, and 9.64 per cent Christians. There are 7,018 Druses, 163 Samaritans, 265 Bahais, 156 Metwalis, 1,544 Hindoos and 408 Sheiks. The population of Jerusalem is 62,083 souls, of which 33,971 are Jews, 14,699 Christians, and 13,413 Moslems. Jaffa has about an equal number of Jews and Moslems, over 20,000 each, and 6,850 Christians. Haifa has a population of 24,469; Gaza, 17,477; Tiberias, 6,954; Safed, 8,760; Hebron, 16,577—all Moslem except 430 Jews and 73 Christians. The population of Nazareth is 7,424; Bethlehem, 6,658, of which 5,838 are Christians, 818 Moslems, and 2 Jews. By "Christian (including the small minority of evangelical believers) is meant those who compose the Eastern Churches.

As to the development of the country, the facts are not at my command to give accurate information. Many enterprises are projected, and some real achievements speak for themselves. One is the establishment of a great university, located, I believe, on the Mount of Olives. This is in itself the forerunner of prosperity. It is the dawning of a new day in the industrial life of Palestine. Under the blessings of God, great things are likely to come to pass there in the near future. The Alliance Weekly, commenting upon this census report, says:

It will be noted that the results of the census show the Jews to be second in point of numbers in Palestine, and that the steady influx into the country of able-bodied men and women with capital, culture and energy, will tend more and more to change the balance of power in favor of the Jews. Surely prophecy is being fulfilled. "And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them" (Amos 9:14). With these and other potent signs, we are encouraged to heed the exhortation, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28).

Question.—What are we common people to do with all this doubt which some preachers are giving to us from the pulpit and the press?—John Jones.

We find in the Christian Herald of a recent date an answer to your question. So, instead of answering it personally, we permit another to do so as follows: "We have no sympathy with those so-called preachers of the Word who are deliberately leading their people into the quagmire of doubt with respect to many of the great truths of the Christian faith. They are false guides. Such a ministry is a mockery of truth. The divinity of Jesus, the full authority of His mission, the wonderful works He did, His triumphant resurrection, and the powers and authority with which He invested His Church for its world-wide mission—most of these are, to such misleaders, nothing but traditions, to be accepted or rejected as human will may decide. How can the Gospel be carried to the nations, when such error is tolerated in the Church which Christ founded and ordained? How can He be "lifted up" by men without faith? How can the conflict between sin and righteousness be waged and won under such leadership"?

Question.—Is not Palestine in the hands of the British? If so, is there not opposition to the British, and what is the cause of it?—Jewish Sympathizer.

Yes, the British are in control in Palestine and there is said to be opposition to their work, but that is nothing strange. Did you ever know one who is under the control of another to be satisfied? The matters of which you write have been aired in part of late in the public press, from which we glean the following facts:

It is a well-known fact, true to the part that Jews have always played in the past, that thrift and lively trade have marked their colonies in Palestine. Hundreds of capitalists, during the past two or three years, have gone from America, England, France and the dominions, investing large sums of money in the different cities and villages. It is said that the new and flourishing city of Tel-Aviv, with its 20,000 inhabitants, was built by Zionist capitalists from New York and London. Philanthropic societies from all over the world help in the work of sanitation, and preventing pauperism, which was especially found among the Jews before the World War. "If to all these activities are added," quoting again from the Palestine Weekly, "the well-known efforts of the World Zionist organization to change our country into a modernized state, it will be no exaggeration to say that all these activities combined bring into Palestine at least three to four million pounds yearly, and that since the British occupation of this country, some fifteen million pounds have been either invested for its progress, or laid out in some way for its advantage."

An argument used by the Arab extremists is that all this money falls into the hands of the Jews, that the labor is done by the Jews themselves, so that the Arabs are reaping no benefit from Jewish investments. But it is shown that forty per cent of the labor for their buildings and materials for their colonies falls into the hands of the Arabs, and that "no Arab has ever given employment to any Jew, either in building or farming." This looks like the beginning of the fulfillment of prophecy, "The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls. * * * They shall repair the waste cities. * * * And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers" (Isa. 60:10; 61:4, 5). Another striking fact, revealed by the customs entries is, that the Jews in Palestine consume the same amount—if not more—of imported articles as the rest of the population all told; and the Jews are less than one-ninth of the entire population. Surely the prominence and power of the sons of Abraham must be reckoned with in the present changes and the future development of the Land of Promise, carrying out God's purposes in preparation for the coming of the King of the Jews and the Bridegroom of the Church.

A campaign of opposition against British policy in the Near East, especially applied to Palestine, continues. The Daily Mail, London, is probably the leading paper that publishes and promotes the hostile propaganda. The abolition of the Balfour declaration is again demanded, and the immediate withdrawal of British troops from Palestine. The maintenance of an army of occupation in time of peace, and the spending of millions of pounds yearly on Britain's Zionist policy, while the "Jewish element," it is claimed, "which immigrates into Palestine is of the poorer classes, will likely impoverish the land in great measure." But the Secretary for the British Colonies has recently declared that the two million pounds which are now spent on the army of occupation would have to be expended in any case during the ensuing years in order to guard the Suez Canal. The Palestine Weekly declares: "Have not latest developments in Egypt and Syria, even in Mesopotamia, proved that England must be always on the watch in the land which holds the 'road to India'? The fact, too, that Turkey is on the eve of becoming a power once again, and her tremendous influence on all Islamic peoples, will not cease to weigh in all decisions concerning the military aspect of the Palestinian question."

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT AT HIGH TIDE.

One of the best commencements Elon College has had in all of its history was the last—the crown of the year of its misfortune. It is true that old Elon did not look like itself this year, and for the reason that she is going through a season of metamorphosis. One feature of the situation which makes it different is the ruin of the administration building. The broken walls of the old building are still there, and they speak in very plain language of the great fire of last January, but around and about the old building are rising the walls of great structures for the use of a big Elon. Some of the people say of the "bigger and better Elon": "Very well, we have no objection to its being a bigger and a better Elon. It ought to be a better and a bigger Elon, and for the reason that our people are putting into the institution so much of their lives and so much of their money."

There are four new buildings now being constructed—the Alamance Building, the Science Hall, the L. H. Whitley Memorial Building, and the Library Building. The Alamance Building is now about up to the second story. The Science Hall is about ready to receive the window frames for the first story, and the L. H. Whitley Building is in about the same state. The Library Building has not as yet been begun, except in the clearing away of the trees and making ready for the beginning of the laying of the foundation. We are sure that our readers who have ever visited Elon will admit that there must be a great metamorphosis there indeed, but let us say, in the fact of the loss of the old administration Building, that new Elon will be much in advance of the old, and while we cannot forget the old, with its hallowed memories and the tender associations which hang about, yet we mean to give the new as hearty a welcome as possible, for it means a great advance in the work of Christian education; at least, we have such a promise, and we are expecting the promise to be made good.

The circumstances surrounding the commencement this year were, in some respects, forbidding; but the forbidding did not forbid, for we believe it was generally conceded that the commencement of 1923 was perhaps the best in its history. The features which were forbidding were found in the fact that we had no auditorium in which the people might assemble for the commencement exercises; but auditorium or no auditorium, the commencement will rank possibly as the best ever held under the auspices of that institution. We have not room to give the details, but we will mention the outstanding features as we saw them.

1. The first outstanding feature was the baccalaureate sermon, which was preached this year by a man of fine international standing—the Rev. Francis E. Clark, of Boston, Mass., so well known to all Christendom as the founder of the Christian Endeavor Society. This service was held on Sunday, May 27th, in the Christian Church at Burlington, N. C., about five miles distant from the college. The Southern Railway and the many automobiles in the community served the college on this occasion for transportation, and Elon was quite fully represented at Burlington. Dr. Clark was in fine conditian and made a fine impression on the young people, to whom he especially spoke, as well as on many others. Elon was favorably impressed with this beloved brother, and we shall be glad to see him come again.

Monday was class day exercises, and it greatly entertained the people who were present, but the exercises were so varid that it is practically out of the question to give any detailed account of the same. Tuesday was graduation day, and if we mistake not, there were forty-two graduates, besides a large number of persons who received certificates in special courses. The graduating class did honor to themselves and the institution in their exercises. We have rarely witnessed exercises of this character in which so nearly every one came to his or her best as on this occasion. We really could hardly see how it was possible for the judges of the speaking to decide to whom to give the medals—they were all so nearly of the same grade; at least, they were in our judgment. The class of 1923 will be long remembered for the fine work they did on commencement day.

Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, of Virginia, who is a member of the Board of Trustees, was chosen to introduce the speaker of the day, in the absence of Governor Cameron Morrison, of North Carolina, and he did it well. The speaker of the occasion was the Hon. E. Lee Trinkle, Governor of Virginia. Governor Trinkle is a man of fine personal appearance and a fine speaker. He made a deep impression on the people on this occasion, and his address will long be remembered because of the practical value of the sentiments he expressed and the very interesting manner in which he presented them. The high ideals he held up to the young people will not be forgotten, we believe, nor will they be in vain as the ideals of their later life. God bless Governor Trinkle and the class to whom he spoke with so much earnestness and good sense.

There was another speaker who did himself and the institution honor in the address he delivered—that was Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, who delivered the alumni address. He surely won honors for himself as a speaker, and, even more, a fine thinker, for his address will bear study long and patient, and when such study has been given it, it will be all the more valuable. The leading thought of his address was that "True religion is the basis of real prosperity." We have Mr. Harrell's promise to give the address to CHRISTIAN SUN readers, and we hope to do so at no distant day. Mr. Harrell is a man of much promise, and this statement is backed up by the fact that the Christian Church at Durham, N. C., of which he is pastor, for years was almost a burden to itself, but under his able ministry it is rapidly becoming a power which will carry burdens for others.

There was one other incident which attracted much attention. After the diplomas had been delivered, President Harper announced that Dr. Staley had something to say, whereupon Dr. Staley arose and came to the front and announced that some years ago Rev. J. L. Foster had promised to give a present to the first boy or girl from the Christian Orphanage who should graduate at Elon College. In the class of 1923 there was such a graduate of a boy from said orphanage, and Mr. Foster, true to his promise, made that promise good through Dr. Staley. Mr. Thomas H. Andrews was the happy young man who was so fortunate as to be the first graduate from the orphanage. Bro. Foster presented him with one hundred dollars in gold. That was an honor to the head and heart of Rev. J. L. Foster, and it is a distinction to Mr. Andrews which will not soon be forgotten. It was much regretted that Bro. Foster could not be present himself, but Dr. Staley well represented him. We trust that the purity and beauty and value of the gold may ever furnish this young man a high ideal for his life and work. Set your mark high, young man, and then, by God's help, reach it.

Verily, Elon in 1923 reached high-water mark.

FACTS—DOCTRINE—LIFE!

We hear very much about the Bible, its teachings and the life of the believer that we have at different times felt impelled to write of such things in an effort to throw light on these questions for the enlightenment of those who seem to be in darkness. Many (and some of them are of the Church; professionally so, at least) talk just as though they were fully informed, when the language they use is all the proof needed to show they are writing of these things from the intellectual point of view, just as a man would write of the lodge, or of politics. They think they know what they are writing about, and yet any true believer, who is well informed, can readily discover that the said writer knows nothing of what he is writing, except intellectually, and, of course, under these circumstances he really knows next to nothing. The Virginian-Pilot recently undertook to ridicule Mr. Bryan by writing of him as "Mr. Fixit." The editor of that paper, or whoever wrote that article, thought he was saying something to the point, but as a matter of fact, he had Mr. Bryan wrongly characterized. The thing for which Mr. Bryan was contending was already fixed by the Bible. Mr. Bryan was not trying to fix it at all. He was simply sticking to what God had fixed and trying to get others to do the same.

The Presbyterian Standard has an article of real value, bearing on this or a kindred line of though, and it is so good that we are republishing it, that our readers may share in the good things the Standard says. His subject is—

Facts—Doctrine—Life!

We see much in these days of doctrinal unrest about the relation of these three things to each other. The question is raised and hotly discussed, which precedes and which follows, which is cause and which is effect. All three are essential elements of Christianity. We can have religion, but not the Christian religion without facts, for the whole system is based upon facts, historic facts. We cannot have Christianity without doctrine, for doctrine is the statement of facts.

It is quite a common opinion that doctrine lies in the sphere of speculation, that it has something of the vagueness and uncertainty which attaches to metaphysics. This opinion is shared in by those who have had opportunity to know better. All true doctrine is nothing more nor less than the statement of fact. Take the catechism question, "What is God"? "God is a spirit infinite, eternal and unchangeable in His being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth." This answer is doctrine, i. e., teaching about God. But if it be true, it is the statement of facts about God. Is God infinite? If he is, then to say so, is to assert a fact. That God exists is no more a fact than that He is an intelligent Being. In other words, what God is is just as truly a fact as that He is.

What is the doctrine of the atonement? It is the statement that Christ died for our sins to reconcile us to God? Did Christ die for this purpose? Then the doctrine is the statement of a fact. The purpose for which He died is just as truly a fact as that He died. So it is with all the doctrines of our most holy faith. In so far as they are true, they are the statement of facts.

Facts are of no value without doctrine. Doctrine determines the meaning and significance of facts. Paul said: "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Did Paul mean that he intended to confine himself to the bald statement that Jesus Christ was crucified? What good does the knowledge of that do? If anybody knew that Jesus was crucified, it was the soldiers who nailed Him to the cross. Did the fact have any religious value for them? They supposed they had put to death a malefactor, and they sat down and gambled for His clothing. Without the true doctrine explaining the fact, the crucifixion of Christ had no more religious value than that of the two robbers who were crucified with Him?

So about the person of Christ. When the jailer asked what he must do to be saved, Paul replied: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Does anybody suppose the jailer was expected to do that without knowing who the Lord Jesus Christ was? Paul was no fool, and when he made that answer, he did it on the assumption that the jailer had already heard enough about Christ to know who He was; or else Paul followed the answer with an explanation of who Christ was. To one ignorant of all doctrine about Christ, the answer of Paul would convey no meaning. Those who disparage doctrine darken counsel by words without knowledge. All but idiots base belief on doctrine, not upon naked fact.

One of the ruses of liberalism is to iterate that Christianity is essentially a life and not a creed. It is not believing something about Christ, but it is "Christ in you the hope of glory." The vital thing is not to know about Christ, but to know Christ. Of course, the final end of Christianity is to produce a certain type of life. "I came that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." But to emphasize life at the cost of doctrine is simply to exalt the end against the means. How in the name of common sense is any one to know Christ without first knowing about Christ?

The question is asked, "Which is primary, doctrine or life"? One writer tells us that the answer to this question marks one for a liberal or a fundamentalist. If we say doctrine is primary, then we are a back number. If we say life is primary, then we can claim spiritual kinship with Dr. Fosdick. It is very remarkable that there should be two answers to the question. If by primary is meant that which comes first, then to say that life is primary is to say that a harvest can be garnered before the seed is sown. If by primary is meant that which is most important, then to say life is primary is to say that the harvest is more important than the seed from which it sprang.

The trouble about liberalism is a lack of clearness of thought and precision of statement. It indulges in much pious phraseology, but lives and moves and has its being in a kind of luminous fog bank. When one begins to decry dogma and doctrine and theology, you may set it down that he does not care to stand hitched. He wants to run with the hounds, and hold with the hare. He can talk glibly about the hidden life, and the mystic union, and the supremacy of love, but he is using language mostly as camouflage. The Apostle Paul, by anticipation, makes all confusion touching the questions we have been discussing inexcusable. "It shall be that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. But how shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed; and how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard; and how shall they hear without a preacher? So faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." First, the message, then the faith, then the life.

ENOUGH TO ALARM THE MOST RABID OPTIMIST.

They say the world is getting better, and it may be so, but now and then there is a very black cloud on the horizon for which we doubt that the most rabid optimist can twist the facts so as to claim that these facts and figures indicate that the world is getting better. Seriously, the situation is too serious to use by way of a jab even for an optimist. Elsewhere will be found a report from official sources which is enough to make every face grow pale because of such rapid growth of child suicide in this country. But the worst of it is that this growth of suicide is not confined to children, nor to the poor, nor to the ignorant, nor to the one class, nor to the other. Literally, this wave of suicide is sweeping practically every class of the people of this country. The rich and the poor, the ignorant and the learned—in fact, all classes, too numerous to mention here. Why mention it at all? Why! Because we wish to arouse the people of the country to do something to stop this wave of death as it is passing over the country. We have no other reason, not even to jab an optimist. The following facts, as will be seen, come from official sources. Do take time to read the facts and then do your best to drive this wave back. We have no need for it, and no room for it. Let us unite to stop this wave of death to thousands of our fellow-citizens, and let us do it quickly:

Waves of suicide were reported in various parts of the country during 1922, and one girls' suicide club was discovered. Most alarming is the fact that more than 900 children took their own lives. The total number of suicides is 12,000—about the same number as were reported for the previous year. Included in this 1922 total were wealthy, socially prominent and highly educated persons. There were thirty-eight college students, fifty college professors and school-teachers, nineteen preachers and leaders of religious work, fifty-two judges and lawyers, eighty-four physicians, one hundred presidents and heads of large business concerns, and a number of bank presidents, one of whom, we are told, tried ten times to die before succeeding. The list also includes seventy-nine millionaires. These figures are given in the annual report of Dr. Harry M. Warren, president of the Save-a-Life League, with headquarters in New York. In looking at this grave situation, Dr. Warren says that we do not need investigators. "The facts are well known. Suicide cases fill our papers and usually without attracting the slightest serious attention. We need instant action."

The most trivial causes, according to the report, operated in leading people to the last resort of the desperate. A girl ended her life because she became depressed after bobbing her hair; a man because he was forced to quit playing golf. A woman killed herself after missing two trains; a man because he feared the end of the world was at hand; another because of a row over a cat. A designer was driven to suicide trying to guess the spring styles for women. One felt driven to it because he didn't want to face another winter. Another killed himself "for the fun of it," and still another ended her life "just to get a new thrill."

What is the cause of all these suicides? They are many, but practically all of them of the most trivial character. Turn again to the last paragraph above and read the causes of these suicides. It is hardly believable that people could be so crazy even as to commit suicide over such trivial causes. No matter which you are, an optimist or pessimist, it is time for us to get down to an earnest effort to put a stop to such awful crimes.

Think of a girl committing suicide because she had her hair bobbed; of a man committing suicide because he was forced to quit playing golf; of a woman who killed herself because she had missed two trains; of a man because he feared the end of the world was at hand, and so on. Something is wrong, and whether we had better say anything about it or not may be a question, but there can be no question that it is time, and high time, to be up and doing something to put an end to such folly on the part of people who otherwise seem to be among the best people in the land. We are facing an awful situation! What can be done to stem the tide and put a stop to such folly in destroying one's own life?

Let Christian men and women everywhere go to praying for the power of God to intervene and save us from our extreme foolishness in this matter of suicide. Do you plead for silence? We have no time for silence. The Lord's way is to cry aloud and spare not.

WHAT MAKES THE TROUBLE?

Our Baptist brethren of the North admit that they are having a good bit of trouble. Somebody said their trouble was due to the pre-millennial doctrine. Dr. Curtis Lee Law, the editor of the Watchman-Examiner, corrects this assertion as to pre-millennialism being the cause, and he does so by saying:

"This division among Baptists is due to the efforts of rationalists to rob Christianity of its supernatural content, and that those who are responsible for it deny the virgin birth of Christ, His substitutionary death, His resurrection and the promise of His second coming."

That is reason enough for a division between any body of Christians; that is, if any part of them mean to stand for the truth. The trouble with our Baptist brethren of the North is that they stood still through the years when this evil or devisive tendency was getting a start, just as our Presbyterian brethren of the North have also done, till now they cannot help themselves—the rationalist element has gotten the upper hand, and now they are in the majority. That is just the trouble in the two bodies—the Baptists of the North and the Presbyterians of the North. If they had permitted themselves to be awakened in time, it might have been different and the conservative element might today be in control. As it is, the radicals are in control in both of these denominations North, and no one can now tell what the outcome is to be.

The Baptists of the South and the Presbyterians of the same section are in a very different situation. Both of these bodies in the South have the conservative side well in hand and they are going to keep it well in hand. They have been more careful and more determined to stand for the vital and fundamental truths of the Word of God, and now they have practically no such trouble.

If our people wish to keep in line with Bible teaching, as we believe the great body of them do, then let them learn a lesson from the bitter experience of our Baptist and Presbyterian brethren of the North. They have given away and given way to the findings of so-called scholarship till they are compelled to give way, and for the reason that the majority is now in control. It is time for our people to get their eyes open to the situation now confronting us, or later we may have to open them in the dark.

Divine truth, not mere human opinion, is the basis of Christianity, and it will live sustained by that truth to the end.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The cheapest product on the market is a good book. The best book is the Bible; the next best is a dictionary. When one considers the work that must be done to produce a good English dictionary, it is plain that it is very cheap. A small dictionary that can be bought for one dollar contains 38,000 words, with definitions. No sane person would undertake the task of copying that many words for $1.00. You can turn to the dictionary and find the spelling and meaning of any word; and all for such small cost! An ordinary arithmetic contains so much real information and rules for calculations that the ordinary business could not prosper without its help—and yet a dollar will put that valuable book on the shelf. Bookmakers render valuable service to mankind, and writers give us big values for small pay. Many will pay a dollar for a dinner, and rarely buy a good book. Books outlast almost any purchase that can be made. It is one thing that many can use, and yet it does not exhaust its contents. A large family can use a good dictionary for years, and its contents remain the same. A poem or a song, once written, never wears out. The Bible is the most permanent book in the world. It is the cheapest book in the world. More copies are printed and sold than of any other book. It is read by more people than any other book. It is in more homes than any other book. "It is a lamp to our feet and a light to our path.

What would the world be without books? How could one generation leave its achievements to another generation without books? How could God have made a revelation of Himself without the Book? Holy men wrote as they were inspired. We learn of God through His Book. We know the laws of the nation through books. The art of writing is a wonderful art; and the art of printing is wonderful, too. Speech is powerful. God spoke and it was done. The State speaks, and it is done. Human speech may curse or bless; it may blame or praise; it may stir up hate or love; it is the mightiest force among men. It sighs or sings; it cries or laughs; it tells lies or truth. There is no rule to measure truth, and no scales to weigh words. Books contain thoughts, facts, emotions, principles, and contracts as binding as law. Law books preserve order, protect rights, punish criminals, protect virtue, and maintain peace more than police forces; and the Bible does more to promote honesty, morality, domestic happiness and spiritual life than any other agency. It creates an atmosphere that all sorts of people breathe. Conscience would be dull without the Book.

Every family needs a Bible, a dictionary, a history of the nation, a book of poetry, and a geography. Money wasted would purchase these. Books in the home are as necessary as chairs and beds, mirrors and combs. A small library is a sign of taste, knowledge, and a desire to learn. It is too bad to have better clothes and food than books.

ELON LETTER.

Commencement is history now, and good history, too! Not a service was marred by inclement weather. Seventeen of twenty-four trustees attended and worked through the long hours of the day and late into the night, giving their best judgment in guiding the affairs of the college committed to their care. Six additional trustees were elected, giving Elon thirty in all. These new trustees are tried and trusted men of the Church. They are W. F. Corwith, J. M. Darden, I. W. Pritchard, Floyd Hurst, Joe W. Stout, and George F. Whitley.

The various reports submitted to the trustees showed the college on a safe and sound basis, despite the fire and despite handicaps from various sources resulting therefrom. The president's report said, among other things: "We have just closed Elon's most trying year. Everything dates from January 18th, when the burning of the administration building precipitated such a crisis as has never tested our people before. The achievements since have gratified us all. The citizens of Alamance County have demonstrated their interest in the college as we had hardly hoped. The Church has arisen to meet the crisis in an enthusiasm of glad response. Faculty members and students have uttered no word of complaint because of inconveniences and handicaps. For all this, we record our grateful acknowledgement to God, who has been our stay and inspiration in it all. (Here Dr. C. H. Rowland led in a special prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving.) Of course it has been difficult to maintain the disciplinary regulations of the college, especially those governing social relations, disorganized as we have been. The growing laxity of social conventions makes such regulation difficult at the best. Under the circumstances, we feel that we have done measurably well. Dean Hook and Dean Helfenstein deserve special thanks for their faithful services in this direction. With no thought of their personal interests or popularity, they have done their very best to maintain the high standards Elon has set for herself."

The report also said: "Last summer we embarked upon a program of our own young people in our own college. The enrollment this year is exactly what it was last year. We shall continue to pursue this policy and to urge the cooperation of our people in patronizing our own college. It is our only hope of building up a strong, working Church." Beloved friends, if you wish to do full duty in destroying the Christian denomination, send your sons and daughters to other colleges than Elon, and urge your neighbors to do the same thing. In this way, if enough of you do it, in one generation you can upset all that James O'Kelly and our fathers have set up.

I have space for only one other reference to the reports submitted to the board, and that will come from the report of the emergency committee, Col. E. E. Holland, chairman. This committee, without the blowing of trumpets, has done a splendidly constructive piece of work in governing the plans for rebuilding and financing the present crisal situation. At the suggestion of Col. Holland, the Southern Christian Convention provided for an offering in every Church during the college period this summer. The committee is of the opinion that every member of the Christian Church should have opportunity to contribute his mite for Elon and Bethlehem Colleges this summer. The money is needed, but the sense of duty well done in co-operating in a giant worthy cause is also more needed. The committee calls upon our pastors to see that "College Day" is celebrated at the most appropriate time during June, July, and August, and that the offering should average at least $1.00 per member. Three cents will put a brick in the wall. How many brick will your Church lay?

The college has prepared a bulletin with a suggested program, songs, and other material useful for the celebration of "College Day." Send for as many copies free as you will need. Strive to make the 1923 "College Day" celebration a glorious occasion in your Church, wherein Christian education, the hope of the world, shall have due and becoming emphasis.

W. A. HARPER.

THE CHURCH AND THE CHILDREN.

Who it was that first suggested an annual "Children's Day" that should combine the idea of an anniversary, a special children's service, in the beautiful season of the year, on which all parts of the country and all Sunday School workers could unite, it is impossible to discover. To write a history of its development would be no easier than to undertake to record the annals of the blossiming of spring flowers and the budding of the trees. We only know that whereas it was winter, now it is spring, and so "Children's Day" is come, on which the Church rises and shines and sings and puts on its beautiful garments.

In 1883, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church designated the second Sunday in June as "Children's Day," on which special services for children should be held, placing the emphasis on the conversion and Christian nurture of the young.

The true purpose of the Church is to receive and give to others the benefits that arise from the study, experience and practice of religion. The proper work of the Church is whatever it finds to do for the betterment of human society, especially along what we call moral and spiritual lines. That work may be found anywhere on the earth's surface. A call for help may come from a remote land, or it may come from the family living next to the Church building. Among the near-by calls upon a Church's ability and desire to help there is none quite so urgent or so promising of results as that which comes from the children and the young people of the families represented in the congregation. They constitute a first obligation, recognized and acknowledged by all human beings, and their well-being means naturally more to us than any other group of people on earth. To look at the proposition otherwise is not to conscientiously and fairly face the one great problem of the Church. If our Church is worth sustaining, we must have our children, with us, to become its supporters. The religious faith we have found satisfying we want them also to have, and we believe that, however it may be with others, these children of ours, inheritors of our habit of mind, will find the best satisfaction and inspiration in the Church into which they were born.

The normal procedure, then, is for the Church to look upon every child born in any family represented in the Church as born into the Church, and therefore potentially, if not actually, a member of it; and from birth to maturity to give to that child such watchful care and instruction as will not only attach him to the Church, but make him an efficient member of it. Jesus said: "Suffer the children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." If they are already in the kingdom, it is our business to keep them there.

As normal, rational and so nearly in accordance with every other line of work, as this procedure seems to be, it is strange that any Church should ever permit a child to grow up in its midst without doing everything in its power to secure that child as a working member. The reason lies in a crude, undeveloped, and unthinking liberalism; in a curious superstition concerning the matter of religious training. Parents tell us continually that they do not want to give their children any religious training, from the feeling that it is taking an unfair advantage of the child. They say, I propose to let my children grow up, as far as possible, unbiased, and when capable of thinking for themselves make their own choice. This might be all wise and well, provided, in the nature of the case, it were not utterly impossible. If you do not bias the child, the first that he meets on the street, or in his school, or among his companions, will begin the work of biasing, of impression, of education, of training, for this is a continuous process. Whether you do it or not, it will be done either wisely and well or unwisely and ill. These persons are either trying to shift responsibility, or forgetting that the child is born with the summed-up and inherited results of the tendencies of all the past. This brain, this heart, these bodies of ours, are not clean, white pieces of paper that the grown child can write on what he will.

We are all palimpsests, that have been written on over and over and over again in all the ages of the past. We are the total result of thousands of generations, and we come to the beginning of this life with tendencies and biases and inclinations of very kind. It seems to me, then, if we have any worth-while views, any convictions, any persuasions, as to right and wrong, as to God, as to human character, as to destiny, we should want to do our utmost to give these to our children. It is to be regretted that boys and girls, to so large an extent, absent themselves from the preaching services, but it is much more to be regretted that the attitude of the home on Church attendance has changed. At one time the home was largely responsible for the young people attending the preaching services, but now many parents refuse to urge their children to attend, and very few insist upon their doing so. Still others are taking the ground that the Sunday School is sufficient, so Church attendance is left largely to the choice of the children.

It looks encouraging when statistics show that eighty-seven per cent of Church membership now comes from the Sunday School; however, it is not the success it appears to be. Restlessness begins at the age of thirteen, and continues to increase, and before the age of twenty is reached two-thirds have stopped attending. Of those who remain, not more than one-half become wedded to the Church, and very few of those who stop attending Sunday School afterwards join the Church. So, while eighty-seven per cent of the Church membership comes from the Sunday School, this represents only a small proportion of the scholars that, at one time or another, have been members of it. The preaching service stands at the climax of all other services of the Church, and the Church service is the one opportunity for all to receive his instructions.

If the Church is the best realization of our religious ideals, there can be nothing finer for our children than that they should grow up to feel that they are a part of it. Children are never too young to take to the Church services. Suppose they do go to sleep—who cares? I believe that the influence of this habit of being in Church, of feeling that they are a part of it, of feeling that it is expected of them that they will come—is more important than anything else that you can give in the way of religious training. It is not necessary that the child should have clear intellectual conceptions as to what is going on in the Church. It is the atmosphere, the impression, the habit. How large a part of success in life, in every direction, is this matter of habit!

If we do not soon awake to the fact that it is quite necessary to create an atmosphere in our preaching services which will be congenial to our young life, we will look back from heaven in a few years after we are gone and see nothing but depopulated Churches. The Sunday School considers what will win the boys and girls. The Church considers how to adapt the boys and girls to the conditions; and, because of failure to adapt them, we have failed to secure their attendance at the Church services. The business man says, "Kill the system, but not the business." But the Church has been losing its boys and girls rather than change its plans. Is business worth more than boys and girls, saved for Christ and the Church?

The preaching services should be as much for the children as for the older folks. The pastor should bow at childhood's shrine until he understands childhood and its needs. Do not think of the child as a little man, for he is not. Give him what he needs now, and not what you think he will need when he becomes a man. The services should be made bright and cheery, and the children should be given that reverence which comes from a real love for God and His Church. Let the preacher choose his subject and prepare his sermon with thought of the boys and girls as truly as of those older. A five-minute talk for boys and girls by the pastor is a help, but this is far from what is needed.

Occasionally introduce with the fine solos of the choir a child's voice. Have the choir provide some music especially to please the children. Select such hymns as they, too, will care to sing. Let the prayers be such as will help the children in their own prayers. I would like to see "Thee" and "Thou" stricken out of every prayer where there was a child within hearing.

In Wales, the galleries of the non-conformist Churches are crowded with children at every service. How depressing is the sight of a throng of children and young people leaving the Church edifice on their way from Sunday School, while a smaller crowd of adults is entering the Church for public worship.

So the crying need of the Church at this hour is to provide for the children a service of devotion and worship; for fuller missionary instruction; to cultivate in them the habit of regular attendance at the Church services; to train the children to give, regularly and systematically, to all the activities of the Church; and to train them for future leadership in the Church by giving them something to do. But as we say these things there arises a feeling that even a well-supported Church is not an end in itself, but a means to the end we must desire, and that to bring our children up as members of the Church may not be the utmost we wish for them. The goal is goodness, purity of heart and life, sympathy, friendliness, honesty, earnestness, downright serviceable goodness.

We believe that our Church is worth while—how better perpetuate it than by entrusting these responsibilities to our descendants? We believe it has a work to do—who can carry on that work to better advantage than those of our own families? We find in our religion the strongest support in need and the profoundest satisfaction in all life's experiences—why shall we not, then, and by all possible means, pass these on to our children, and they in turn to theirs?

S. L. Beougher.

Graham, N. C.

We shall not meet the needs of the world by reactionary blindness or obscurantism, but neither shall we meet the need of the world by a Christianity so-called without the supernatural, a Gospel from which we have dismissed the divine and living Christ. We who are called to preach the Gospel must be honest and free and fearless in our thinking. The truth has nothing to fear from this, and everything to gain.—Bishop William T. Manning, D. D., New York City. That has the right ring, and we commend it to all of our preachers who are students as well as preachers. That from which we have dismissed the divine and living Christ is certainly not the Gospel of the Son of God.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK OF THE CHURCH.

A letter from a devoted layman under date of May 24th has this line in it: "Missions is the most important work of the Church, and I wish every member of the Christian Church could see it through the pocketbook way." This brother is correct in his statement, and biblical in his holy wish.

After all is said and done, we shall give and grow and glow according to the missionary spirit developed and maintained amongst us. The whole upward movement of any Church depends upon the missionary spirit. God never has prospered, nor can He prosper, a non-missionary Church and keep His word. We have to face the fact that the Church must be missionary if it is to accomplish that whereunto it was established. How I wish all members of the Christian Church had the same vision and feeling that the good brother has from whose letter I have quoted.

THE WORK IN CARROLL COUNTY, VA.

Our school at Fancy Gap, Va., closed on May 18th, that which is thought to be our most successful term thus far. Miss Emily Midyett, 1110 Tunstall Avenue, Norfolk, Va., has returned to her home after a most efficient and satisfactory year's work. A letter of hers, May 28th, contains this: "My work in Carroll County, Va., has ever been a joy to me. Oh, it is vitally interesting to watch this work in its infancy and see with the mind (in the years to come) its proportion when it reaches the mature stage.

"I left all the workers well and the work running smoothly."

Miss Margaret H. Morey remains for summer work and to assist the pastor, Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, in evangelistic efforts.

Miss Laura A. Clemmer, of the Eaton, Ohio, Church, is teaching at our Rocky Ford School, and is also conducting a Sunday School there.

We hope to begin erecting a combined Church and school building near this point at an early date. By today's mail I received a check of $20 without solicitation, the first donation to be recorded in behalf of this Church building, not counting, of course, the donation of site and labor of the community.

Mrs. Ada A. Teague, of Burlington, N. C., is in the Sandy Ridge community and is to re-establish our Sunday School there and render such assistance as possible to the pastor, Brother Bradshaw, in his evangelistic efforts this summer.

The people of Carroll County greatly appreciate the efforts we have put forth and are cooperating most heartily.

MEMORIALS.

It was the writer's great privilege to be with the pastor, Rev. W. J. Edwards, at Brown's Chapel, Moore County, N. C., for two services on Sunday, May 13th. Multitudes of people, many more than could fill the house, were present at the services, and the day seemed to be all that such an occasion has to offer. The song service was exceedingly inspiring, the selections being most appropriate and well rendered. Brother Edwards is doing most excellent work as pastor of this happy people, and the Church seems to be in great harmony and growth. The people brought quantities of flowers, which were placed on the graves of all who sleep in the well-kept cemetery nearby. In the open, just after the flowers had been placed, a suitable hymn was sung and our beloved brother, the former pastor of Brown's Chapel, Rev. W. N. Hayes, led in a most fitting and appropriate prayer.

In the large Church-yard abundant dinner was spread, and though the throng was great, many baskets full of fragments seemed to have been gathered up.

An afternoon service, during which the writer preached, was well attended and made sacred and glorious by the inspiring songs by the well-trained choir.

Rev. A. H. Hook, Elon College, N. C., pastor of Pleasant Ridge Church, Guilford County, held a similar memorial service, in which the writer was privileged to participate, May 20th. I do not recall havng visited recently a Church of more promise and larger opportunity than Pleasant Ridge. There is an intelligent and capable leadership, and a very large number of promising young people. The writer's heart yearns for that day to come when the Church shall do its duty toward the young people and properly husband their consecrated strength and energy in kingdom service and activity. If our Churches were to wake up to a realization of their possubilities in securing and directing the consecrated energies of our young people, there would be a revolution such as the years have not witnessed in many, many decades. When will we realize, first, the necessity of getting hold of our young people for Christian service, and, secondly, the ability to direct their energies in proper channels of Christian activity?

The writer greatly enjoyed the day at Pleasant Ridge and wishes that the opportunity may be soon and often repeated for meeting and mingling with these good people.

OUR AIM.

A "CHILDREN'S DAY" SERVICE IN EVERY CHURCH.

June is the month for "Children's Day"—the month when every Church is called upon to hold a service for its own children, and to contribute to the Christian education of other children. The "what and why" of "Children's Day" is well given in the following responsive reading found in one of our "Children's Day" programs:

Superintendent: "What special day is this"?

School: "This is 'Children's Day.'"

Superintendent: "Why is it called "Children's Day"?

School: Because it is a day in the year dedicated to the Sunday School, which holds in its membership all ages, including the very youngest cradle roll baby, through the beginners, primaries, juniors, intermediates, seniors, young people, adults, to the very oldest shut-in of the home department. All are interested in children on that day."

Superintendent: "Why have we chosen this season for "children's Day"?

School: "Because this is the season of flowers, of singing birds, telling us of God's great care for all His creatures and especially His care and love for the children."

Superintendent: "Mention one object of "Children's Day."

School: "As the name suggests, the Church, on 'Children's Day' desires to call the attention of fathers and mothers and grown-up members of the Church to the work for the children.

Superintendent: "What is another object"?

School: "To teach all in the Sunday School, especially the little children, that there is a place for every child in the Church; that old and young should join together in the worship of God's house."

Superintendent: "What beautiful custom has grown up in connection with our 'Children's Day'"?

School: "The custom of giving free-will offering for the extension of God's kingdom."

Superintendent: "For what special purpose are we taking an offering today"?

School: "For the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention, to be used in making the work of our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies more effective and to be used to further the cause of Christian education throughout our Churches and Conventions, thus winning boys and girls to Jesus and training them for His service."

Has your Sunday School planned its "Children's Day" service?

Will you be on the honor roll of Sunday Schools which remember the children and their Christian teaching this year?

Surely, every Church has one day especially and definitely for its children! L. M. E.

The Rev. E. Y. Mullins, D. D., LL. D., Louisville, Ky., is said to be the president of the largest theological seminary in the world. This year, if we mistake not, they have had between four and five hundred students in training in the seminary over which he presides. What a responsibility it is to fill such a place! It is especially so in this day of unrest in religious thought. As we understand it, the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., has not a radical teacher in its faculty. What a blessing to think that between four and five hundred young men are being prepared for the work of the Gospel ministry in loyalty to the truth of the Bible. Dr. Mullins is a conservative, and believes the Bible is the revealed will of God.

RECOLLECTIONS OF PARSONAGE LIFE.

By a Minister's Son.

Yes, I am a preacher's son, and, better yet—a Methodist preacher's son. For something over thirty years my father has been a member of the North Mississippi Conference in good and active standing—thirty years of hard but glorious toil for the Church and for the Master; thirty years as a poor circuit rider among the red-clay hills of Mississippi; years of hardship but of wonderful fruitage, of poverty but of glorious recompense.

Appreciation of a Priceless Heritage.

And as I write these lines, away out on the Pacific Coast, enjoying all the wonderful bounties of sunny California and yet homesick for that same simple parsonage life among the barren hills of Mississippi that I enjoyed for over twenty years, my great desire is to be able to show my appreciation of my heritage, a priceless heritage—a preacher's son.

My father came from good, plain American stock, a sturdy, simple family that produced two sons and a grandson for the Southern Methodist Church. My mother's people were blessed with a larger share of this world's goods, a fact that endears my mother to me more and more when I think of the sacrifices, and oftentimes want, that have been hers throughout her married life. And all these without a murmur, without complaint.

We are a large family—eight children, all living; another priceless heritage. My first recollection is of a three-room parsonage on one of the poorest circuits of the Conference. A parsonage that would not have made a respectable barn was our lot; no paint, broken windows, the barest necessities in the way of furniture. Two bedrooms, and a family of nine! My memory is fresh today of those old trundle-beds that appeared at night and disappeared so mysteriously in the daytime.

On a Salary of $300 to $400 a Year.

The town boasted of a fair public school; also a college. Off of a salary of three or four hundred dollars a year, father kept us in school, the youngest of us in the public school, the oldest in the college. The average father could never have performed this heroic feat. Certainly, it must have been done through prayer, for prayer has wrought wonders among us. And yet educating a family on this pittance was nothing short of miraculous. Four hundred dollars today would last the average college student about three months. And nine of us had to live on this, and seven of us were in school.

My five sisters were very pretty; and though only a chap of six or seven years, I was very proud of their fine friends and their popularity. They loved companionship, and what humiliation must have been theirs, must have been my mother's—to have these friends see our home, our three rooms with the broken windows, the trundle-beds.

Such humiliation was not false pride. It was sadly justifiable. How many, many times would I walk along the streets of the town gazing wistfully at the attractive or even respectable homes, wondering why we could not enjoy such respectability! And that was not a childish wish. It is just as strong today.

Why Must it Be this Way?

Why must the parsonage be the worst-looking place in town? Why cannot the preacher live as a respectable citizen should live? I have suffered the tortures of the damned because of these parsonages that have been our lot—stuffy, crowded rooms, never a sufficient number even for a small family, odds and ends of furniture that a junk dealer would not have, no grass, no flowers, no beauty anywhere. Our lives starved for this sort of thing. And I dare any one to say that these desires were unworthy.

Four years at this appointment, and our next home was a larger circuit and a larger town, with possibly a hundred dollar increase in salary. The parsonage was some larger, but still inadequate, and the furniture meagre and ready to fall to pieces, as was the whole house.

Uncertain and Scared.

Moving to this new charge was my, together with some of the other children's, first experience in riding on the train. It was a great occasion. For weeks nothing else had filled our minds. When the important day came, it found us uncertain and scared. The services of the whole train crew were enlisted to get us aboard safely. Even today our mother relates this story with the greatest relish.

Why Patched Breeches.

I was not a happy boy. I was bookish, timid, and could not understand why I had to wear patched breeches and worn-out shoes and suffer the jibes of my schoolmates. The agonies that I suffered from those comparisons are just as keen today as they were twenty years ago. I was not permitted to play with the boys of the neighborhood. It was a smutty crowd. As a result, I suffered torments when they caught me "untied from my mother's apron-strings." A jibe hurled at me one day is painfully fresh in my mind today: "He is a preacher's son. His daddy has to beg for a living." Just to what extent does that express the general attitude of the public today?

The Chickens.

I found pleasure in reading, and in tending the chickens. I haunted the town library, reading everything from Mary J. Holmes to Dickens, Scott, and Hugo. The chickens were my special charge. And even today nothing appeals to me more than a yard of fine chickens. I always managed to have two or three pets among the flock. "Old Dominick" was my particular favorite, and telling her good-by every morning before leaving for school was a religious ceremony with me.

The Power of Prayer.

To my mind, the power of prayer is the most wonderful part of the Christian's life. How many, many times have I seen the earnest prayers of my parents answered when there seemed to be no way out, no solution to some of their many problems!

Lots of Fun.

There was lots of fun in our home, despite lack of room, lack of money, and lack of most everything else but religion. At Christmas times we children were wildly pleased with the pitiful attempts of old Santa Claus to make the best of second-hand toys, books, etc. Our good neighbors always proved their charity by unloading such things off on us at this time of the year. Home mission work! Mother would celebrate our birthdays occasionally by baking a wonderful cake and asking in a few friends.

My sisters were growing prettier and prettier, and there were beaux to be considered. There was no place in our parsonage home to receive them, and no pretty clothes for my sisters. Nothing but bare necessities, and those in only limited quantities.

When I Licked the Spoon.

Oftentimes I would go with father to his appointments—"ride the circuit" with him. On one occasion we were entertained in the home of one of his stewards. There was jelly for supper, and as a youngster I was fond of jelly. I was permitted to help myself as the bowl of jelly was passed around the table. It was not possible for me to empty the spoon, as I wanted to, and so to make certain that the spoon would go back empty I calmly licked off the last bit of jelly. The meal went off happily enough. Father and I returned home in the course of the week. Father, evidently thinking that the scolding should come from mother, told her the tragedy of the jelly spoon. I do not recollect the details of the interview, but I was not permitted to forget the incident.

A Popular Preacher.

The years passed in quick succession now, fruitful years for our father. Invariably each appointment wanted him the full four years. Never have I seen a more popular man, loved by both saint and sinner alike, living a life of complete self-denial. Many, many times have I found him in the barn, in the garden, or in some other secluded place on his knees. It is here that he fights out his battles, wins his victories. Never shall I forget the long and serious illness of our baby brother. Medical skill had done all within its power. There was nothing more for human hands to do. And yet he was saved to us, brought back from the brink of the grave by the agonized prayers that I listened to night after night, incessant praying, not without avail.

My sisters were away at college preparing to teach. We were living in small towns then, with poor schools. It had long been my ambition to go away to school. We had almost given up hopes of having a comfortable or roomy parsonage. For years we had dreamed of a commodious "two-story" house. I would lie awake nights planning room after room, placing the furniture here and there—a flower garden and a well-kept lawn. How we would anxiously await news from each annual conference!

Wanted a Two-Story Parsonage.

Entertaining the presiding elder was always an event. And it has always been my father's happy privilege to claim the close friendship of them all. How I would long to ask the presiding elder to give us a good appointment, a "two-story" parsonage! Never in all my life have I heard my father complain about an appointment. But yet since I have reached manhood I wonder if justice is always rendered by the cabinet—the cabinet, that formidable array of presiding elders in formal session.

Our lot was cast in a small country town for four years. The good people would not give our father up in spite of the fact that a pious Baptist brother said that he would have us moved because he did not like the attentions I paid his daughter. About this time my prayers were answered, and the way was opened for me to go off to preparatory school. O how I prayed and prayed for this privilege! If I have no other qualification, I believe my belief in prayer would almost take me to heaven.

Prayers of My Parents Follow and Guide Me.

Three years in a good preparatory school was a wonderful advantage. Two years of teaching followed, and then a university course in one of Virginia's proud old institutions. The prayers of my parents followed me, guided me, spurred me on. And all the while they were struggling to keep body and soul together. Salaries continued around the six and seven-hundred-dollar mark. Parsonages continued small and inadequate in spite of the fact that my sisters were marrying and the family circle was gradually breaking.

Giving Mother a Nice New Dress.

How my young sister and I longed for a nice home into which we might bring our friends! I was now making my own money and able to gratify in a small way our mother's long-starved love for dainty, respectable clothes, flowers, and other beauties of life. How pleased we all were to see our pretty mother dressed in a nice silk dress, just like a girl! How eagerly have I bought dresses and hats for her! What thrills it furnishes me! And how young and beautiful our mother looks all dressed up! Her pleasure at this revealed to me with pangs of agony just how much she has missed these beautiful things of life that are so dear to the feminine heart. Who will dare say that a preacher's wife has no right to want such things? Let that be the attitude of old Brother Tightwad, and the good Lord knows their number is legion. But what fair-minded man or woman will deny a few human desires to us just because we are "preacher's folks"?

And at last we reached a circuit that boasted of one of the best parsonages in the Conference. It is true, it was not "two-story," but everything else seemed to be there. The good news reached me in a letter from mother. A real home, the letter read, with wide porches, nice rooms, closets, reception hall, study, bath, mirrored doors, and everything! It was almost too good to be true—a parsonage that we were not ashamed of. And on reaching home for the holidays we found that our dream was just about realized. We single children put our money together to fix up a real home. We bought attractive furniture, rugs, and draperies. We made the porches and lawn things of beauty. We had the most attractive home in town, an unheard-of thing for a parsonage.

The Preacher's Folks "Getting Too Fine."

And what happened? The good people of the Church looked on in amazement, and then the gossip started:

"The preacher's folks are fixing the parsonage up too fine."

"The preacher's daughter teaches in a college and holds her head too high and dresses too fine."

"The preacher's sons are dudes."

And when the time came to talk "salary" for another year, the good Church people shook their heads knowingly, clicked their teeth, and held on to their pocketbooks. So the presiding elder took pity on the preacher and gave him another appointment. There was honest regret on the part of the people at the change, but who was to blame?

Can one say that this criticism was justified? That our desire for a comfortable home is an unholy one? The laity of the Church do not understand the sacrifices that make up the life of the preacher and his family. Too often the laity pay the preacher grudgingly. Too often the preacher and his family are considered a public charge, no privacy given their affairs, their every action subject to gossip and criticism.

I had long known that it was the ambition of my parents that I enter the ministry. Various presiding elders and others had talked to me about the matter. It was the custom on one of the circuits that our father served to hold an annual camp meeting. These were great occasions. I was almost persuaded at one of these meetings to accept the ministry as my life work. Possibly it was the influence of the religious fervor that characterized the place. At any rate, the notion did not stay with me long. I honor and love my father for his profession. I honor and respect his self-denial. But I could not find it in my heart to endure what he has had to endure.

My father has educated a family of eight children in the best schools of Virginia, Tennessee, and Mississippi. He has done this on salaries ranging from three hundred to a thousand dollars a year. He has given his whole life to the Church. His work is always successful. He has never made a request for anything better. His life has been one long sacrifice. He has given his children a priceless heritage. But is the above an incentive for his sons to follow his profession? With sorrow in my heart, I must confess that I am doubtful.

FOUNDER OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY VISITS NORTH CAROLINA.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

Dr. Francis E. Clark, better known as Father "Endeavor" Clark, one of the most notable living Americans, spent Sunday, May 27th, in North Carolina. While he has been in this State before, probably ten times as many people came to know him through this recent visit as had ever met and heard him on any previous visit.

He is now in his seventy-second year, hale and vigorous, and as active physically and mentally as a youth. His hair has whitened, but his color is ruddy, and his eye bright and flashing as of yore. As an author, few men have as many books and pamphlets to their credit. His first book was written in 1874, and since that time he has followed this with more than three dozen others. This year he goes back to Dartmouth College to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of his graduation from that noted seat of learning.

As everybody knows, he founded the great movement known as the Christian Endeavor in Portland, Maine, in February, 1881. This society has covered the earth with its work, and today is found in every land and country with its five millions of members. The war did not seriously affect the society, but has only seemed to deepen the sense of need for such a liberal organization, which recognizes no denominational lines in its work for the uplift of humanity, and its effort to make Christianity practical.

Dr. Clark has crossed the ocean scores of times to visit foreign societies, and on five separate occasions has made a tour around the entire world. He has spoken in almost every land on earth, and has had his talks interpreted, perhaps, by a greater variety of interpreters than any living man. He has gathered around him those who have joined his work under a myriad varying conditions from a gathering in the splendidly beautiful Taj Mahal, in India, to the hovels of China, and the huts of the Pacific isles. In remote country places, an din the proudest capitals of the earth he has spoken upon the work dearest to his heart.

He possesses the gift of a wonderful personality; a strong and handsome physique, a voice of never-to-be-forgotten sympathetic tone, and a mind that quickly adepts him to every occasion and to any body of listeners.

A wek ago he was equally at home when addressing a large body of college graduates in a classic graduation sermon, and later taking active part in both afternoon and evening sessions of a county convention of his beloved Christian Endeavor. At the lunch hour he was freely mingling with delegates and friends, and winning new friends on every side.

He is deeply interested in all the sane literary movements of his time, and delights to recall his reminiscences of great men of letters he has met in all lands and countries. He knew Ralph Waldo Emerson well, and was present when Emerson delivered his last public address. He cherishes with great pride the traditional purity of American literature of the past generation. Spending some time at his summer home at Sagamore Beach, he is regularly found in active work in the Boston headquarters of the Endeavor Society each week, and during the winter spends all his time in his Boston home when not engaged in travel to further spread the work.

Week after week he contributes to his publication, the Christian Endeavor World, and is always clear and interesting as an author.

We have no finer example living of a man who had a great vision of service, and who has translated it into a reality in his own day. Day by day he witnesses the immortality of his own conceptions of life, and, in humble, sincere way, strives to do even greater deeds always. His visit made a profound impression, and the wisdom of his several talks and addresses made during this visit will live on in the lives of those so fortunate as to hear him. Dr. Clark has contributed to the advance of humanity as but few men have ever been enabled to do. It is a mark of his true nobility to find him profoundly grateful that he has been enabled to serve his times.

[Note.—Dr. Clark's visit to North Carolina, referred to above, was to Elon College during commencement week, when he delivered the baccalaureate sermon.—Editor.]

AT LAST, MULTITUDES ARE AROUSED.

Mr. Bryan Still "On the Firing Line."

There may have been a dark day, and there has been such a day, but a brighter one is dawning. The sun is rising, the clouds are disappearing, and the Word of our God shall stand forever.

The news is most heartening! The people are awaking to the true situation, and they are arising in the might and power which God gives them to stand by the Word of God as His revealed will.

Our Baptist brethren of the South have just been in their great annual session at Kansas City, Mo. They are aroused and they have spoken in no uncertain terms. You cannot very well misunderstand their meaning—they are for the Bible as the Word of God, and they haye said so plainly.

Many a time has this writer done his best to awaken the people as to the dangers of modernism, but they did not seem to realize that any danger as to the Word of God was confronting them. We thank God today that, though we were not permitted to arouse the multitudes, they have been aroused, and though by others, we rejoice in the awakening.

In the Kansas City meeting, it is said that 15,000 people assembled to hear Dr. George W. Truitt, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Dallas, Texas, preach on the words, "What Think Ye of Christ"? He is, perhaps, the strongest preacher today in all of our Baptist brotherhood. In his sermon, he made two very remarkable statements—statements that will ring throughout the ranks of the Baptist hosts of the South. These are the two statements, and it will do our people good to remember them:

"I think there is not a pastor in the nearly 30,000 Baptist Churches of the South who would for a moment call into question the virgin birth of Christ, His deity, His vicarious death, His bodily resurrection and His coming again." The second statement was a ringing declaration for loyalty to Christ and the Bible, as follows:

"Christ and the Bible must stand or fall together. And if critics succeed in destroying the Bible they will succeed in destroying Christ. But these critics are mistaken. We do not need any new gospel, or system of religion to reform or transform the world. We need a realization of Christ in the hearts of men everywhere."

If Dr. Truitt is right, as we wish he may be, then our modernist friends will realize how little impression they have made upon the hosts of the people of the South. Not one pastor in the nearly 30,000 Churches who does not stand by the Bible. For many years it has appeared as if the higher critics and their friends and sympathizers were largely in the ascendancy. But we believed all the while, as our writings will show, if the people could once be aroused to realize the situation, the modernists would seem like a ten-acre lot beside a ten-thousand-acre field—the hosts of the men and women who are true to the Bible and the Christ of the Bible would be so much larger. We rejoice to see this day, for it is a day of promise and of coming light.

These 15,000 of the Baptists of the South stood up in a pledge "to propagate the old-fashioned Gospel, embracing such fundamental tenets as the inspiration of the Bible, the virgin birth and deity of Christ, his vicarious atonement for the sins of the world, His bodily resurrection, and His coming physical return.

Ah, that must have been a time of times! The old-fashioned Gospel is still to ring through the Baptist pulpits of the South. We are not a Baptist, but not one in that mighty host rejoices more than we do in this triumph of the old-fashioned Gospel of the Son of God. There may be pessimists in this land, but it is not pessimism to believe in the old-fashioned Gospel of the Son of God.

But this is not all. Oh, no! It is even better further on. While our Baptist brethren of the South are in Kansas City, so aroused and determined to stand for the old Gospel, our Presbyterian brethren of the North are in Indianapolis, assembled in their great gathering. Hon. W. J. Bryan is there and in the saddle, leading the fight for the Word of God as the people's guide in the spiritual life. Mr. Bryan spoke on Sunday night, May 20, on Darwinism in that great city. The battle is on, and a great conflict is to be staged there this week. Mr. Bryan has sounded the keynote of his thought for that great assembly of the Presbyterians, and it is this, as expressed through the Associated Press: "I can promise you this, though: there will be nothing done in this assembly that will hurt Christianity without my protest being heard." And he will do it, for he is not afraid of the whole host of Darwinites. Mr. Bryan could not be elected President, although he got more votes in his first candidacy than did the man who was elected, but there has come to him a greater honor than being elected President of the United States, and withal a greater blessing to the country than being elected President, and that is, under the blessings of God, he was, as we see it, chosen to stem the tide of evolution, higher criticism and the new theology and turn it back, that it may go whence it came and die the death which belongs to it. Yes, sir, to the Peerless Bryan more than to any one man belongs the honor and bravery of turning back the tide of evolution, higher criticism and the new theology. It is a greater achievement than all he could have done as President of the United States, and as Dr. Harper would say, "And it was a layman that did it." We thank God for William Jennings Bryan, and may his tribe never grow less, but mightily increase till the end.

THE TRINITY.

(No. V of the Series.)

THE TRINITY OF THE EARTH, OR HIS FULNESS IN CREATION.

"Holy, Holy, Holy is Jehovah of Host: the fulness of the whole earth is His glory."—Isa. 6:3.

Scientifically speaking, the globe, often spoken of as the earth, is made of solids, liquids and gas; as we may say: earth, water and air. These are three elements of which everything is composed and, for all general purposes, everything exhausts itself in this analysis. We cannot go further. It is the very last word, and, therefore, we have no conclusion but that the earth (globe) is composed of three elements, and only three, and thus it is trinitarian.

Now, these are facts that do not have to be argued very much. We know that the earth is a solid, for we build our houses with it and upon it, we walk upon it, produce our commerce upon it, etc. We also know that it is a liquid, for we have our springs, brooks, rivers, lakes and sea, all of which come from it and is a part of it; and when one stands upon the edge of the burning volcano and looks down into a mass of fluid rock, he realizes that by the application of intense heat that which is so solid becomes a liquid. We also know that the earth is gas, for in the center of this volcano, we are told that there is a great column of steam arising and spreading itself in the heavens. We are sure then that the earth is not only a solid and liquid, but also a gas. It is thus that even the illiterate may understand most clearly that the earth is trinitarian.

However, it is not enough to know that the earth is composed of these three elements, but we must also know that the elements themselves are threefold in their manifestation. We learn this by the application of heat and cold, etc. In the example of the volcano, by the application of heat, we watch the solid become a liquid, and liquid a gas, and the gas arises in the air in the form of steam. Apply cold and the steam turns to water, and by continuing the process becomes a solid (ice) and you can cut it, etc. It is thus that we become acquainted with each element as it completes itself in its threefoldedness, and we do not know it completely until we are familiar with these facts.

In this argument, there is no conflict with the argument of substance, form and force, given in the third article of this series, for the unity of earth, water, and air is substance, form and force, and this unity is the one thing we call the globe.

In order to make the doctrine of the trinity clearer, let us examine it in connection with the common element most familiar to us all—water. Dr. Lanier, in his book, "The Kinship of God," says that water cannot exist at all except in the elements given, viz: solid, liquid, and gas. These three constitute the operative force of water, yet the liquid is not the solid, nor is it the gas; nor is the solid liquid, nor is it the gas; nor is the gas the liquid or the solid. Each are separate and distinct realities of the one thing called water. So that water is solid, and it is liquid, and it is also gas, and vice versa.

Dr. Lloyd reminds us that water has a threefold function in its action. As a solid it freezes us. As a solid we walk upon it, carry it to our homes, and handle it; it also becomes the source of innumerable streams in the north. As a liquid we sail over it, as a gas we breathe it, drive locomotives and even fly over the earth and clouds with it. As a solid, it does things it cannot do as a liquid or as gas; as a liquid, it does things it cannot do as a solid or as a gas; and as gas, it does things it cannot do as a liquid or as a solid. As a unity, it is a very simple thing—just water; but as a trinity, it is a very diversified, for in a solid form it becomes the source of a great refreshing; as a liquid, it is not only refreshing, but a necessity in health and one of life's greatest utilities; and as a gas, it is the power of the world.

It seems that this is enough. Is it not all beautifully illustrative of the threefoldedness of God? The unity of water exists in solid, liquid and gas. The unity of God exists in Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. As the elements of water are separate and distinct and yet it is all water, so God exists in His three persons or realities. The Father is not the Son nor the Spirit, and the Son is not the Father nor the Spirit, and the Spirit is not the Father nor the Son, but all are one solitary God, or Godhead.

As the elements of water have each their individual function, so the Father does things the Son cannot do; the Son does things which only the Father can do through him, and which the Spirit cannot do, and as a Spirit, he does things he cannot do as the Son or Father; and as ice is water, and liquid is water, and gas is water, so the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God. This enables us to say, "God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost."

Thus, what is known of the trinity is not confined to God alone, but all nature is a trinity, and as all nature was created by Him and is a revelation of Him—His creative power, plan and thought—we cannot help believing that the "Fulness of all creation (earthly and heavenly) is His glory." Reasoning from nature to God, therefore, we believe that infinite life is trinitarian life. Oh, earth! three in one, the fulness of His glory. Oh, God! three in one, "The fulness is His glory." H. E. ROUNTREE.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PROGRESS.

Organized Sunday School work has meant progress in reaching the youth of our country in every State of the Union. The term, "Organized Sunday School Work" means an associated effort on the part of all the Sunday School workers in a given territory for the purpose of Sunday School improvement. The State of Pennsylvania, which has 11,000 Sunday Schools, has a great report in the way of achievement during the past year (1922). The report shows 8,252 new students enrolled in teacher training classes; 3,117 teacher training students finished the course and received diplomas; 486 new adult Bible classes, and 1,452 Young People's classes were registered. The Sunday School enrollment of the State now numbers 2,205,728, or 25.3 per cent of the State's population. This is one-sixteenth of the entire Sunday School enrollment of the world; 54 per cent of the Sunday Schools have home departments, and 75 per cent cradle rollers. An average of 5,000 Conventions, Institutes, rallies, etc., are held yearly; 72,913 accessions to Church membership have been reported the past year. This is a part of the contribution which this great association is making to the Church growth of the State. The organized Sunday School work in Pennsylvania, therefore, is an interdenominational, associational activity, working in harmony with denominational practices for Sunday School improvement.

The liquor interests of the United States are making a desperate effort to have the eighteenth amendment repealed, but they have a task before them. Somebody has even gone so far as to get foreign countries to withdraw their steamship lines from our ports because our government will not allow them to bring liquor to this country. Only one instance of this has occurred, we believe, as yet, and that is Spain. But Spain will be hungry to get back to do business with our country if she does not get back till the eighteenth amendment is repealed. It is a fact, however, the friends of prohibition need to keep their eyes open and on the movements of the liquor business, for they are determined, if they can by any means, foul or fair, to get to the dreadful work of ruining the lives of multitudes of our people by the reintroduction of liquor. Let us stand fast and keep a close watch on what they are doing.

The Life Message of a Heroine.

"Grant us the will to fashion as we feel,
Grant us the strength to labor as we know,
Grant us the purpose, ribbed and edged with steel,
To strike the blow"!

—John Drinkwater.

God needs heroes and heroines who have the courage to live up to their revealed duties and opportunities. Their response to divine visions makes them heroic. To translate desires and purposes into action for good is the work of His children. Thoughts and impulses are given by Him to be expressed for Him. His people still need saving, not from the treacherous plot of a Haman, perhaps, but from the more dangerous snares of sin. Esther came to the Persian throne at a time when she could render an inestimable service to her people. Great crisis have always leaders and deliverers. Some one is called to perform every task which needs to be done. Where are you? What position do you occupy? "Who knoweth whether thou art not come to 'your' kingdom for such a time as this"? For such a duty as that? For such a privilege as this reform, or this Sunday School class, or prayer meeting offers. Who knoweth?

The story of Esther is a great drama. Can you see the picture which it presents of beauty and religious and patriotic appeal? Read the story as a whole, and with your mind's eye see the scenes of the narrative portraying love and hatred, courage and selfish pride, ardent patriotism and self-gratification.

The first scene shows a royal palace, a place of wealth and luxury, with the conclusion of a feast which has been going on for one hundred and eighty days. The king, a lover of pleasure and of wine, which flows freely, calls for his beautiful queen to display her charms to the drunken princes in the midst of the carousal. She, with noble courage, refuses, and is banished from the royal court.

Next, maidens from far and wide are summoned to find a new queen. Among the throng is a beautiful Jewish girl, about sixteen or eighteen years of age, who wins his love. A great feast is prepared. Many gifts are given. The crown of Vashti is placed upon Esther's head, but her Jewish descent is not revealed. Even greater is her favor in the king's sight, after Mordecai, her foster-father and uncle, revealed a plot on the king's life, and through Esther the danger was averted.

The third scene introduces the villain—the wicked Prince Haman, who is promoted to high honor. His nature is far foreign to that of his princely position. He is selfish. He feels that all men should bow to him. When Mordecai refuses, Haman's ire is aroused. To satisfy his pride and to avenge that single enemy, Haman secures from the king an edict that all Jews shall be killed on a certain day. He pictures to the king that they are a foreign race, with strange customs, a menace perchance to the kingdom. He enlarges upon the ten thousand talents of silver which will come to the king's coffers. With little real thought, the king granted the edict. Haman is satisfied and joyful and the city is perplexed. Mordecai puts on sackcloth and ashes and mourns.

In the fourth scene the queen hears of her kinsman's grief. She learns of the royal edict. She hears from Mordecai the challenge to help her people. Well she knows the penalty of going unbidden into the king's presence. Even her Jewish blood was unknown to him. A more selfish and timid girl would have thought first of her own comfortable, safe position in the palace, where she might escape harm. But Esther goes with the spirit "If I perish, I perish," believing it far better to die having done her duty than to fail her kinfolk. But her beauty wins the favor of the king. Tactfully she invites him and Haman to a banquet, and then to a second feast. Haman is happy, thrilled with the honor of being a favored guest, as he thought, of the queen. Only Mordecai's presence at the gate worried him.

The fifth scene brings the climax. The king is hearing at the midnight hour the chronicles of the kingdom. He finds the record of how his life was saved by Mordecai's report of the plot of the false chamberlains. He asks what the reward of Mordecai was. The answer was "Nothing." Consulting Haman regarding what honor should be given to a man whom the king delighted to honor, he is told that the man should be given royal apparel, should ride on the king's own horse and ride through the streets while a herald proclaimed to the people, "Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honor. For Haman thought that surely he himself was that man. Picture his consternation when he found that the man was his enemy, and imagine his feelings as he proclaimed Mordecai the man of royal favor! In the midst of his gloom and remorse, Haman is summoned to the queen's banquet table. Here his duplicity is completely revealed. Here Esther pleads for her life and the safety of her people. And Haman is hung upon the gallows prepared for Mordecai.

The closing scene shows Mordecai's promotion. Heralds are sent hither and thither to tell the Jews that they may defend themselves. The royal decree cannot be wholly reversed. Bloodshed marks the day which had been set for the destruction of God's people, but they were safe. Upon Queen Esther's request, Haman's ten sons were hanged. She, too, possessed the spirit of vengeance of the day. The feast of Purim is instituted, "days of feasting and gladness and of sending portions one to another and gifts to the poor." Next to the king stands Mordecai, the Jew great among his people, always "Seeking the good of his people, and speaking peace to all his seed."

The story of the patriot queen brings its own lessons. Religion and patriotism cannot be truly separated. High rank imposes many a responsibility, as well as opportunities. God plans to care for His own. In the time of danger, the great leader appears. What a tragedy if the call is unheeded!

The divine call is for faithfulness at all times, for courage to live up to convictions of right, for vision to see others before self. Esther-like heroes and heroines have a great opportunity and a great influence. Her courage, her devotion, her wisdom form the spirit of the story loved by Jew and Christian.

"Knowledge we ask not—knowledge Thou hast lent;
But Lord, the will—there lies our bitter need;
Give us to build above the deep intent,
The deed, the deed."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

June 17, 1923.

Subject: "What are Some Reforms that Call for Our Help"?—Luke 3:7-14.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

John the Baptist was a reformer who spoke his message frankly and fairly. To arouse consciences dulled by sin, plain speaking is necessary. To speak lightly of the wrong, to compromise with the sin is to allow it to grow and flourish until many lives are lost. John hesitated not to point out that surely a day of judgment was coming.—Verse 7.

A godly father is a constant inspiration and help, but judgment comes to you, for your deeds, and you must answer for them—not father—Verse 8.

A life is judged by its fruits. This is the unmistakeable teaching of John and of His Christ.—Verse 9.

Sermons preached and lessons taught should lead folks to say, "What shall we do, then"? Reforms come through me who see first the need of higher, better living, and then are seeking their share in the task.—Verse 10.

Love for humanity is the spirit which must guide to reform. Effort in the interest of men leads to unselfish concern for their best interest and comfort. To try to even things up is to show the Christian spirit.—Verse 11.

All men, when they truly see God, wish to mend their ways. Not only the publican and the soldier, but men in all walks of life are called upon to be just and peaceable and honest.—Verses 13-14.

All around are conditions that call for reform. Is it true that we "have eyes and see not"?

Great Church reformers have always seen wrong or injustice in Church practices, not in the Church itself, and labored without thought of self to purify the Church and extend its influence. So with Martin Luther in the Protestant Reformation. So with John Wesley in breaking away from the Church of England. So with James O'Kelly in leaving the Methodist Church.

"Am I My Brother's Keeper"?

Reformers are men and women big-hearted enough to be the keepers of their brothers and sisters.

"They must upward still, and onward who would keep abreast of truth." Reform is "upward" work, and is lasting only when done in God's name and by His power.

"To side with truth is noble." Reformers are noble heroes. It is easy to travel the way of the crowd.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Ask five members to look up the lives of great reformers and tell briefly of their life and work. These might be Frances Willard, William Lloyd Garrison, Abraham Lincoln, Martin Luther, Billy Sunday and other great evangelists, John Bright.

Questions for Discussion.

(1) Is there need for reform in our community?

(2) What responsibility has the C. E. Society in reform work?

(3) Has a Christian, or any one else, a right to do things which influence others to do them to their harm?

(4) What reforms are most needed in our nation today?

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "Take Time to be Holy." "The Victory May Depend on You," "Make Me a Channel of Blessing," "In the Service of the King," "My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

A Sunday School has been organized recently at Wood's Chapel, with Mr. Shiflett as superintendent.

Winchester Sunday School won the banner again in the Valley Convention. Bethlehem was a close second.

A Sunday School class in New Hope Sunday School recently made a contribution to assist in purchasing a Ford for the pastor in Carroll County, Va.

Leaksville reported the benefits gained from a regularly held Workers' Council for their new Sunday School Library, and is planning soon to regrade the Sunday School.

Winchester has recently organized a Junior Christian Endeavor Society, with twenty on the roll. Miss Anna Amelia Seabright spoke on its work at the Valley Convention. Miss Frances Richards is secretary of this new Society.

Dry Run Sunday School, in its annual report, through its superintendent, Wesley Ritenour, showed that more money had been contributed for benevolence the past year than for the Sunday School itself. This is a fine report and a noble example.

The Board of Religious Education has lost a valuable member in the person of Mr. P. T. Hines, of Raleigh, who resigns because of removal to Birmingham, Ala., June 1st. His presence and counsel at the board meetings will be greatly missed.

Liberty (Vance) Christian Endeavor Society held a special service, with a pageant, Sunday night, May 20th. There was a fine crowd and good interest. This Church is planning the organization of a Junior Christian Endeavor Society.

A resolution was introduced, and passed by the Virginia Valley Central Sunday School Convention which should mean a greater work in Christian Education in the Valley.

Mt. Olivet (Greene) has a fine Sunday School, under the leadership of Mr. Morris. The teachers meet every Sunday a half hour before the Sunday School session to discuss the lesson together. This Church always has a fine Young People's meeting every Sunday night.

"Just as enthusiastic and twice as big as last year," is the slogan which Mr. Stephenson, president of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention is issuing in looking forward to the Catawba Springs Convention. Let every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society now begin to plan to be represented at this "greatest Convention." The Executive Committee is working hard to have a fine program. Write Mr. Stephenson any suggestions regarding the Convention.

Among the activities of the Winchester Sunday School the past year have been contributions to missions, the orphanage and the Near East Relief, supporting of a child in the Near East, the election of a mission secretary and regular missionary instruction in the Sunday School, a good average attendance and a drive for new scholars seeking to increase enrollment at least 10 per cent, observance of "Decision Day." Thirty have not missed a Sunday since the beginning of the year.

Chautauqua plans are moving forward. Has your Church begun to plan to send one or more representatives to take advantage of this great gathering? The evening programs this year will be especially attractive. "Burlington Night" comes first. Then "North Carolina Night," with Mr. C. H. Stephenson to preside and Rev. W. D. Parry to speak on "The Great Game of Pretend." Dr. Staley will preside on "Virginia Night," and Dr. I. W. Johnson will speak. W. B. Terrell, of Burlington, has charge of "Young People's Night," and Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., speaks. "Greensboro Night" comes on Friday, and Rev. John G. Truitt will speak on "We Are Debtors."

GOOD NEWS FROM NORTH CAROLINA JUNIOR ENDEAVORERS.

Recently four strong Junior Christian Endeavor Societies in the North Carolina Convention have reported to the State Secretary. The work along this line is especially encouraging, and more of the Churches should have societies, that they may have the boys and girls lined up for active Christian service. Henderson and Elon, Burlington and Raleigh are leading out in this work, and other societies are doing fine work. Miss Fleda Summers, of Raleigh, is interested in helping to organize new societies or to strengthen old ones whenever she may be called upon for service or information.

Henderson Junior Christian Endeavor Society has forty-eight members, and all, even to the youngest, are very much interested in the Christian Endeavor work. In addition to the regular officers, the society has three active committees—flower, sick, and lookout. A special effort is made to study the Bible, and every member is ready to respond to the roll call with a Bible verse, and about twenty-two will take part in sentence prayers. Six members were promoted to the Senior Society in the winter, and two to four new members join nearly every Sunday. Ten dollars was given by this society to furnish a society room, and it has also contributed to local expenses, Christian Endeavor work, Salvation Army and the Orphanage. Mrs. W. O. Cunningham, the efficient superintendent of this live Junior Society, is very proud of her Juniors, and well may she be.

The Elon College Junior Endeavor Society was reorganized last June, with Mrs. C. M. Cannon as superintendent, and eight members on roll. The roll now has about forty members recorded. The society lost one good member and valuable officer in the death of Miss Addie McCauley. After the fire at Elon, the Juniors went around and gathered together enough song-books for use in the Church and Sunday School services. A pageant and special service were given before the religious organizations of the college recently. The influence of this society is spreading, for these Juniors are planning to help organize a society in a nearby Church. Twenty have enrolled to take the Junior Expert Course, and ten have subscribed for the Junior Endeavor World.

Forty-six Juniors are enrolled in the Burlington Junior Society, and nearly all are subscribers to the Junior Endeavor World and take part in every meeting. From twenty to twenty-five will lead in sentence prayers. Burlington Society has the missionary spirit. Scrapbooks have been made for Miss Stacey, Burlington's representative in Japan. Every third Sunday night is "Missionary Night," and the offering given goes for foreign missions. The children are now planning to write to the children of Miss Stacey's kindergarten. The Juniors have also helped their own Church, in many ways, including writing to non-Church members, inviting them to Sunday School and preaching. Miss Lillie Horne is the superintendent who is leading the Burlington boys and girls in their splendid work.

Miss Fleda Summers, superintendent of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Raleigh, and also Junior superintendent for the North Carolina Convention, writes the following concerning the work in North Carolina's capital:

"The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the First Christian Church at Raleigh has on roll about thirty members at the present time. Approximately twenty of these are active, while the other ten just come and take part occasionally.

"We have the following committees: Prayer-meeting, lookout, social, missionary and flower. Each of these have been assigned definite work.

"We have one business meeting during the month, which takes place of our regular meeting on the first Sunday. At this time the chairman of each committee is supposed to read and turn in to the secretary a written report of the work his committee has done during the month prior to that time.

"We try to have one social during each month. Our socials, as well as our meetings, vary. This month we are planning a weiner roast and picnic combined. The girls are to bring the supper and the boys the weiners.

"Our society has pledged $25 to the new Church, to be paid between now and the first of July. At this time we hope to see our way clear to make another pledge. We have already made $20 of this amount by selling candy. We ordered $60 worth of candy from a concern advertised in the Christian Endeavor World. We want to get a copy of this paper in the home of every member if possible.

"About the first of June—as soon as school is out—I am going to give a course in Junior Christian Endeavor work. Quite a number of Juniors have already expressed a desire to take this course."

Who will be next to tell of progressive Junior Christian Endeavor work?

WHY NOT ASK YOUR NEIGHBOR?

—To enjoy the good things of life with you? Do you enjoy your Church paper, and are you pleased with it? If so, tell your friends and let them participate in these joys. Your Church is trying to give you the best attainable, and you should accept the challenge to do your part. Do some real missionary work by getting one or more subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Try it!

TO CHECK THE CONQUEROR.

Caesar crossed the Rubicon in 49 B. C. For many centuries it has been considered a fateful crossing. There is a crossing hitherto unnoticed by historians, but every whit as fateful, if not as historic, as the tramping of the Thirteenth Legion across the little Rubicon. This is the passing of the boll weevil from Mexico to the United States in 1892. Up to 1911 this seemingly invincible conqueror had ravaged 26,880 square miles. In 1921 he had ravaged 600,000 square miles, which is eighty-five per cent of all cotton lands in this country, leaving only 105,000 square miles unattacked. Last year cotton to the value of $600,000,000 was destroyed by the boll weevil, and it is said that if all the collateral damages could be calculated, the total would be over a billion dollars. The only near-effective means of combating this scourge to cotton is calcium arsenate. Twenty pounds to the acre is necessary. A great many farmers, through proper watchfulness, can make effective the watchfulness and labors of every other farmer in the community. The invading pest travels on every wind, especially on the south wind. Furthermore, there is not enough calcium arsenate in America to be used on half the acreage affected. In the meantime, the conqueror is pushing his conquests farther north every year. Last year the advance guard passed from South Carolina into North Carolina. In view of all these facts, we are glad to announce that the American Cotton Growers' Association has determined to spend $2,500,000 this year in fighting the boll weevil. They have chosen as the leader of this movement Dr. Miller Reese Hutchison, for years chief engineer of the Edison interests. Dr. Hutchinson announces that, while he intends to make exhaustive investigation, he will begin at once to co-ordinate the knowledge, material, and money already at hand and try, with improvement upon the present method, to minimize the damage. Here are our good wishes for this important enterprise.—Exchange.

"WITH RELUCTANT FEET."

ADAPTED.

Grandmother Minter has a queer, old-fashioned way of describing things, but her expressions usually tell a story. When she sees her young granddaughter, Bertha, doing her daily tasks in a haphazard sort of way, she says calmly:

"Never mind, that girl is just between hay and grass—too young to be good hay and too old for good grass." And quaint as her expression is, one gets the point without difficulty. Grandpa would have expressed it in his own terms something like this:

"There never was a between-season time that didn't have equinoctial storms. Wait till she gets growth, these sudden showers will cease, just mark my words."

Sudden showers there are, for she cries readily, and of course thinks that she has good reason for doing so. She is a fairly bright girl, stood well in her class at high school, and expected that her grandmother, who is "comfortably fixed," would send her to college. Grandma had never said so, actually, but she had seemed willing to do something worth while to help Miss Bertha. Had the rest but known it, grandma had waited long to hear some sort of proposition from her son, for she saw no reason why she should make herself entirely responsible, particularly when she saw Bertha's increasing tendency to buy the most extravagant sort of silk hose, hats, and correspondingly expensive frocks, coats, and furs.

In many ways, poor Bertha is not so much to blame as you might think. Her mother has always schemed to "get her in" with persons of influence. Bertha herself has not realized this, for naturally she chose the more refined girls as friends, and if it happened that their fathers were well-to-do doctors, lawyers, and business men, that was all the more reason why they could afford the daintiest of silk underthings, with all the newest accessories of every sort. To give Bertha full credit, she is always willing to make such garments as she can, to "do over" hats, to perform a dozen little economies to keep up appearances with the least possible expenditures.

Since she had completed her high-school course it became necessary for her to earn her living. Now it happens that her father is well acquainted with the owner of the town's department store, a man who noted Bertha's attractive style and pleasant manner. When he learned that she could not afford to go away for further education he told Mr. Minter that he could make place for Bertha in the store, with a chance to rise in the business if she did good work. Although it was not exactly what appealed to Bertha's girlish ambitions, she accepted the offer gratefully.

She has been in the store six months, and while she works hard she is learning a lot, and should be advanced gradually until she becomes head of a department, and perhaps later a buyer. This progress, however, does not come in six weeks, nor six months, nor always in six years, so she is beginning to grow a bit dissatisfied, especially at vacation times when the other girls come home and enjoy a round of parties and feasting in general.

While she seems a trifle listless, this experience is really proving a good one for Bertha. A short time ago she met a girl whom she had known in high school, one who graduated two years before Bertha.

"What are you doing now, Maizie"? asked Bertha, noting her friend's business-like manner and general air of prosperity.

"Oh, I went to normal school, you know, and now I'm teaching the first grade in the Quincy Adams School. I get $105 a month."

Bertha looked at her in amazement, for it is nearly twice what she herself receives. Then followed a series of questions and quick replies. Normal school, Bertha had never thought of that! She went home in a daze, and that evening announced to her family:

"I'm going to begin saving my money. If I take a course in normal school I can teach and earn twice as much as I do now; besides, I will have three months' vacation, and I'll be doing some good in the world."

Everybody was interested in her plan. Grandmother Minter, in particular, paid strict attention to Bertha's proposed outline. Without saying much about it, she had been worried about her granddaughter. The not exactly public affairs which Bertha attended were so nearly of that nature as to make her long to interfere. Then, to the surprise of everybody, she remarked quietly:

"Good for you, Bertha, I'll match you dollar for dollar on all you can save. I wanted to help you, but first of all I thought you should be willing to help yourself. I think you can make it by September, if we all work together to help the good idea along."

So little Bertha, who, as the poet said, was "standing with reluctant feet where the brook and river meet," is headed out towards the big river of experience. She is on the way to do something big for herself, to accomplish an undertaking worthy of her effort, possibly launching out upon a trip that will lead her eventually to college. Stranger things have happened. Keep up your courage, Bertha, all of us are "rooting" for you with might and main!

Called Home

ALBRIGHT.

Jesse G. Albright was born April 6, 1851, and died suddenly at his home in High Point, N. C., May 18, 1923, age 72 years 1 month and 12 days. He was married three times, and the father of eighteen children. He leaves to lament his death a devoted wife, ten children, thirty-seven grandchildren, three great-grandchildren, a brother, sister and quite a number of relatives.

Brother Albright moved his membership from Big Oak Christian Church to High Point during the time the writer was pastor there. He lived a consistent life while we were pastor, and he still had that testimony by his neighbors at his death.

He was held in high esteem by his friends and associates. His life showed his loyalty to his Church. Not many weeks previous to his departure he said: "He had a family in heaven and one on earth, but he was ready to go when his Lord might Call him." This was a testimony of his in a prayer meeting in his home.

He was a relative of several ministers in the Christian Church, and knew much of its history.

Funeral services were conducted from his Church Sunday, May 20, 1923, at 10:30 A. M. by the writer, and interment of the body was made in Prospect Cemetery, about three miles southwest of High Point.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

BRITT.

On March 17, 1923, the death angel came into the home of Mr. G. R. Britt and took away a dutiful wife and much-loved mother.

She was a cheerful sufferer for more than twelve months previous to her death.

Be it resolved, first, we, the members of Burton's Grove Ladies' Aid Society, lost a faithful member. In this loss we humbly bow to the wisdom of our Heavenly Father.

Second, we extend her family our loving sympathy, and pray His blessings upon them.

Third, these resolutions be placed on the register of our society, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun, and one to the family of the deceased.

On May 7, 1923, at Stuart Circle Hospital, Richmond, Va., in the full flower of her young womanhood, Grace Walthew West, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Jesse Felix West, of Waverly, Va., passed into the great beyond and was tenderly laid to rest a few days later in the Waverly Cemetery under a mound of beautiful flowers.

She had been ill about a month, and skilled physicians were puzzled at her intense suffering, failing to give any permanent relief or cure. The whole community was touched by her death and weep with those who weep at the untimely passing away of this young woman whom most had known from childhood.

Our deepest sympathy goes out to father, mother, brothers, relatives and friends, and we bid them look to the all-wise Healer for comfort, and "some time we'll understand."

Services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. Jas. L. Foster, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, and Rev. O. H. Gilliam, pastor of the Methodist Church, Waverly, Va. JAS. L. FOSTER.

When the little daughter was called away she and her husband gave their hearts to the loving service of the Master and united with the Christian Church at Raleigh, N. C. A sweet-spirited Christian wife and mother hath entered into that rest which awaits the trusting earth-worn children of this world. D. A. L.

BUDGET SURPLUS PREDICTED.

That the Federal budget for the year ending June 30, 1923, would show a surplus of more than $125,000,000 in revenues over expenditures was predicted by Secretary Mellon in announcing a May issue of $400,000,000 of 4¾ per cent Treasury notes. Government economics, record customs receipts and internal revenue receipts on a scale far exceeding expectations are responsible for removing the fears that the year would end with a deficit.

"Gertrude," asked the teacher, "what were the causes of the Revolutionary War"?

"It had something to do with automobiles, but I did not understand just what," replied Gertrude.

"Oh, no," said the teacher, "that was before the day of automobiles."

"Well, it said it was on account of unjust taxis," said Gertrude, firmly.—Chicago News.

BAN ON LIQUOR SHIPS UPHELD.

The advocates of prohibition enforcement have won a victory of the first magnitude in the decision of the United States Supreme Court that no ship, American or foreign, may legally bring intoxicating beverages inside the territorial waters of the United States. Even as ship stores or in bond or sealed, the transportation of liquors is forbidden. No loophole for the liquor smuggler is left. Seven of the nine justices concurred in the decision.

The purchasing power of the American dollar now is sixty-two and two-tenths cents, pre-war standard, according to Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale. Prices in this country average 166 per cent of the pre-war level.

Mrs. N. T. Farmer

CORNER-STONE LAYING AT ELON COLLEGE.

Speech of Honorable E. S. Parker, Delivered at the Corner-Stone Laying of the Alamance Building, Tuesday, May 29, 1923.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:

In the olden time, before King Charles II of England deeded and conveyed that territory that now goes to make up the State of North Carolina and westward to his beloved cousin, the Earl of Clarendon, and others, and when this country was a wilderness, known only to the red men, a ship landed on the coast of Virginia. It was a ship that had been built by citizens of France and in a French shipyard for German interests, and those French builders named it the "Almans," which is the French name for a German. The passengers on this ship were Hollanders. They were of a sturdy race, and they had come to the new world seeking religious liberty and possibly with the remote idea of carving out of the wilderness a new country. They drifted inward and finally came to a spot not far from here, where nature had done much. There were two small streams there, and the land was fertile, and these pioneers thought they could not find a better place, so they settled on and near these streams, and, as a tribute to the good ship that brought them to the shores of America, they named the larger of the streams "Big Almans" and the smaller "Little Almans." The spelling of the names of these streams was corrupted until the first time we find it written—it was "Alemans." Long after this, counties were formed in the province of North Carolina and that section where these settlers were become a part of Orange County. There has been some dispute among historians in North Carolina about the signing of the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence. We in Alamance have settled that dispute. We don't care whether that declaration was made on May 20, 1775, or on some other date! We know that the first armed resistance to British force—the first real stroke for American liberty—was when a group of sturdy patriots, led by Herman Husbands, defied England's power, first at Hillsboro, and then fought a real battle near these streams, and that battle in history is known as the "Battle of Alamance." Later, and previous to 1849, a giften North Carolinian wrote a novel, and the principal event in that novel was this battle, and he named his novel after the battle—"Alamance."

In 1849 the Hon. Giles Mebane was a member of the Legislature of the State of North Carolina and from Orange County. His home was near Mebane and in what is now Alamance County. He introduced and procured the passage of the bill establishing a new county, and the privilege was given him of naming the new county and the county town. He gave his wife the privilege of naming one, but announced that either the county or the county town must be named for Governor Graham. Mrs. Mebane took the privilege of naming the county, and, having just read the novel to which I have referred, she named the county Alamance. I believe from this that the word Alamance is not an Indian word, but that it comes from the name of a ship in which possibly the first settlers in Alamance came to America. I am indebted to the information about the ship and those settlers to a student of history, a non-resident of the State of North Carolina, who devoted much time to studying the early history of Virginia and the Carolinas.

Before the organization of Alamance County, this section of North Carolina had forged ahead. The lands were fertile, and before other parts of the State had come to see the possibilities in that line, Edwin M. Holt, with rare foresight, started the manufacturing business. In material things, Alamance County progressed until the name, Alamance Plaids, was known everywhere that cotton goods made in America were sold. They were made at the old Alamance Mill, situate on one of the streams to which I first referred. These old Alamance citizens, such as the Holts, the Stockards, the Longs, the Shoffners, the Mays, the Fousts, and others whose names still, if we should go back to their original spelling, support the historical accuracy of the fact that our first settlers were Hollanders, built and built well, and they were a folk of strong, simple faith. Very early they commenced to see the advantages of education, but to them, education, to be good, had to be Christian education, and it is especially fitting that the chairman on this occasion is a grandson of one of those old pioneers in prosperity, who recognized that real, lasting progress must be based not only on material, but on idealistic things.

Time does not permit me to go into the history of the progress of Alamance, but it was, I believe, a citizen of Alamance, and I refer to Dr. W. S. Long, now of Chapel Hill, who first brought into real being the dream of the Christian Church and procured the building of a Christian college, and, because the people of Alamance were what they were and are, the college was located here at Elon, and on March 11, 1889, it was chartered by the State of North Carolina. Of course, its early years were hard, but we who have lived here have seen it struggle upward and onward. The building that was destroyed was its first building. It kept growing and building and finally, about ten years ago, there came to be its president a man not old in years, but wise, tactful, vigorous and certainly, above all, loyal and devoted, and the college has gone forward until today it stands as one of the leading denominational colleges of our State and of the South.. You know, of course, that I refer to Alamance's honored citizen and Elon's loyal, loved president, Dr. W. A. Harper.

Just here may I say this: Some man in my profession has said that if liberty and the love of law should ever die in the United States, that its last gasp would be in the room of the Supreme Court of the United States.. If in the history of this nation, true Christianity, the fixed, firm faith of the fathers, should ever die, then I believe that its last stand will be made in the small denominational colleges. There we find fundamentalists—fanatics, if you please, but if they be fanatics then the faith of the fathers was fanaticism.

Alamance and the people of Alamance have in these years learned to appreciate Elon College and what Elon College stands for, and while I don't believe I would have had the courage to have stood before the president, the faculty and the students of Elon College on the morning after that fire that destroyed their building and have told them that that visitation was a blessing, I believe I could do so today. They realize what we of Alamance think of them. We of Alamance realize what Elon means to us. It is—it must go forward to greater things. With the material of young lives that come to it from many States, it builds and builds for the future, and builds upon a rock. It is good that this building shall be here, and it is good that it shall be known as the Alamance Building, and it is an honor and a credit to have had some part in putting it here.

And now, Dr. Harper, to you as representing the trustees, the students of Elon that are now here and that are to be here, to you as representing the work that Elon is to do, I, representing the people of Alamance, desire to say this: The people of Alamance do not erect this building as a payment of a debt they owe to Elon College, though the people of Alamance will admit that they do owe Elon a debt they can never pay; they do not present it as a gift to Elon College, though they will admit that Elon College is worthy of any gift that the citizens of Alamance could make it—but it is placed here, dedicated to a sacred cause, and it is delivered to you, impressed with a sacred trust, and that trust is that you use it as a part of your equipment for the higher Christian education of the youth of the land and of Alamance. Because of Elon's past record, the people of Alamance, through me, deliver this building to you, with absolute faith that you and your successors will be faithful stewards, faithful to the trust, faithful to Alamance, faithful to Elon; but, above all and over all, faithful to the cause.

A letter from De Valera, the Irish leader, to the republican army, urges the men to lay down their arms for the present, as further resistance is useless.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, N. C., called at the office of publication of THE CHRISTIAN SUN Monday of this week.

The First Christian Church, of Richmond, had "Children's Day" exercises on the second Sunday in this month and took its offering for religious education.

Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., announces the reorganization of the Eastern North Carolina Conference. Turn to his announcement in this issue and see for yourself.

The Proceedings of the extraordinary session of the Southern Christian Convention have just been received at the office of publication and are being put in type.

May 29, 1923, was a day of rejoicing at Elon College—it was the date of the laying of the corner-stone of the Alamance Building. In this issue we are giving our readers the address delivered on that occasion by the Hon E. S. Parker. Give it a good reading.

"Questions and answers" in this issue are of more than average importance. We ask our readers to read the questions and then the answers. We have tried to give the brother who asks the questions fair and impartial answers. The matters presented are of much value to the Christian Church.

We have two articles from Rev. S. L. Beougher, Graham, N. C., the first one of which appears in this issue. We especially ask for these two articles a careful reading on the part of every one into whose hands this paper may chance to come. He certainly makes some telling points on a subject of great importance to the public.

Rev. W. G. Clements has greatly improved since the Henderson Convention, when illness kept him at home during that Convention. He is yet very feeble, but able to get out a little. He is deeply interested in whatever concerns the building up of the cause of Christ. Let the prayers of the brotherhood go up daily in his behalf.

I was at the memorial exercises at Providence last Sunday A. M. Dr. J. W. Wellons, Judge W. P. Bynum and many other distinguished people were there. Judge B. F. Long delivered the address. It was full of historical information. Brother William and his wife came up from Chapel Hill, and so it came to pass that William, Jake, Ben and Dan were together once more. Brother Jake was too feeble to remain through the exercises. At night I went with my wife to hear a very good sermon delivered to a small congregation by Dr. G. O. Lankford, at Burlington. For some reason, the people do not appear to be very anxious to attend night preaching. Too often the prayer meetings are neglected, while, I am told, the "movies" draw large numbers all through the week, and in some places on Sunday nights, too. I go to Mt. Auburn next Sunday. The last time I heard from Deacon Thomas J. Haskins, of Mt. Auburn Church, he was still quite feeble.—Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., Franklinton, N. C. We regret to learn that Hon. J. A. Long is so feeble.

BEGINNING TO GIVE WAY.

It has been understood for quite a while that Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., though a Baptist, is an open-Communion Baptist. Now his pastor comes out squarely for open Communion. He puts a close question to the Baptist brotherhood. Here is his question:

"Do you suppose that in Heaven, when Communion is celebrated, that John Calvin, John Knox, John and Charles Wesley and other great leaders in the non-Baptist world will be denied the privilege of sitting with Baptists"?

That is quite a question, and we are anxious to see our beloved Dr. Pitt, editor of the Religious Herald, answer that question; but we doubt that he will undertake the task. But if he will not, will that not seem to say to the public that he cannot answer it without doing violence to Baptist usage. If he does undertake it, will he not have to press his conscience a bit to keep from coming out and standing with Mr. Rockefeller and his pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Woolfkin? Brother Pitt, we do not like to press too hard, but we really wish you would answer Brother Woolfkin's question before you go across the ocean this summer. You see, if you wait till you return, we fear you may forget to answer it when you come back. Anyway, we would like to have you answer it, and if you cannot possibly get time to answer it before you go, will you not kindly ask some other Baptist brother editor to take it up and answer it the best he can? We want to know what answer our Baptist brethren will give to that question.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN ROBERT HINTON.

John R. Hinton was born February 5, 1847; departed this life May 13, 1923. He leaves to mourn their loss his beloved widow, Elmira Hinton, and four children (three girls and one boy), as follows: Martha Edwards, of Gatesville, N. C.; Mrs. Fannie Rountree, of Norfolk, Va.; Mrs. Margarette Wilburn, of Bellhaven, N. C., and Oscar Hinton, of Norfolk, Va.; ten grandchildren and four great-grandchildren, and a large number of friends.

Bro. Hinton lived at the old homeplace seventy-five years, his father having moved there when "J. R." was one year old.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the home of the deceased, and burial was at the home cemetery. The flowers were beautiful. The yard was filled with friends from far and near. Bro. Hinton had two great interests to which he gave his life—home and Church. A good father, a loyal Churchman, a good neighbor and citizen, interested in all good works, an inspiration to all who knew him.

He was a faithful, loyal member of Damascus Christian Church, Sunsbury, N. C. His Church life covered fifty or sixty years. He was a deacon for many years, and continued to the day of his leaving us. He was a true gentleman and scholar of the old type. Two good wives preceded him to the great and good beyond. One—and none ever lived who was better—stood by his side to the end and comforted him in every way possible. The writer, too, has lost a dear friend, and wept with those who must feel their loss most.

Dear children, think daily of the love and example of that godly father. Surely his life will be an inspiration to the writer. Oh, the glory in a happy retrospect of a useful life such as his was! A life spent in love to others and service to others. The dear children have my deepest sympathy.

Let us meet "Uncle Tobe" on that great day in that great and glorious city, whose Builder and Maker is God.

Questions and Answers.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Question.—What is higher criticism? Higher is a comparative term, and so there must be a "lower" criticism. Give us the distinction, Bro-Editor.—C. B. R.

Surely there are two criticisms—the "lower" and the "higher." Lower criticism deals strictly with the text of Scripture and seeks to ascertain just what the true text of the various books of the Bible may be. The need for this kind of criticism is easily and readily apparent. You see, in the long ago, before the printing press was in use, copies of the Scriptures were multiplied by copyists—men who copied the whole book, or possibly parts of it, as the need might be. That they made mistakes in copying is not hard to believe. The first copy was made from the correct original, as it came from the hands of the author, the next copy may have been made, not from the original copy, but from the first copy made of the sacred book, and so on through the centuries. Now, if the man who made the first copy made a mistake, not intentional of course, then it was likely so copied in the next, and so on down through the ages. Now, the work of lower criticism is mainly to rid the Scriptures of any such possible mistake as was made by the copyist. It is therefore easy to see that the business of lower criticism is to do its best to eliminate any errors which might have crept into the copies made by man. In such work, errors are probable.

Higher criticism does not deal with the same matter as the lower, but it undertakes to show the age of the Scriptures, who wrote them, from what source the authors drew their facts and materials, and whether the same were the productions of one man, or two or more, etc. It also seeks to place a historical value on the various books of the Bible. As you can readily see, this form of criticism is liable to run into dreadful errors, and for the reason that it is wide open to the inroads of the imagination and to a misconception of the facts in the case. This is the main point of error in higher criticism. If it could be induced to keep itself in line with ascertainable facts, then it might have a real value in getting at the age, authorship, sources, whether simple or composite in character, whether historical or otherwise. Let us turn for the moment to higher criticism as it relates to the Old Testament. In many respects they have almost completely changed the facts as presented.

It may be interesting and instructive to inquire what effects it has had on Israel's life, history and literature, as presented in the Old Testament. In many respects this wild higher criticism has changed Old Testament till it does not resemble itself. They do not hesitate to dispute anything which their fancy conceives as being better in some other way, or as not at all. The higher critics claim that the Psalms were written mostly after the exile of the Jews. Do you say what difference does this make? It makes a great deal of difference. For instance, David is accredited as the writer of most of the Psalms. If the Psalms were written after the exile, they could not have been written by David, as the Bible claims, for the exile took place several hundreds of years after the time of David. They claim that Job and the Book of Proverbs were written not earlier than the exile. Job was written, according to the best authority we have, in the sixteenth century, B. C., and Proverbs, according to the same authority, was written one thousand years B. C., while the exile took place between five hundred and three hundred years, B. C. They claim that Daniel was written in the times of the Maccabees. Now, the Maccabees lived and flourished in about the second century before Christ, while Daniel is supposed to have lived in the early part of the seventh century, B. C. Now, we might have more confidence in the claims of higher criticism were it not for the fact that much of what they put forth as truth is arbitrary and conjectural. So many of their hypothesis are based upon a possibility, of a probability. They claim that before the time of Amos the Israelites had only a tribal god and that it was not till the coming and teaching of Amos and Hosea that Monotheism was Israel's ideal. The critical knife is applied by these men (at least many of them) to whatever in the Bible the higher critic does not approve. For instance, the supernatural element in religion is totally eliminated by such men as Graf, Kuenen, Wellhausen, Duhm, Stade, and others, and even by such men as do not eliminate totally, but little comparatively is left. One class of these higher critics is simply in advance of the others—that is the main difference. I mean the difference between the two classes of higher critics. The main difference between the lower and higher critics is that the lower critics are trying to present the Scriptures in the purest form possible, while the two classes of higher critics seem to seek to make the Scriptures conform to their own judgment, even if to do so it is necessary to cut out much of the content of their teaching.

Question.—What is the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience, as understood by our five cardinal principles? Should private judgment be respected? Should the liberty of conscience be frowned upon?—C. B. R.

I am glad you have asked these questions, for it gives an opportunity to clear up some things which are much misunderstood. I shall have to give you a bit of history in order to make sure of my interpretation of the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience, as taught among our people for more than one hundred years.

In the latter part of the eighteenth century human opinions played an important part in the life of the Church people, causing a great deal of confusion and bitterness among the denominations. It was out of this unhappy situation and condition that the Christian Church came into existence and began its work. There was no question as to the reliability of the Bible. It was the bitterness of opposition arising from conflicting human opinions that induced a few people (a few as compared with the whole) to come together on the basis of our five cardinal principles.. In proof of the correctness of this statement, one of these cardinal principles was aimed directly at this unbrotherly situation, and that was the fifth of these cardinal principles, which is as follows:

"The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all."

This cardinal principle was never designed to give to our people the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience outside of mere human opinions. It was never the thought of our fathers to call in question plain Bible statements, or to authorize any one, or any set of men, to repudiate any portion of the Word of God. So it seems clear that the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience were never intended to apply to the inspired Word of God. Therefore, in matters of human opinion, or human dogma, our people from the beginning had the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience. For instance, if an effort should have been made to make the Christian Church accept pouring or sprinkling as baptism, any man or any Church could at once have said: "We have the right to accept or reject these modes as we may please, since baptism is an ordinance in the Church, but the mode of baptism is quite another thing, and I claim the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience in the matter. But if some man should say he had a right to reject the idea of the forgiveness of sins because the right of private judgment was accorded to him by the Christian Church, he would, we believe, have been quickly told that the Bible is our only rule of faith and practice, and since the Bible very plainly teaches the forgiveness of sins, the right of private judgment gives no such authority to the members of the Christian Church. Neither is it true that a man can claim the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience in morals. Suppose a man should, under the authority of the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience, steal a horse and then claim exemption from trial by reason of the fact that the Church allows him the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience in such matters. He would be immediately told to get out of the Church, if he persisted in such a claim. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience do not give the right to reject any part of the Scriptures, or to disregard the moral law. However, it does give the right to any believer to accept or reject any merely human opinion in regard to Bible statements. You can reject the human opinion as to these matters, but you must not reject the Bible as such, for it is the revealed will of God.

Question.—What is the difference between the Gospel and social gospel? What does society mean? Can the Gospel be isolated from society? Can society be isolated from the Gospel?—C. B. R.

I am very glad to answer, as it may help some to clear up difficulties along this line. The Gospel is simply the good news of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the divine Saviour of the lost. The social gospel is largely a modern term linked on to the plan of salvation, and when so applied it simply means that to the salvation of men through the Gospel must be added the looking after good roads, the schools, amusements, sanitary matters, the good housing of the people and the great effort now so prominent in modern life of making the world a better place to live in. Be careful not to get mixed just here. The Gospel is the good news of salvation to a lost world through Christ. The social gospel, with all of the foregoing issues tacked on to it, makes an entirely different agency. The State is the proper authority for looking after good roads, good schools, good amusements, good sanitary conditions, good housing, etc. The good people of the Church will be glad to join the State in these good works, but the Church as an organization should give itself unreservedly to its divine mission, the winning of the world to Christ and the establishment of His Church in the world. If the Church should be induced to undertake, in addition to her mission to lost humanity, all these other humanitarian works, then there can be no doubt that her main efforts to give the Gospel to the world would be seriously handicapped, if not annulled. In these humanitarian works, the State must be the leader, and the Church people will gladly aid what they can, just as in the salvation of the world the Church under the guidance of the Holy Spirit must be the leader, while the State may help indirectly as she has opportunity. It is a foregone conclusion that should the Church tax herself to lead in all of these humanitarian works, then her one great mission must be greatly handicapped, if not permanently crippled.

Society simply means a combination of people or the relationship of people associated in any way to one another. Can the Gospel be isolated from society? Not from all society, but some society does voluntarily isolate itself from the Gospel. Can society be isolated from the Gospel? If you wish a concrete example, take the Soviet government of Russia. When society is isolated from the Gospel, it is the voluntary act of society. However, the Gospel must be related to society where it is to do the work of saving men from sin, but if it is wished to make the Gospel take of the several secular phases of society and make it do that work, it will be very largely to the neglect of the giving of the Gospel to a lost and dying world.

We have seen for several months that a great many professing Christians seem to think that H. G. Wells, the English writer, is just the man to introduce in the family circle, but we beg to differ from them. Mr. Wells is not far, in his personal beliefs, from infidelity. We commend to our readers the following:

"Several months ago, this paper called attention to the fact that the 'Outlines of History,' by H. G. Wells, which is appearing serially in several of the leading daily papers, was positively evolutionary in its teaching, in addition to being bad history. We seem to have been the only Baptist paper to warn our people against the dangers which exist in Wells' work. It may be our fellow-craftsmen have not seen the series. But vast numbers of people are reading them; and it behooves religious editors to find out what the people read. It does not get us anywhere to fight evolution as it is supposed to exist in a man whose faith in God's Book is unquestioned, and allow a real evolutionist to go abroad without let or hindrance. Dr. J. L. Hill is right in his characterization of Wells as a 'literary adventurer.' "—Baptist and Reflector.

Mr. P. J. Carlton has just returned from a business trip to Europe. His friends of the First Christian Church were glad to welcome him back.

THE PREACHER'S POWER: WHAT IS IT?

If the preacher has not power with God and over men, his ministry must be a failure—a decided failure. This being true, we have a most interesting question to consider, viz: "What is the preacher's power"? It is not common sense, it is not a fine personality, it is not a ready tongue, it is not learning, it is not the power to think profoundly, it is not a correct moral life, it is not the gift of social qualities, it is not in the influence of his friends, and it is not in the hate or dislike of enemies—for a preacher may have all of these and yet not be able to do the true work of a minister of Jesus Christ. It may be all of these with something else added, but all of these by themselves cannot give the true preacher of the Gospel the power he must have if he is to be used in any large way in the winning of the world to Christ.

Then, what is the power of the true minister of the Gospel? It may include all of the items mentioned above with the addition of a life that is fully consecrated to God under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, and therefore filled with God, the fullness of life from above. With such a minister, all of the items named above may become a great means of blessing in his ministry, but without the last gift named, his ministry will be a sad failure. Will the dear young ministers of the Christian Church hear us as we plead for their highest usefulness? Learn this one thing, and learn it in the beginning of your ministry: You must have the loving favor of God resting upon your life and your labors if you are in any worthy manner to be highly useful in the work of the ministry. First, not second and not third, and not fourth or fifth, but if you are to fill truly the place of a true minister of Jesus Christ, first of all get right with God and live in close communion with Him, and then get all the help you can from every source possible, and especially from true Christian learning. Christian education is a very necessary part of the equipment of the true minister of the Gospel, but let him be sure that it is not the one essential qualification. Never forget that first of all the true minister of Jesus Christ must learn to receive his power, as a preacher, from God. Having done that, it will be a delight to be a learner as long as you live, for God in the life will mightily stir your innermost being and create in you a great desire for knowledge. Paul's one predominating purpose was to know the great secrets of God as they might bear upon his life as a preacher of the Gospel of the Son of God. There is a notion abroad today in some parts of the world that the chief thing which gives the minister power is an education. Let us nail that idea to the ground and keep it there. It is first God, and then all the worthy and true education you can get, and the two will wonderfully equip your life for the ministry. You may get education and leave out God, but you will fail, and miserably fail. But get God for your heart and life, and with Him get all useful knowledge within your reach, for you will never know too much of what is good. If we could have been taught in the days of our early ministry this understanding of the ministry we should have been doubly blessed. As it was, we had to wait through many long years to learn the essential facts as to what constitutes the real and abiding power of the ministry. Beloved, the Church of Christ is suffering loss today by reason of the fact that so many have gotten the idea in their heads that the ministry is a profession and that its qualifications are such as much learning and good social qualities, a correct moral life, and the power to think profoundly, with a wide popularity in your field of labor. If you can get all these, and get them with the approval of God, they will greatly add to your ministry, provided you have first a right life under the approval of God.

The United Presbyterian has some excellent thoughts for young ministers, and the old ones, too, and these we give below and sincerely wish that every young minister who may have a chance to read, may do so, and be greatly blessed in his life-work. The article is illuminating and stimulating. Read:

Ruskin said: "For every hundred men who can hear but one can speak; for every hundred who can speak but one can think; for every hundred who can think, only one can see." Too many are like Wordsworth's "Peter Bell":

> "A primrose on the river's brim,
> A yellow primrose was to him,
> And nothing more."

Bushnell said that the first requirement of a minister was a great consciousness, a consciousness that sees great thing to be done and moves toward the doing with shout and song. Too many essay to be leaders who are no better equipped than those they essay to lead.

The age demands an educated ministry. The intellectual demands upon the minister are tremendous. More is required than intellectual preparation. Those who would become God's spokesmen must grasp the spiritual aspect of things. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned. This must begin with a right life. Otherwise, the vision will be blurred. One may know theology, but he can speak no healing message to the world until his spiritual vision has been cleared. He may be able to speak in intellectual terms, but not in spiritual syllables. A cleansed soul can see more than a trained intellect. People must see the man back of the message. Unless the preacher's life is right, his words will carry no conviction. He may have an intellectual grasp of truth, but he will have no gospel for the soul.

No one can be a great preacher who is not first a great soul. The man must be prepared before he prepares his sermon. A sermon out of the man and not out of the thing he tries to be on the occasion of its preparation and delivery. The message must be personalized in the preacher. Isaiah's picture of the Messiah, the Prophet, places the emphasis upon His character. He was to prophesy, but back of His message was to be His life.

Jesus always held before the people who He was as more important than what He did. Other religious teachers urged people to believe what they teach. Jesus commanded them to accept Him. Buddha taught that renunciation was the way to perfection. Jesus said, "I am the way." Plato bade his disciples "follow the good." Jesus said, "Follow Me." Pilate voiced the question discussed in the schools of his age, "What is truth"? Jesus answered, "I am the truth." His chief message to the world was His life. The Gospels are a history, not a system of theology. Being was the greatest word in Jesus' vicabulary. That was larger than His teachings and mightier than His miracles.

The supreme demand upon a minister is a right life. Moral beauty counts for more than intellectual strength. Character is a greater teacher than intellect. Xenophon said that the disciples of Socrates were more influenced by what he was than by what he taught. Emerson said to an inconsistent person, "What you are makes such a noise that I cannot hear what you say." The world must see as well as hear what constitutes Christ-likeness. Being is better than explaining. Goodness is the highest grade of power. Quality counts for more than quantity. Learning may convince, eloquence persuade, power compel, but the grip of a good life will hold when others are forgotten. He who would speak for God must live for God.

The greatest sermon is not the utterance of the preacher's lips, but the impress of his life.

SHORT TALKS ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

Numbers, the Book of Sojourning and Pilgrimage.

The historical narrative given us in the Book of Numbers covers about forty years of the history of Israel. It may be properly called the Book of Sojourning and Pilgrimage, or the Book of Wandering and Training of the Children of Israel.

Two numberings of Israel are recorded in the Book of Numbers. It seems to have been an effort to organize and equip a great company of 600,000 men, besides women and children, for their march to Canaan. That was indeed a great undertaking. The journey to the promised land began at Mt. Sinai. It was a good eleven days' March. When they reached the Kadesh-Barnea they sent twelve spies ahead to explore the land. The spies were gone on this mission of exploration about forty days, when they returned and reported. They were divided in their conclusions. As usual, the larger number were doubters—they were afraid to trust God and go ahead. When they reached the camp of Israel, they came in murmuring and declaring that they could not take the land—that it was inhabited by giants and a very dangerous people. They were opposed to any effort to go in and occupy the country because it was dangerous to deal with such giants. This was the view of ten of the commission, but there were two others who made quite a different report. They said it was a great land, rich in honey, milk and fruits, and they declared that they were well able to take it, and insisted on doing so. Fear is a great hindrance to the cause of God's people. It not only impedes progress, but it often kills institutions of great value. As these people proceeded, chilled by fear, they began to neglect their religion. It was a case of genuine backsliding covered thirty-eight years, and in all that time they celebrated the passover but once, and largely neglected circumcision. No wonder they made no progress. When they started out from Kadesh-Barnea, they thought they were going to Canaan, but after wandering around in the wildnerness for quite a while they found themselves again at Kadesh-Barnea, just where they had started from at least seven weeks before.

What was the matter that they came back? Oh, they had been afraid to trust God and go forward, and the result was they went round and round and then found themselves at the very point from which they started—they had made no progress whatever. That is characteristic of unbelief and fear. It starts, but it does not go. We cannot go forward when faith fails us. That is just what happened in this case. The Israelites, all save two, were in fear and dismay. Thank God that all of them did not give up. If they had, there is no telling what would have been the outcome of it all. Caleb and Joshua, the faithful two, did not relent. They were brave and true because trusting God. Unbelief and disobedience always stir up backslidings and so hinder the cause. Nothing good of any great value can be accomplished under unbelief and a faltering disobedience. Whenever rebellion is set up against God, no further progress can be attained. Rebellion must be given up, and not only so, but we must go back to the place where the rebellion began and where backsliding set in and get right with God. Then equipped with a holy courage which is upheld by a daring faith, the cause will march on to victory and to glory.

The numbering of Israel was most significant. There were times when it was forbidden. Even David was sharply rebuked for numbering Israel at one time, but later they were numbered seemingly with divine approval. It all depends on what the Lord wishes to accomplish. If He seeks to arouse the courage of His people, it may stimulate them to know how many of the Lord's chosen are present to work together to gain a common end. Numbering may be all well, but if the Lord seeks to strengthen their faith in Him as their Leader and Commander, then to number Israel might hinder their faith in Him, and the numbering of Israel, in that case, might be condemned as wrong. When he had Israel numbered, He sent them in four divisions, each division having three tribes. This numbering of Israel may have been as a signal to march to war. It was God's method of organization and getting His people ready for a crisis. If they rested, they rested in the shape of a hollow square, and if they marched, they marched in a hollow square. Within this square was the tabernacle at all times, resting or marching. The four divisions formed into a square seems to suggest the unity of the peeople of God as one body. The tabernacle kept in the midst also suggests the presence of God with His people, both for protection and leadership. What a beautiful symbol of the plan and purpose of God to have His people a unit with Himself in their midst. If the Church were thus united today with God in her midst, how surely should we go on to the most glorious victory over sin and Satan.

Tradition says each tribe had a standard—that is, one to each of the four sides of the square. Judah had as its standard the lion; Ephraim had the ox; Reuben had a man, and Dan had the eagle. Doubtless, each of these standards symbolized character. Perhaps the lion was the symbol of courage; the ox of strength; the man, intelligence; the eagle, swiftness. If so, what meaning could the Church of today take from these ancient symbols? Think of the Church of Christ as a foursquare, solid, as having God in their midst to take care of His own. Suppose under the illumination of the Spirit, the Church were as courageous as a lion, as strong as an ox, as intelligent as a man and as swift as an eagle, and then we should have a pretty clear idea of the power of the Church for the work to which it had been called and for which it has been endowed.

The camp regulations on this march kept in mind two things: (1) The health of the people. (2) The holiness of their character. These were vitals in their national and individual lives.

God gave them marching signals: (1) The cloud moving in the day to indicate the way they should go; (2) the pillar of fire to lead them by night; (3) the trumpets sounding might keep their attention to their great mission and the end to be gained. They were coming to the passage of the Jordan. God had given them so far priesthood, prophecy and law. These were stabilizers of the people and kept them going in the right direction till they were ready for their inheritance, when Jesus, our Joshua, would come to the front and lead them into the day of grace and into their inheritance of everlasting life.

There are three divisions of the matter of the Book of Numbers:

1. Preparations for the march from Sinai to the promised land.—Numb. 1:1-10.

2. Journeying from Sinai to Moab.—Numb. 10:11-21.

3. In Moab and getting ready to enter Canaan. —Numb. 22-34.

Now, get to your Bible and read and study it in the light of these mere suggestions.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

So much is said nowadays about science opposing religion that one, unless he is well read, can hardly tell where he is. We find in a recent issue of the Biblical Recorder a good brief presentation of this two-fold subject. It is from the pen of Rev. E. Y. Mullins, D. D., who is not only the president of the largest theological seminary in the world, but he is one of the ablest men of our day. As such, he has written well and to the point. Desiring our readers to have the advantage of his thought, we give his thought as follows:

1. We recognize the greatness and value of the service which modern science is rendering to the cause of truth in uncovering the facts of the natural world. We believe that loyalty to fact is a common ground of genuine science and the Christian religion. We have no interest or desire in covering up any fact in any realm of research. But we do protest against certain unwarranted procedures on the part of some so-called scientists. First, in making discoveries or alleged discoveries in physical nature, a convenient weapon of attack upon the facts of religion; second, using the particular sciences, such as psychology, biology, geology, and various others as if they necessarily contained knowledge pertaining to the realm of the Christian religion, setting aside the supernatural; third, teaching as facts what are merely hypotheses. The evolution doctrine has long been a working hypothesis of science, and will probably continue to be because of its apparent simplicity in explaining the universe. But its best exponents freely admit that the causes of the origin of species have not been traced, nor has any proof been forthcoming that man is not the direct creation of God as recorded in Genesis. We protest against the imposition of this theory upon the minds of our children in denominational or public schools as if it were a definite and established truth of science. We insist that this and all other theories be dealt with in a truly scientific way; that is, in careful conformity to established facts.

2. We record again our unwavering adherence to the supernatural elements in the Christian religion. The Bible is God's revelation of Himself through man moved by the Holy Spirit, and is our sufficient, certain and authoritative guide in religion. Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary through the power of the Holy Spirit. He was the divine and eternal Son of God. He wrought miracles, healing the sick, casting out demons, raising the dead. He died as the vicarious atoning Saviour of the world and was buried. He arose again from the dead. The tomb was emptied of its contents. In His risen body He appeared many times to His disciples. He ascended to the right hand of the Father. He will come again in person, the same Jesus who ascended from the Mount of Olives.

3. We believe that adherence to the above truths and facts is a necessary condition of service for teachers in our Baptist schools. These facts of Christianity in no way conflict with any fact in science. We do not sit in judgment upon the scientific views of teachers of science. We grant them the same freedom of research in their realm that we claim for ourselves in the religious realm. But we do insist upon a positive content of faith in accordance with the preceding statements as a qualification for acceptable service in Baptist schools. The supreme issue today is between naturalism and supernaturalism. We stand unalterably for the supernatural in Christianity. Teachers in our schools should be careful to free themselves from any suspicion of disloyalty on this point. In the present period of agitation and unrest they are obligated to make their positions clear. We pledge our support to all schools and teachers who are thus loyal to the facts of Christianity as revealed in the Scriptures.

AN AWFUL PREDICTION.

In the Sunday School Times of April 14, 1923, an awful prediction concerning the Church is made. This is the prediction: "It must be that nine Churches out of ten will soon be closed, and that there will be a half-score of preachers in the country who will be heard by 100,000,000 of people." On its face, that has the appearance of great gain, for the Gospel. However, upon thinking it over, we doubt that the gain is so real as apparent. Likely the Gospel is now preached regularly to less than fifty millions of people in this country. It may be more, it may be less. Our prophet who is predicting the closing of nine of our Churches out of every ten has in mind the work of the radio broadcasting the Gospel among the people. He thinks that ten preachers will then do the work now done by thousands. Is he right? Can the radio supplant the divine method of giving the Gospel to the world? We doubt it, and we doubt it because it is not the divine plan. "But," says one, "how do you know it is not the divine plan for reaching the masses"? It may be that we are mistaken in our opinion as to this matter, but it strikes us that the Lord of the harvest would not be likely to choose an instrument for the dissemination of the Gospel among the people, which is so largely given up to serving the devil's purpose in pulling down the kingdom of righteousness as the radio seems to be. It is largely in the hands of a godless corporation which fears not God and regards not man, except in so far as such regard can add to the gains, financially, of the said corporation. We do not believe that such an institution can supplant the divine method of preaching the Gospel to the world. "But," says one, "if the radio method is objectionable because the instrument is so largely in the hands of a godless corporation, so is the divine method, since preachers are imperfect men. Surely they are imperfect men, but they are not, as a whole, tied down to the world and obligated to serve its purposes. The preachers are imperfect, but they are given over to One who is able to give them great power for good among men, and He has promised to do that as they shall give themselves to Him in this great service. Paul said: "But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."

The reference is to the Gospel ministry—it is given to the world in earthen vessels—in men who have the weaknesses of men, but also the power of God. The radio lacks the power of the human touch under divine pressure. It is artistic, but lacking in the power of a personality and the direct appeal. We do not believe the radio can succeed the ministry appointed of God in giving the Gospel to the world. The loss of nine Churches out of every ten would be the greatest misfortune the United States has met in its history, for, as we believe, it would mean going back into paganism, or something as bad. Christ is building His Church, and we believe He will do it by the means He has appointed, and the Church is an important part of the agencies through which He works. God bless the Church and its work for His glory in the salvation of the world. Let us rally to the support and encouragement of the Churches that they fail not, nor cease to exist.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Discouragement and exultation are extremes in human experience, and both are liable to error. This may apply to any work or any undertaking, but it is eminently true in religious experience and Church development. Ecstasy follows great spiritual experience, and despair follows the long-continued absence of such experience in the individual Christian. In other days we find Christians shouting in one revival and kneeling at the mourners' bench at the next annual meeting. There are tides in religious experience as well as in "the affairs of men"; both have their "flood" and both have longer periods of seeming failure. There are periods of great opportunity and prosperity and longer periods of depression and even failure, but both are certain if not necessary.

In lowlands, beside rivers, it is not the floods that assure crops; sometimes the overflow destroys the crop, and the whole year of toil seems to be lost; but that flood leaves a deposit on the soil that helps its fertility years after; but the crops are made in that longer period of years when the river moves on in its course quietly, steadily, without excitement or roaring torrent. Revivals are the floods. The Church for the time attracts attention. Indifferent members are in their seats before the hour for service; sinners are there in the throng, and some of them are converted; old people attend, though at other times they are too feeble; invalids are wheeled up the isle close to the pulpit; young people and children crowd the place. Religion overflows its banks and carries everything on its foaming crest, and people look on in wonder. People say: "It is a powerful revival," and it is; but that flood will run down, religion will shrink back into its normal channel. The excitement outside dies down. The multitude is not there a few Sundays after. People are too tired to go. Some are too feeble. Others do not enjoy the regular services. They are too spiritually minded for regular worship.

The stream has retired, the plowmen are in the furrows again, the seed is cast into the soil, the slow process of cultivation goes on through the hot summer days; and they wait patiently for the harvest. Sometimes ministers and workers get discouraged in the midst of their work; but it is the work of those rainy days, hot days, cold days, part of the singers absent, Sunday School teachers absent, few listeners on the back seats, sermon too long, superintendent trying to make work go, members behind in payment of dues. It is the regular work, when the Church feels discouraged, that keeps alive the growth of the kingdom and the work of the Church. Work on in faith.

ELON LETTER.

I am no pessimist. I believe the world is growing better. I am loyal to the Christian Church. I believe she is growing better. I hope to live my days out in her service.

Our Church can grow much faster than she does, and our general officers can live more days to serve our Church if our brotherhood wishes it. I do not suppose any of our brethren would deliberately shorten the life, say, of Dr. Atkinson. Yet it is within our power to lengthen his life and service by co-operating with him in the work we have called him to do. I heard him say once that one minister in ten and one layman in fifty can be counted on to co-operate in general enterprises and to respond promptly to requests for information. Such lack of co-operation and sympathy is shortening the physical and official life of our public servants. We may not like the imputation, but it is murder by degrees. "Thou shalt not kill," declares the Holy Writ, which, for our brotherhood, means "Thou shouldest co-operate with thy Church officers." Failure to do so is—and the thought—slow assassination.

Elon's situation is desperately critical this year for two reasons. We are arising out of ashes and need large sums of money to pay bills. It is a case of go forward or quit. The Southern Christian Convention has requested each Church to celebrate "College Day" during June, July, or August, and to receive an offering, averaging, if possible, $1.00 per member, for Elon and Bethlehem Colleges. Every child that invests 10 cents in this offering will have a new appreciation of our colleges. Forthwith they will become his colleges. And these colleges need the money. Some of our pastors have paid no attention to my appeals for co-operation in this important matter. Our Master knows those who have responded. I pray that He will move all to do so.

Our second reason for appealing for help this year arises out of the student situation. At great expense through many years we had been collecting a list of prospective students among our young people. All this information went up in smoke on January 18th. If you, dear friend and reader, know of any young person of the Christian Church that has finished high school or is going off for study this fall or who ought to go, will you not notify me at once? You are our hope of bringing our young people to our college this fall. We are counting on you. If you fail us, we have no other source of information or assistance. Lay this paper down immediately, please, and write me all young people you know who should come to our college this fall.

I have served in a public capacity in the Christian Church for a dozen years now. I have learned to love our people. Our people are real folks. We have one failing—we expect our officials to run our enterprises. They can't do it if they would, and those I know wouldn't if they could.

Here is the issue we must face. Can a spiritual democracy co-operate for kingdom purposes? Or shall we of necessity return to bishops and presiding elders? I believe our people can co-operate for the kingdom's growth. I believe they will help me in my effort to promote the educational section of our work this summer, financially and in securing students. Such is my confidence. Such is my hope. On this conviction, I have staked the future of our college.

If I am too sanguine in my expectations, God pity our Church and her colleges.

I am counting on you, beloved co-workers of the Christian Church. I am counting on you. God grant that I may not be counting in vain.

W. A. Harper.

THE PEOPLE WHO DO NOT GO TO CHURCH, AND WHY.

(Number I.)

The Church is the power-house of religion, and its message is for all. The Churches are filled to overflowing on Easter Sunday and Christmas Day, which indicates that the people have not forgotten their early religious training. They should do more than go to Church on the great feast-days; they should go every Sunday. The Church needs men, yes! but men need the Church more, and every one can share equally in what it has to give. It is here because its Founder believed everybody worth while. Why not go to Church, since it has no substitute? Here is a partial list of excuses assigned by persons for not attending Church services: "Too deaf to hear the sermon" (he goes to the political speaking); "Too lame to walk up the steps" (she climbs two flights of stairs to her lodge); "Cannot get the family up to breakfast"; "Clothing too shabby" (she goes to the theater); "Cannot get in the way of going, have stayed away so long; always have company on Sunday"; "Windows are open, cannot stand the draft"; "Air too close, cannot breathe"; "Children too young to leave at home"; "Has to see the doctor every Sunday"; "Don't like the choir"; "The minister does not call"; "The minister's family is stuck up"; "Can't get home in time to get a warm dinner"; "No one in the congregation notices her"; always sees a man there who cheated him; minister corrected son—can't forgive it; minister did not come when sick; don't like the preacher's delivery; lost husband, do not think it just; Church all the time begging; minister preached right at me; sees so many hypocrites; the Church is only for the rich, poor folks have no show; can live just as good a Christian at home; too tired, work hard on Saturday night; always have headache on Sunday; have to go to office and open mail; the weather has been rainy; can read better sermons at home; minister passed me on the street and never spoke.

The empty seats at the Church depress me. The average Church service is too dull and stupid. I went to a crowded theater not long ago and sat for three hours, and they seemed short. My dog is chained all the week, and on Sunday morning I take him for a run. He would be disappointed if he did not get his Sunday inspiration. He does not care for Church, as he has no soul. I am a baseball "fan" seven days in the week, and a Church service on Sunday is a poor preparation for a ball game.

Then there is a strange connection between the weather and religion. Church-going is affected by it, but it is not the only important activity of society which is influenced by the caprices of nature. A daily newspaper says: "It rains on Sunday, and Sunday's papers tell of forty-two thousand people who saw the football game. It rains on a registration, and accounts are of the effect of the weather on the registration." This means that while people will sacrifice much for their personal pleasure, they will surrender little of their comfort for the sake of performing their duty as citizens. It rains on Saturday, and the department stores are as crowded as on any fair day. It rains on Sunday, and the congregations in the Protestant Churches are decimated. We had an example of this in a nearby city not long ago, when on a rainy night the attendance ranged from nine to twenty-six at the evening services throughout the entire city. Does this not indicate that Church people are more interested in dry goods than in spiritual nourishment? How often does the pastor meet some of his folks on Monday and have them bob in to tell him (a lie) blandly that the heat or the cold kept them away, when it is either hotter or colder on Monday than it was on Sunday. If some psychologist would make a study of the weather and religion, he might be able to explain the strange freaks that seem to get into the people's minds about it. We hear of folks who stayed away from Church last Sunday because of the terrible heat, who spent most of the day in things that would test the endurance of an Eskimo in the polar regions. And still the preacher is expected to believe that the people just can't get to Church when the weather is at either extreme.

Well, you may think the preachers are "easy," but they do not always betray with their looks what they really think. So, hereafter, try to think of some other explanation when your pastor meets you on Monday and you begin to enlighten him about the unbearable conditions that made it utterly impossible for you to be at the Church the previous day.

The foregoing excuses are on a par with, "I have married a wife and therefore I cannot come"; just as ridiculous, unreasonable, ineffective to the Maker of the great supper or the Founder of the Church. After twenty-five years' experience in preaching the Gospel up and down this country, I am convinced that the real reasons for non-Church attendance lies far deeper than any of these superficial extenuations offered for the neglect of this religious duty. Remissness on the part of the Sunday School leaders, failure to cultivate in the children the Church-going habit, acting in accord with the creed that the Sunday School is an end within itself—all this accounts for a leakage which is disastrous, and which reflects serious discredit upon the statesmanship of the Church. One has said that from this atmosphere 80 per cent of the Sunday School drifts wholly away from the Church. We are in peril of growing a generation of men and women who will have little conscience and no fixed habits as regards the service for preaching and worship. The custom of Church-going must be formed in early childhood, or in most cases not at all. The indifference of parents in this regard is fatal. The passing of home worship and the family pew has left its blight. The mysticism, the gift of contemplation, the sense of awe, the poetry, the wide-open eyes, whispering lips, mysterious questionings, a trust, a joy, a love. These things people the realm of childhood, and are ministering angels to him who would educate little lives out to God.

It is important that all the Churches in the Conference should be represented by a full delegation at the next session of our Conference. All the standing committees should begin work at once and work out the best possible plans for promoting the work of their respective departments. New Hope Church will give entertainment for all delegates and visitors who attend the Conference, and we desire the largest, best, most progressive Conference ever held in our annual session.

Delegates should be elected with care, and should attend the annual session, be present at the opening session, and remain in conference till the close.

Our Conference has more Churches than either of the other North Carolina Conferences. We have in our territory the University, Trinity College, Wake Forest College, North Carolina State College, Meredith College, Greenville College, Atlantic Christian College, Peace Institute, St. Mary's College and a number of smaller educational institutions. While these institutions are not connected with our Church, they are sources of intelligence in the territory occupied by our Conference and will contribute to the intelligence of the people our Conference will serve.

We have great opportunities and great responsibilities, and should do our best to meet them.

W. C. Wicker, President.

FROM REV. J. E. FRANKS.

Zion is one of our good old Churches, located between Moncure and Sanford, in Lee County.

Her membership is composed mainly of progressive farmers, who own their homes, making a substantial, dependable Church. These dear people are unsurpassed in their peaceful, quiet fellowship, and yet much ahead of many in prompt business methods of Church management. A splendid increase in membership has been maintained. This is due, in part, to the strong influence going out from the consecrated lives of these dear people, reaching, saving the families and neighbors for Christ and His cause.

The Sunday School, too, with a devout superintendent and a consecrated band of teachers, who are all well qualified for their work, is another strong feature in the growth of the Church.

Again, the Church and pastor feel very much indebted to Brother D. A. Mann, of this community (but a member of New Elam Church), for the very valuable services he renders in the Church and community as instructor and leader of music. Brother Mann is also a kind of lay preacher of unusual ability and activity, being very much in demand by us and other denominations as well.

The writer has served this Church on the first Saturday and Sunday for the last four years. I am sure no one has a more pleasant people to serve.

Lee's Chapel is about three miles from Zion, and is served on same days. This Church is not so well established, but is gradually coming to the front. A much-needed well for the Church and school has been dug. The house has been recently painted. A spirit of thrift and business interest is being shown more and more. The pastor received a call the first of May for next year.

Our Saturday congregations have grown five to one. The Sunday School is taking on new life, with more interest in music. Brother D. A. Mann has been employed to teach a singing school. We feel much encouraged because of the interest manifested here.

Hines' School house is between Lee's Chapel and Moore Union. Here a very live Sunday School is conducted by a number of fine Christian people. These have persuaded me to give them a Sunday night appointment. Good interest is taken, and I go there on the first Sunday night in each month.

Three accepted Christ at my first service there, and others since. I hope to hold some days of meeting here in the near future.

J. E. Franks.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

CORNER-STONE LAYING.

WHITLEY MEMORIAL BUILDING, ELON COLLEGE, N. C.

(An address by J. O. Atkinson, D. D., stenographically reported.)

The superlative ideals of every well-directed society have been realized when the right kind of individuals have been produced. This, in brief, is the supreme object of all government, and the high aims of all proper institutions; the creation of the right sort of individual. May one be understood in this? Individuals make up society, and persons create institutions and form governments. And yet one says that society, institutions and governments reach their highest ends and achieve their noblest ideals in producing the right sort of persons.

One may go even further than this without fearing successful contradiction, and declare that when human society about us, the earth beneath us, or heaven above us can point the finger of appreciation, pride and approval and say, "Here is my beloved son, or daughter, in whom I am well pleased," then God can do no better, and the angels and archangels chant their approval.

One makes bold in this utterance because one readily realizes that it has been God's way from the beginning. When He wanted to show the world the very height of His creative act, He did not point to the boundless ocean with its infinite depths, nor to the towering mountains with their cloud-touched peaks, nor yet even to some superb government or outstanding institution. Instead, He pointed us to Moses, whose personality penetrated beyond the clouds and brought law out of the high mountains, on the foundation of which law all good governments since have been based and built up.

When God wanted to portray that which was created after His own heart, He did not show us a kingdom of giants, nor even a galaxy of redeemed souls, but He pointed us to David, a man after God's own heart, who sang his way to the throne of Israel and into the hearts of all peoples since.

When He wanted to reveal to the world, to its awe and wonder, the supreme manifestation of His wisdom, He did not show us a palace of marble, or a structure of burnished brass and glittering gold. Instead, He pointed us to King Solomon, a man, the wisest man, from whose head and heart came the most magnificent temple the world has yet witnessed, a type and a token of that house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens.

And when God wanted to show us what man might be and become, He did not point to a bevy of angels nor a legion of glorified spirits—He showed us instead His Son, who was cradled in a manger and crucified upon a cross. This, let it be repeated, has ever been God's way. Verily, what pleases Him most and that to which He points with most pardonable pride and greatest glory is the right sort of man, the proper sort of person, for He knows when that man comes, the right sort of man, he will inspire others to be, to do, to dare.

The speaker is not indulging in fickle fancy, nor even propounding a theory when he says these things. He is only speaking the words of truth, of sanity and of soberness. The man to whose memory we pay tribute today by placing this corner-stone and erecting this building to his name was the right sort of a man. His rugged honesty, his unswerving devotion to duty, his loyalty to country, Church and God, his unpretentious, modest life had in it that eternal virtue that inspired, and will inspire, others to heroic effort and magnanimous deed. Is it not so? His lips are sealed in the silence of the grave today, and his tongue cannot speak a word of appreciation, approval and gratitude; yet somehow the words and the wisdom of that man have inspired a friend and benefactor to take fifty thousand hard-earned dollars and donate them to the building of this temple of song and service and public prayer, whose corner-stone we lay today. Let it be repeated—the hand that beckoned to this noble deed is hidden beneath a mound in a Church yard somewhere, but it has, nevertheless, the power to touch the heart of another man to donate magnanimous treasure for a most noble purpose. This is inspiration; this is God's way of getting His work done in the world. When He wishes a superb achievement, He sends into the world the right sort of man, who himself does the work or lives such a life and builds such a character that it inspires some other man to the achievement.

To be a bit personal on such an occasion, and under such circumstances as this, must not be deemed out of place. J. M. Darden, whose benevolence makes this building possible, does not make this donation from treasure handed him as a gift or legacy, but from a storehouse wherein he has gathered by hard licks, persistent effort and tireless energy. Your speaker saw not long since the very spot on which our benefactor as a poor, but honest, lad earned his first dollar by a whole day of dirt-hauling—horse, cart and lad, board and upkeep for the day, all thrown in to get that dollar. From small beginnings, inspired by the man who was afterwards to be his father-in-law, Leonard Hume Whitley, did our donor, J. M. Darden, begin with high aims and holy purposes to accumulate that fund with which he today makes a glad and grateful people his everlasting debtors. It is not vain prophecy to say that when this corner-stone shall have crumbled into dust and the bricks of this building shall have gone back into their native elements, there will be men and women to rise up and call these men blessed—the one for his inspiration, the other for his magnanimity which make this occasion possible. Verily, God and the angels approve when the right sort of man is produced and found.

This is not the only person whose life the late lamented Whitley inspired and helped to nobler things and better achievements. There is with us today the noble son of a most worthy sire, who has just read the brief sketch of his father's life and deeds. I refer, of course, to George F. Whitley, an honored graduate of this institution. If you will follow him next Sunday you will most likely find him teaching the Word of God to a Sunday School class in the room of the Church that his sainted father labored so unselfishly to build and to furnish. If you follow him next week you will possibly find him at the bar pleading for justice, liberty and righteousness in the name of the Commonwealth of the Old Dominion, whose faithful servant and official advocate he is.

There are other sons and daughters, relatives and acquaintances whose lives Leonard Hume Whitley touched and inspired to noble deed and right-worthy achievement.

Mr. President, Faculty and Students of Elon College, if we do not receive this splendid gift in a worthy and becoming manner and in our lives seek to respond to the inspiration that such an example brings to us, we shall be most unworthy indeed, and that which should have been our glory will turn to be our shame. Sir, I cannot believe—I refuse to think—that you and those whom you represent could have minds so barren and hearts so cold as not to be willing to seek with all the consecrated energy and devoted effort that an all-wise God can give to live lives worthy of this noble deed, of our magnanimous benefactor and of the sainted name and memory to whom this building is erected. To this end, may the God who inspires all worthy men to still more worthy attainment and achievement, use all of us who share the bounty and benefits of this great benevolence. The high and holy ideals of the sainted Whitley whose life inspired, and of the generous Darden whose bounty provides this building, will be achieved and satisfied only as those who use and enjoy this auditorium shall themselves become the right sort of men, the right sort of women. And to this end I am persuaded the consecrated energies of this great institution will ever be lent and dedicated.

ELON CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS—JULY 30 TO AUGUST 5.

The time has come for our Churches to be planning to send representatives to the annual Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Southern Christian Convention, which will be held at Elon College, beginning Monday night, July 30th, and closing Sunday night, August 5th. Some Churches have already planned to send one or more workers to the Chautauqua, paying part or all of their expenses, and these Churches believe that no better investment could be made than this, which will insure better leadership for their own work the coming year. At a moderate cost, the Chautauqua offers a week of study and inspiration, good-fellowship and recreation, which combine to make an ideal vacation time. The Board of Religious Education has been working since the first of the year upon the program and arrangements for the gathering, and no effort will be spared to make the week one of comfort and pleasure to those who attend.

Who Should Attend the Chautauqua.

Every pastor, every Sunday School superintendent, every Christian Endeavor president, every Sunday School teacher—in short, every Christian who is interested in the progress and growth of the work of the Church will find here new inspiration along with very definite information, telling how to do their work better. The gathering is not limited to membership in the Christian Church, for other workers will be welcome. Rev. T. E. Beaman, of the Free Will Baptist Church, has sent to the secretary the names of twenty-five or more young men in his Church who are interested in the work of this School of Methods. To those who attend, the program offers the following:

Classes in Methods.

The first hour in the morning will be devoted to three classes especially considering Sunday School methods.

Pastors and Sunday School superintendents, as well as others, will be interested in the course in the "Organization and Administration of the Sunday School," taught by Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of the First Christian Church of Norfolk. Rev. Flory has made a very special study of Church School work, and has been successful in adapting his plans and theories in his own Church work. His class will give a new vision of what a Sunday School may do and may mean in the life of the Church and the community.

Workers with young people will be helped by attending the class taught by Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., field worker for the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church, for Young People's Work. Mr. Eldredge has attended many of the sessions of the Chautauqua when the gathering was held in Virginia, and is well known in the South, and his class in "Youth and the Church" will be worth coming to the Chautauqua to attend.

The Board of Religious Education feels very happy to announce to the workers in the Children's Division of the Sunday School that Miss Emma G. Lemen, of Philadelphia, Pa., will be present to teach leaders of children. Miss Lemen has had much experience in summer school work, as well as in field work, and comes highly recommended as one who offers a constructive program of work. It is a privilege to have Miss Lemen, and no worker with children can afford to miss her classes.

Pastors' Class.

The pastors who attended the Chautauqua last year were unanimous in requesting that Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, teach this class again this year. To say that Dr. Staley is to teach the class is sufficient to make every pastor who can possibly do so wish to be present and gain inspiration from this teacher of experience and wisdom.

Social Service in the Sunday School.

At the same hour as Dr. Staley's class, will be another of especial interest to workers in the Sunday School, taught by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College. "Graded Social Service in the Sunday School" will be the subject treated, in Dr. Harper's own masterful method of teaching, which will make it a course presenting much to be included in the local Church program the coming year.

"Meeting the Master."

Rev. James Lightbourne, of Holland, Va., will teach a class of young people, offering a Bible course based on Ozora Davis' book, "Meeting the Master." Rev. Lightbourne knows young people and knows how to make a course interesting and helpful to them in a very practical fashion.

Morning Devotions.

The morning devotional period will be led each day by Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., of Franklin, Va., former president of the Chautauqua. Dr. Rowland will also preach the Sunday morning sermon on Chautauqua Sunday.

Morning Lecture Hour.

The third period each morning will be devoted to a lecture period, with strong messages from strong men. On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday there will be delivered three massages on "Evangelism," using the following three subjects on the three days: "Pastoral Evangelism," "Lay Evangelism," and "Educational Evangelism." Dr. Helfenstein is secretary of evangelism and life service for the Christian Church, and has devoted much time and thought to this important theme. To pastors and Christian laymen, these lectures will be of inestimable value. It is impossible to announce definitely at this time the lecturer on the fourth morning, but on Saturday morning, Dr. Atkinson will speak on "Paul's Venture," and all who know the mission secretary and his power as a speaker will anticipate with pleasure this address.

Missions.

Every Woman's Missionary Society should have a representative at the Chautauqua to hear Mrs. M. T. Morrill, of Defiance, Ohio, discuss the mission study books for next year. The foreign mission books will be on Japan, and Mrs. Morrill will also introduce the children's books on Japan, and the home mission study books which deal with the general theme "Saving America Through Her Boys and Girls." Missionary information makes missionary enthusiasts. Mrs. Morrill is coming to develop missionary enthusiasts, and well can she do it.

Stewardship.

"The Message of Stewardship" will be the textbook of Dr. Atkinson's class, which will appeal to pastors and leaders who are endeavoring to present this theme to their own people.

Christian Endeavor.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, our "Christian Endeavor Man," will train the Expert Endeavorers at the Chautauqua and interpret the program of Christian Endeavor to young people and leaders in his own interesting and inspiring way. Rev. Morgan will also have charge of the—Music Hour.

This will be an hour of good-fellowship and enjoyment through music each evening from 7 to 8 on the campus. This will be the happy time of the day when at sunset old songs are sung as "Day is Dying in the West."

Evening Lectures.

The opening night of the Chautauqua will be "Burlington Night," when Rev. Thomas F. Opie, rector of the Episcopal Church of Burlington, will bring the opening message on "God and Education." Dr. Lankford will preside, and the Burlington Church will have charge of the music.

Tuesday night will be "North Carolina Night," with Mr. C. H. Stephenson, of Raleigh, in charge and presiding, and Dr. W. D. Parry, pastor of the Christian Church, speaking on "The Great Game of Pretend."

Wednesday night will be "Virginia Night," when the Virginians will have full charge, with Dr. Staley presiding, and Dr. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, as the speaker.

Thursday night will be "Young People's Night," with W. B. Terrell, of Burlington, presiding, and Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa., as the speaker.

Friday night will be "Greensboro Night," with W. B. Truitt, superintendent of the Greensboro Sunday School, presiding, and Rev. John G. Truitt speaking on "We are Debtors."

Saturday night closes the week with "Elon Night," with special social features in charge of a local committee.

Recreation.

The afternoons will be devoted largely to recreation, under the direction of Miss Pattie Coghill, a graduate of Elon College, who will have general charge of recreational plans, with the assistance of others at Elon.

Conferences.

Three conferences are scheduled during the week—Tuesday afternoon, 3 to 4, Christian Endeavor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, leader; Wednesday, 3 to 4, Sunday School, Hermon Eldredge, leader; Thursday, 3 to 4, the "Sunday School During the Week," Dr. W. A. Harper, leader.

Children's Sessions.

For two hours each morning special sessions with stories, songs and handwork will be conducted for the children in the graded school building.

Cost of the Chautauqua.

The registration fee for the week is $1.00. These fees are used to help defray the expenses of the gathering.

Board will be $7.50 for the week, and $5.00 for children under 12 years of age. This includes board and room. It will be necessary for guests to furnish own bedding, pillow, and towels, as the college cannot supply these articles. Single meals will be 40 cents for adults, and 25 cents for children under twelve.

Mrs. Kirkland, of Elon College, has consented to take charge of the dormitory, and her experience here assures that all details to make the week pleasant for guests will be seen to.

Room Reservation.

Rooms may be reserved now, and should be, through Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., by sending in name and registration fee. If it is impossible later to come, the fee will be refunded upon request. Those planning to attend the Chautauqua will confer a great favor upon those in charge if they will register in June or early in July. Arrangements can be made then much more easily for accommodation, and for classes.

Finally.

Let every Church be represented by its pastor, Sunday School superintendent and all others possible.

Urge your young people to come and get acquainted with your college and theirs.

Plan for an automobile load from your Church, thus reducing the cost, while making your representation larger. A Ford recently made the trip from Holland, Va., to Elon comfortably in one day, using eleven gallons and one quart of gasoline and one quart of oil.

For any further information, write Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., who will gladly answer all questions and make arrangements for you.

FROM ROSEMONT.

The Elon commencement was the best ever. The speeches were great; the addresses were inspiring; 41 diplomas; 41 certificates given. Think of what these mean to 82 boys and girls!

One of "our" boys from our orphanage graduated. A fine fellow—acclaimed so by the students and teachers. Then the joy when he was presented with $100 in gold by the founder of our orphanage, Bro. Foster, of Waverly, Va.

The administration building, the science hall, the auditorium, reaching up slowly, but surely, toward the tree tops. These are an inspiration. Even the ruins of the old administration building, though silent and helpless, seemed to cry out, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates." For out of death must come life. So out of the ruins of Elon must come a bigger, better Elon.

Our library is gone, our museum is gone; but "they shall not pass," is deeply imbedded in the souls of some of us. And for one, I challenge the world for a response to the call for a bigger museum for our greater Elon.

In a small way, my life has been in touch with the world. At least, with the soil of six nations, with the conflict of twenty-three allied nations. I feel that I am a servant of the world. Therefore, have a right to beg bread at every door.

That is why I challenge the world—to throw out a helping hand; to help rebuild a museum that shall rival the college museums of the world. Why not? It can be done. It must be done. Come on, big world—it will be done.

THE TRINITY.

(No. VI of the Series.)

"God is Light."

(John 1:5.)

This declaration is peculiar to John only. He calls God "Light," and it is he that says that Christ said, "I am the Light." James calls God "the Father of light" (1:17). Peter says he is "the possessor of light" (1 Peter 2:9), and Paul says he "dwells in light" (1 Tim. 6:16).

Now, it is to be deduced that if He is light, and the Father of light, the possessor of light and dwells in the light, it is believed that He is something more than what we know as light, such as the light that may shine along our path that we may see our way, or even the light of day which makes it possible for us to engage in the labors that life affords; for light is something of itself, more than the illumination emanating from it.

First: Light has colors. Scientists have proved beyond a doubt that there are three primary colors in light, viz: red, green and violet. Some one has argued that there are other colors, but the contention has been quickly swept away, because all other colors are produced by the various combinations of these three basic ones. So there are three colors of light, and the most striking and impressive characteristic of it all is that the combination of these three—red, green and violet—in equal proportions gives one solitary light. So in this particular, light, which we know as a one thing, is three things, and the three make the one.

Second: The rays of light. We are told that all light emits three different kinds of rays. The sun, for instance, sends forth the following: heat, light and actinic rays. The heat ray, we are told, is that which is felt, but not seen. The light ray is that which is seen, but not felt. The actinic ray is that which is neither seen nor felt, but is known by its effects, such as its chemical action in the operation of photography. Without this ray and its effect on nature, the air that we breathe would soon be loaded with poison which would soon destroy all forms of life. But the marvelous thing about these rays is that they are, or their combination forms, just one ray of light. Therefore, we have three rays of light, all separate and distinct, each having its own individual function, the one is not the other and the other is not the one, forming an inseparable unit, one ray; and in this particular light is a trinity.

Third: The application. The above impressive trinitarian fact of light beautifully explains the light and the trinity of God. A study of the rays is ample. As there is heat ray which is felt but not seen, so is God the Father. As there is light ray seen but not felt, so is God the Son. As there is actinic ray known by its effect, so there is God the Holy Ghost.

John says, "the Father is felt but not seen" (1:18); he also says that the Son is seen but not felt (8:12), and in regard to the Holy Spirit, he says He is neither felt nor seen, but He is a shining truth in us (14:16, 17), to teach us all things and bring all things to our remembrance (14:26). He is a spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father, bearing witness of Him, and upon receiving Him we also bear witness of Him (15:26, 27). He is the spirit of truth which convicts the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness and of judgment (16:8). The Holy Spirit, therefore, is to be known by His effect upon God's children, and it is manifested in regeneration, conversion and sanctification.

In photography, the sensitized plate receives the actinic ray and the object is reproduced there. When you have your photograph made, the plate receives the light and it thereafter bears witness of you, and it is your likeness. If God is light, with all the properties and elements of light, is it irrelevant to say that by the action of the Holy Spirit "upon receiving Him we bear witness of Him"? The heart of man is sensitized to receive the photograph of its God when the light is poured in upon it, and, if developed, he retains God's likeness there.

And now we have Father, Son and Holy Spirit —the Father felt, but not seen; the Son seen, but not felt, and the Holy Spirit, the action and effect of the two upon the heart of man. As heat and light and actinic rays make one full solar radiance, so Father, Son and Holy Spirit make one God; and as the sun sheds forth all these radiances at one and the same time, so the Heavenly Father sheds forth the Son and Holy Spirit at one and the same time, and Christ is both Himself and the Father, and both are the Father and the Holy Spirit (John 17:21, 22).

Then again, as solar heat, light and actinic ray, each have a property that cannot be communicated to either of the others, and which keeps them permanently distinct; so the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, each has a function permanently distinct from the others; and as neither heat, light nor actinic ray can be itself without the others, so the Father, Son and Holy Spirit cannot be God without the others, but as the combination of heat, light and actinic ray is solar radiance, so the Father, Son and Holy Spirit is God; and as each is solar radiance, so is each, respectively, God.

"God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost." Can it be anything else? God is the Father of light, the possessor of light, dwells in the light and "is light." If light is what they say it is, then He must be all that the analogy will bear, and more, as we shall see later.

The doctrine of the trinity may be a mystery, as everything is. The grass grows, but we don't know how. We boys used to realize this when we had to try to keep it out of the peanuts and potatoes. The principles of arithmetic apply and we use them, but we don't know why. No one has ever explained how it is that two and two make four. Likewise, and undoubtedly, there is a mystery about the realities of God. Yet it is only by God's revelation of Himself as a trinity in a unity that we can understand Him at all, and through this trinity we do understand, and, as we understand, our Father becomes more intelligent to us, and we can believe that we are part of Him in this life, and as we receive Him we can be perfected in His image in the life to come.

Are you interested in a few more thoughts? Dr. Lloyd reminds us that as the light of the sun comes to the earth and returns again, so Christ came, appeared for a while and returned; and as light is not absent from the earth in its return, so is He not absent in His return. As is the relation of all life to sunshine, so is the relation of all spiritual growth (in Church or individual) related to our triune God. As the light of the sun comes from all eternity and fills all space, so the Father, Son and Holy Spirit is God light from all eternity and fills all space. As the light of the sun, in all its qualities, has been what it is from the beginning, and undoubtedly will be for all time, so has God been "the same yesterday, today and forever." As the three properties of the sun reveal all the primary characteristics of the sun, so the three persons of Deity reveal all the primary characteristics of God. Isn't that lovely?

There is a great difference, however, in the science of the sun and the life of God. It is the difference between unconsciousness and consciousness. There is no consciousness in the sun nor in the rays of the sun. If there were, we would have conscious heat, conscious light, and conscious actinic, and each conscious of the other. God is divinely animate. In Him there is a consciousness and it is a supreme consciousness. Each person of Him is conscious of itself, and each is also conscious of the other, and again each is conscious of the indissoluble unity of the Godhead. It is thus that they become persons in each of whom the divine Being is represented. There are not three separate beings in God. There is one Being only, but there are three separate persons in God, and the word person is used for these conscious distinctions, because it has been determined that it is the best term that can be found, and it needs only a little explanation in order to be understood.

Lastly: The formula of the trinity must have grown up in the early apostolic Church by the declaration of Jesus Christ Himself. He referred to God as the Father, to Himself as the Son, and to the Holy Spirit, which would come after Him; and today we should be grateful that the Church has faithfully preserved it and never erred in its adherence to it. We should also be grateful that it will endure forever. It matters not what we believe about it, or whether we ever think of it at all or not, it is an undying and unchangeable reality, and it must go on making its claim until "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" and the last enemy is destroyed.

HAW RIVER CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

On the third Sunday in June there will be held at the Haw River Christian Church a reunion of Church members, those who have been members, and the pastors who have served the Church during the twenty-seven years of its existence.

The Woman's Bible Class has appointed a committee who, with the deacons and the pastor, are working out a program.

Each pastor that is present is expected to make an informal talk at the 11 o'clock hour. Rev. C. B. Riddle, of Burlington, N. C., is to be present and will take part in the services. There will be music by the choir congregation, a couple of duets, and a quartette, accompanied by violin. Some old-time hymns will be used.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Church will have charge of the opening services at the evening hour, with an appropriate program, and Dr. W. C. Wicker, of Elon College, N. C., is to preach at this service.

To all who can attend and worship with them, the Church extends a cordial invitation.

IS LIFE WORTH LIVING?

Is life worth living? Yes, so long
As there is wrong to right,
Wail of the weak against the strong,
Or tyranny to fight;
Long as there lingers gloom to chase
Or streaming tear to dry,
One kindred woe, one sorrowing face,
That smiles as we draw nigh;
Long as a tale of anguish swells
The heart, and lids grow wet,
And at the sound of Christmas bells
We pardon and forget;
So long as faith with freedom reigns
And loyal hope survives
And gracious charity remains
To leaven lowly lives;
While there is one untrodden tract
For intellect and will,
And men are free to think and act,
Life is worth living still.

FAMILY ALTAR

COMPILED BY DR. J. GREGORY MANTLE.

Monday.

*"If the servant shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife and my children; I will not go out free; then his master shall bring him unto the judges; * * * he shall serve him for ever."*—Exodus 21:5-6.

"There is a difference between a bondservant and an hired servant—one works for love, the other for hire. The one has no life of his own, no interests apart from his master; he sees him forever. A hired servant still has his own life, his own interests, and serves only for a time. Paul said he was a bondservant, and that bondservant means the one who has yielded himself willingly and lovingly. He has been bought with a price, redeemed in the market-place, bought back from the power of the enemy, and he yields himself to his master. We are his bondservants, we have yielded gladly, willingly to our Lord, we will not go out, we will be identified with Him in His death, resurrection and ascension life, so identified that it is His life henceforth, not ours; we let the old life go; we are His bondservants. We are His yielded ones, we are glad to let the old life go, glad to be identified with Him; this is the service of a bondservant."

"I love, I love my Master,
I will not go out free!
For He is my Redeemer;
He paid the price for me.

"I would not leave His service,
It is so sweet and blest;
And in the weariest moments
He gives the truest rest."

*"Weep not: the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David hath prevailed to open the book * * * and I beheld and lo * * * a Lamb."*—Rev. 5:5, 6.

"The lion has overcome," says one of the elders to the weeping seer. And when he looked he did not see a Lion, but a Lamb, the very opposite of the Lion, but what is very strange, a Lamb with seven horns and seven eyes. The Lion of Judah of whom already the Old Covenant testifies—appears in the form of a forbearing, silently suffering Lamb. What does this signify? It simply means that in the spiritual world the strength of the lion is manifested in enduring and suffering and waiting in silence, letting one's self be immolated like a Lamb. This is lion strength—where we do not come harshly down one upon another, but suffer patiently that which others do unto us—without biting back but remaining dumb as a lamb. For this, we must have the eternal spirit. By the eternal spirit, Jesus offered Himself, remaining in the spirit of the Lamb, not opening His mouth, but letting Himself be slain. Now, the question is whether we belong to the seed of the Lamb. Whoever is born of the Lamb has the nature of the Lamb. He can keep silent and endure. There is no turmoil inside of him. It is part of true culture not to speak out everything one feels, but with this there may be a fearful turmoil within. The Lord Jesus was a Lamb, and He is bringing forth in us His true nature—the Lamb nature—His spirit is working it out in us, not suddenly but gradually and surely."—Pastor Stockmayer.

"'He is able'; oh, the comfort
That these simple words convey!
Oh, what rest they sweetly give us—
'Fear thou not'! they seem to say."

Wednesday.

"Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save."—Isa. 59:1.

"There is a thought abroad in the Church: 'Oh! God works so slowly.' He does not. He works according to the prayers of the Church, and accordingly as there is co-operation with Him. Did God work very slowly in Egypt in delivering the bound nation? He did not. He worked for a prolonged season in getting the instrument ready in the wilderness—forty years. Moses was forty years in Egypt getting all the human wisdom he could learn there, and God took in the wilderness forty more, stripping him of the false wisdom, and getting him to understand divine wisdom. Because of the dullness of the human mind in grasping divine things, God has to take a long time in getting the instruments ready, but then God's work is rapidly done when the instruments see to it that the divine conditions are fulfilled. There must be conformity to the laws of God before God can work; and according to the absolute conformity to God's will and laws there is a fullness of operation. If God can do things without prayer in the Church, why does He not carry them out in His own time instead of delays and hindrances? Paul said, 'Satan hindered me.' And why does God lay a complaint against the Church that she does not pray? And why does he invite the Lord's remembrancers to give Him no rest? Why did Christ say, 'Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest to send forth laborers?' Why did he not send them apart from prayer? Because prayer exists as a divine necessity in the economy of God."—Evan Roberts.

"What! sleep ye now
Children of light and day?
The end of all things is at hand,
Oh, wake, and watch, and pray"!

Thursday.

"This kind goeth not forth but by prayer and fasting."—Mark 9:29.

"The disciples had been unable to cast out the evil spirit. They commanded but there was no expulsion. There was something wrong. The current was defective, and in these relationships a defective current means there is something wanting in the wires. We are not straitened in God, we are straitened in ourselves. 'Why could not we cast him out?' Our Lord traces their lack of power to a deficiency of prayer, which always implies imperfect spiritual communion. And with this primary lack He names the neglect of fasting, which has resulted in physical imprisonment and oppression of the spirit. The bodies and souls of His ministers were not fully surrendered, and because of this defective consecration they could not receive the needful strength. We allow our bodies to be masters when they are intended to be servants. We are afraid to confront them with a stern denial. And the pampered body always means a fettered spirit. Because of lack of power we cannot hurl iniquities from their thrones. We command the demons to go, but they laugh in our faces. 'This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.'"—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

"Leave no unguarded place,
No weakness of the soul:
Take every virtue, every grace,
And fortify the whole.

"From strength to strength go on,
Wrestle and fight and pray:
Tread all the powers of darkness down,
And win the well-fought day."

Friday.

*"The life also of Jesus * * * made manifest in our mortal flesh."*—2 Cor. 4:11.

"The physical redemption which Christ brings is not merely healing, but also life. It is not the readjustment of our life on the old basis, leaving it thenceforward to go like a machine upon a natural plane, but it is the imparting of a new kind of life and strength. It is simply a higher kind of life, the turning of life's water into His heavenly wine. It is not a permanent deposit, but a constant dependence; a renewing of the inward man day by day; a strength which comes only as we need it, and continues only as we dwell in Him. Such a life is a very sacred thing. It gives a peculiar sanctity to every look, tone, act, and movement of the body. We are living on the life of God, and we must live like Him and for Him. A body thus divinely quickened adds Christian life. Words spoken in this divine energy, works done through the life of God, will be clothed with a positive effectiveness which must make men feel that the body, as well as the spirit, is indeed the very temple of the Holy Spirit."—Dr. A. B. Simpson.

"Pour in Thy heavenly health,
Remove all pain and ill;
With strength Divine and true,
My feeble being fill.

"Fill, and it shall be filled,
This empty soul of mine;
With Thy all-quickening sap,
Fill me, Thou living Vine."

Saturday.

"He was called the friend of God."—James 2:23.

"Tell God all, if you mean to be a friend of His. And do not be afraid to tell Him your harsh thoughts of Him, and your complaints of Him. He never resents anything that a man that loves Him says about Him, if he says it to Him. What He resents—if I might use the word—is our huddling up grudges and murmurings and questionings in our own hearts, and saying never a word to the Friend against whom they offend. Out with it all. Complaints, regrets, questionings, petitions, hot wishes—take them all to Him; and be sure that, instead of breaking, they will, if spoken, cement the friendship, which is disturbed by secrecy on our parts. If we are God's lovers He will have no secrets from us. 'The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and He will show them His covenant.' There is a strange wisdom and insight, sometimes amounting even to prophetic anticipation, which creeps into a simple heart that is knit closely to God. But whether the result of our friendship with Him be such communication of such kinds of insight or no, we may be sure of this, that if we trust Him, and love Him, and are frank with Him, He will in so far be frank with us, that He will impart unto us Himself, and in the knowledge of His love we shall find all the knowledge that we need."—Dr. Alexander Maclaren.

"I've found a Friend; O such a Friend!
He loved me ere I knew Him;
He drew me with the cords of love,
And thus He bound me to Him.

"And round my heart still closely twine
Those ties which nought can sever,
For I am His and He is mine
For ever and for ever."

The Windsor, Va., Christian Church has recently built a parsonage for its pastor, and it is reported as a splendid piece of work. Every Church that is able to locate a pastor, ought to have a parsonage. We congratulate the Windsor Church and its pastor on the good work accomplished.

Review: "Great Men and Women of the Old Testament."

Golden Text: Let us also, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.—Heb. 12:1.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 99.

Great Heroes and Heroines.

"Not gold, but only men, can make
A people great and strong;
Men who, for truth and honor's sake,
Stand fast and suffer long;
Brave men, who work while others sleep,
Who dare while others fly—
They build a nation's pillars deep,
And fly them to the sky."

—Emerson.

Great men and women make great nations. If the whole story of any country's development and progress could be related, that story would contain countless incidents of heroism and loyalty of its men and women. For any great movement, be it the founding of a Church, the growth of a nation, the success of a reform or the perfecting of a great invention, must depend upon men who are making good use of their God-given ability. So religious biography is the story of how God and man have worked together to accomplish great things in this world of ours, and its value is twofold—first, to reveal facts in stories of great interest, upon which much of our literature is based and to which many references are made; but second, and greater, to disclose the principles which made these men and women great, which make their lives still shine, after centuries have passed, as examples worthy of the study of millions of Sunday School pupils.

The men and women of Old Testament record were heroic figures who were willing to stand fast and to suffer "for truth and honor's sake." No characteristic stands out more clearly than their unswerving loyalty to right and to God. They made mistakes often, and did wrong sometimes, but still in their hearts they were true to God and country, and their lives breathe the lesson that loyalty is a heroic quality. Loyalty, which led Abraham to leave native land, to journey afar, even to be willing to sacrifice his only son when that seemed to be Jehovah's command; loyalty which is almost synonymous with the names of Ruth and Esther; loyalty which inspired the prophets to face kings and people alike with their unpopular message—such a spirit is the message of Old Testament heroes and heroines.

The stories which we have been reading also reveal the fact that these men and women were usable. God's program does not depend upon finding men to work for Him. His need is for men that are usable, men that will work with Him. Leaders are a step ahead of the people, because they are willing to trust God a little farther. They can see a need. They can see in that need a call for their service. Such are the men and women whom God can use as he did Nehemiah in rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem, and Moses to lead the children of Israel to the promised land. General Booth declares that the secret of the service that he has been able to render is that God has had all of him. Christians who are willing to surrender all to God are the ones whom He can use best.

These heroes and heroines of old were also unselfish. They lived for others, for their nation, for their God. The life of the selfish man is never recorded as that of a hero.

"Others, yes others!
Let this my botto be;
Help me to live for others,
That I may live like Thee."

The Christ-like virtue is found in these Old Testament lives, and is needed today. We are in the midst of great problems—economic, industrial, social and religious. Many stand ready to deplore this condition and that laxity. But more than condemnation is needed. Heroes and heroines who will build up a better social order will think of God and will think of others. In their loyalty, in their whole-hearted service, in their unselfishness, the characters of our lesson present examples which cannot be safely ignored. As the roll is called rapidly, we see:

Abraham, the father of his people, the "friend of God," a pioneer of faith and courage.

Joseph, the faithful in boyish tasks, in slavery, in prison and in the palace of a Pharaoh, the preserver of his people in time of famine and distress.

Moses, the statesman, the law-giver, the humble leader sustained and directed by Jehovah.

Ruth, the Moabitess, faithful and loving ancestress of the Christ.

Samuel, consecrated to the service of God before his birth, a prophet and a judge with an official career beyond reproach.

David, the shepherd lad, warrior, musician, poet, friend, and great king, the "man after God's own heart."

Elijah, the reformer, plain-spoken to King Ahab, kind to the widow, relentless in the destruction of the prophets of Baal, sustained by God, teaching his successor.

Isaiah, the volunteer, with the message of the coming of the Messiah.

Jeremiah, the prophet of denunciation, loyal to his God-given message, though it meant loneliness and unpopularity.

Nehemiah, the patriotic, the organizer with whom the people worked, the man whom opposition could not phase, the successful builder who trusted in God.

Esther, the Jewess queen, beautiful, loving and loyal, who risked her own life in the interest of her people.

And the list could be indefinitely extended if we should tell of all deeds of loyalty of the heroes of their times who have left indelible imprints upon the pages of Jewish history and world progress. They accomplished much in their day. They are still serving as their lives are studied, bringing inspiration to multitudes, for "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that through patience and through comfort of the Scriptures we might have hope."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

Subject: "How Can We Win Friends and Keep Them"?—Prov. 27:5, 6, 9, 10.

Thoughts on the Topic.

Give flowers, and expressions of love, to the living. Do not save all loving words until too late to speak them to cheer your friend.—verse 5.

Some one has defined a friend as one who knows all about you, but loves you just the same. This friend will wish for you the best, will try to bring out the best in your nature. In doing this, he may seem occasionally to wound, but "faithful are the wounds" of a true friend.—Verse 6.

Pretended affection is not friendship. Flattery is not the weapon of a friend, but of the enemy.—Verse 6.

A friend is one who understands, and hence can give wise counsel.—Verse 9.

"We ought always to make choice of persons of such worth and honor for our friends that if they should ever cease to be so they will not abuse our confidence, nor give us cause to fear them as enemies."—Addison. Friends should always sweeten life.—Verse 9.

"Friends are tender and unwilling to give pain, or they are interested and fearful to offend."—Johnson. True friends make life worth while, and it is never wise to desert a friend who has proved faithful.—Verse 10.

Ties of friendship may be closer than those of blood.

A wise man declared that we win friends by our personality; we hold them by our character.

"So long as we love, we serve." Here is the secret of holding friends. But to make selfish demands upon friends, is to lose them.

The foundation of lasting friendship is goodness. There is some element of goodness in the life of any one who can be truly a friend.

Unselfishness is the root of friendship, and the quality upon which it grows. Selfishness kills friendship.

Study to be a friend yourself. This means to give your best to others. If we are friendly, we attract friends.

"The weaklings stumble, the helpless fall,
For lack of a friend to take their part;
A pity it is so few there are
Who have the understanding heart."

"So long as we are loved by others I would almost say that we are indispensable; and no man is useless while he has a friend."—Stevenson.

Friends are won, and held, by the effort to make them happy. Stevenson says: "There is an idea abroad among people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good—myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy—if I may." There is a recipe for making neighbors real friends.

Plans for the Meeting.

Ask the members to come with a Bible verse or a quotation on friendship to give in response to their name at the roll call.

Questions to be handed out in advance and discussed in the meeting:

"How can we become better friends"?

"What do your friends mean to you"?

"How does friendship with Christ make us better friends of man"?

"How far should our friendships extend"?

"Why do we need friends"?

"What qualities do you wish in your friends"?

Illustration for the Meeting.

"Provo Canyon" is one of those grandly picturesque mountain ravines which abound in Utah. In the solitude and sublimity of this canyon a mountaineer named W. W. Ferguson lived a hermit's life. In the winter months his log cabin was, in consequence of the deep snow, shut entirely out from intercourse with human beings. But he was not companionless, this mountain man—for he made friends with the wild animals and birds. He was their friend and they grew fond of him. They learned to recognize his voice and not to be afraid at his approach. They would eat food from his hands, the pigeons and magpies flying from afar when he called, the little squirrels playing about him like kittens.

A year ago a New York gentleman, on a pleasure trip, called at Mr. Ferguson's cabin, and seeing the mountaineer with his bird and animal friends on such good terms, said:

"My friend, you have some power—some charm which these creatures obey. If you will tell me the secret I will give you a hundred dollars."

The hermit, smiling, assured the traveler that the only secret was the kindness with which he always treated them, the kindness which wins animal and man. "They have learned," he said, "that I am their friend, and I have never betrayed their friendship."— Stories for Talks to Boys, by F. H. Cheley.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

At the recent session of the Valley of Virginia Convention, there was a decided sentiment that every Church should receive the benefits of the Convention, and be served through it. Because of this, the following resolution was introduced and passed, and is recorded here as a forward step in the work of the Valley, and as a suggestion to other Conventions. Rev. G. H. Veazey writes that the Alabama Convention is already contemplating a similar grouping of Churches for better Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work. The following is the resolution:

"Whereas, this Convention realizes the need of more thorough co-operation on the part of the Sunday Schools composing the same, and a more effectual organization in order to function properly, be it resolved:

1. That the Executive Committee of the Convention be instructed to meet as early as possible, and not later than thirty days after the adjournment of this Convention, and group the schools of the Convention into convenient districts of not more than six schools nor fewer than two to the district.

2. That for each of these groups or districts, when thus formed, the Executive Committee shall elect a district superintendent, whose business it shall be to visit each school in his district not less than twice a year and seek by such visitation to promote the best interest of the school and of the Convention.

3. That as soon as possible after these district superintendents shall have been selected, the president of the Convention shall call them together in conference to decide upon the policy and program for the Convention year.

4. That the president and district superintendents herein provided for shall constitute the Convention Council, whose business it shall be to promote the work of the Sunday Schools in the Convention and contiguous thereto."

Bethlehem Church, Eastern Virginia, is planning for its "Children's Day" service the fourth Sunday in June.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet this year at Mt. Carmel, July 17 and 18.

North Carolinians should remember "Catawba Springs, July 10, 11, 12," and help to make it their biggest, best Convention.

A Christian Endeavor Society has been organized recently at Belews Creek, with Miss Pauline Fulton as president, and Miss Thyra Strader as secretary. Rev. W. T. Scott is the pastor of the Church here.

Bethel Church, New Hill, N. C., has a Junior Christian Endeavor Society of twenty-three members, who are very much interested in their work. Mrs. W. S. Johnson and Miss Myrtle Holt are leaders in the work.

Many Churches have college students home now for vacation time. Why not use them to help in a Daily Vacation Bible School? That will help them, help your Church, and give the children of your community added Christian teaching in an enjoyable, effective way. Let's have more Vacation Bible Schools!

It is not too late for that "Children's Day" offering from your Church! If you have "Children's Day," that is the time to take it. It will be used to promote Sunday School work in the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention. Let your offering show how much you believe in Sunday Schools for everybody. A liberal offering means a greater work. If you do not plan for a special "Children's Day" program, why not take the offering anyhow, and send it to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 214 South Wilmington Street, Raleigh, N. C., as your contribution to religious education.

SEEN IN A BETTER LIGHT.

The young woman sat sewing in a cool and shaded sitting-room. She was in doubt as to which was the right side of the material which she had basted together. She appealed to the members of the family who were present. After some deliberation, they all agreed on what they believed was the right side.

The young woman went on with her sewing, but in the morning when she carried the dress into a room on the sunny side of the house she saw that she had made it wrong-side out. If, in the beginning, she had carried it into a better light, she would not have had to rip the dress and make it over.

In all our perplexities the best thing to do is to take them into a better light. A few minutes spent in prayer with our Heavenly Father will enable us to see the puzzling problem in a clearer atmosphere.—Queen's Garden.

Christian Orphanage

A YOUNG MAN WINS GOLD.

Dear Friends:

Nothing brings more joy to the workers in the Christian Orphanage than to see our children make good. In our joy we forget the years of care and toil that have been spent in taking care of and training the child. Some years ago our dear friend and brother, Rev. J. L. Foster, who was the first superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, made a promise to give a prize in gold to the first child reared in the Orphanage who graduated at Elon College. During his administration as superintendent a little boy in the town of Burlington lost his father and mother and came to the Christian Orphanage to live. This little boy lived under the administration of every superintendent the Orphanage has had, and was found faithful and true by all of them. He was faithful in his work at the Orphanage. He was faithful in his studies. He could always be depended on for truth and honesty. This boy grew into young manhood, finished high school and entered Elon College. Our hearts were made glad at the Elon commencement to see this young man, a member of the large graduating class, receive his diploma and the prize in gold given by Bro. Foster. Bro. Foster could not be present, and Dr. W. W. Staley was chosen by him to present the gold, and we quote his speech in full.

Presentation of One Hundred Dollars in Gold.

During the administration of Rev. James L. Foster, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, he made a promise that he would bestow a present upon the first graduate from that institution, and that promise matures today.

Bro. Foster cannot be present, and he has honored me with the privilege and pleasure of presenting his gift to the winner of this noble prize.

The fortunate recipient of this splendid gift is Thomas H. Andrews, who is the first college graduate from the Christian Orphanage. I will thank Mr. Andrews to stand up and let us look upon his happy face. The gift promised by Bro. Foster, and which I now present, is one hundred dollars in gold, and with this coin of finest metal he sends his prayers and golden wishes for your usefulness and success in this world, and a crown of life in the world to come.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Ladies of the Christian Church, Wakarusa, Ind., 33 dresses, 4 blouses, 2 pairs pants, 2 boy's suits; Detta Smith, Broadway, Va., 6 sheets; Mrs. J. F. Brennuman, Buckland, Ohio, 4 dresses; Mrs. W. H. Speight, Sunbury, N. C., 1 blue suit, 1 blouse, 1 underwear, 3 pairs shoes, 3 pairs hose, 1 collar, elastic; Mrs. H. E. Hurdle, Berkley, Va., 2 sheets; Mrs. B. H. Willard, Danville, Ill., 1 quilt.

HARRELL.

Exactly three weeks after his aged father, Edward R., was buried at Cypress Chapel Church, A. L. Harrell, aged 66, treasurer of Cypress Church thirty-two years, twenty-five years constable of Cypress District, and president of the Patrons' League, passed over the river after a brief illness.. He was twice married, and is survived by his wife and seven children—five by the first marriage and two by the second. He has been a prominent figure in Nansemond County for many years.

An immense congregation attended the funeral services at Cypress Sunday afternoon June 3, conducted by Revs. W. W. Staley and L. L. Lassiter, in the absence of Pastor Rev. J. M. Roberts, who was absent on account of a dislocated shoulder.

GREEN.

Mrs. Alma F. Green, widow of R. E. Green, died at her home in Greensboro, 439 Walker Ave., May 3, 1923, at the age of 69.

She is survived by three daughters—Mrs. C. C. Fry, of Hamp; Mrs. E. P. Adams, Greensboro, and Mrs. W. D. Williams, of Rocky Mount—and five sons—F. E., J. F., and B. H. Green, of Greensboro; J. M. Green, of Fayetteville, and H. E. Green, of Rocky Mount—besides many other relatives and friends.

Burial at Park's X Roads, of which Church she was a member. The floral offering was beautiful.

"Dearest Mother, thou hast left us;
Here, thy loss we deeply feel.
But 'tis God that hath bereft us—
He can all our sorrows heal."

RESOLUTIONS.

The Christian Church at Chapel Hill has been bereaved of a dear and faithful member in the passing to his reward of Bro. Samuel Milton Pickard on April 18, 1923. As a tribute to his beautiful character, we offer the following resolutions:

First.—That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Second.—That in the death of our brother, the Church has lost a faithful member and loyal worker.

Third.—That we extend our sincere sympathy to the dear family who so deeply mourn the loss of husband and father. May this dispensation serve to strengthen the bonds between earth and Heaven, and give greater hope for that "unbroken circle around the great white throne."

Fourth.—That we shall cherish the memory of Bro. Pickard, and that these resolutions be spread on the records of our Church and a copy sent to The Christian Sun and the local papers, and to the bereaved family.

D. S. LONG,
E. W. NEVILLE,

CROSS.

Mrs. Frank Cross, a member of Suffolk Christian Church, and daughter of the late Walter H. Eley, passed away June 2nd, and was buried from their Jackson Street residence Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock. She is survived by her husband, two sisters, one brother, and many relatives and friends. A quartet from the Church rendered music, and the service was conducted by Pastor Staley, who had married them nearly twenty-two years ago. Peace to her ashes and comfort for her husband.

KIMBALL.

Mr. Robert Hamilton Kimball, of Enfield, N. C., died May 29, 1923. He was born in Warren County, N. C., March 31, 1856. Age, 67 years 1 month and 28 days. He was a member of Mt. Auburn Christian Church. He was buried in Enfield, where he made his home for a number of years.

He leaves two brothers, Mr. B. R. Kimball, Sr., of Enfield, and Mr. Lewis N. Kimball, of Manson; two sisters, Mrs. D. P. Quincy, of Enfield, and Mrs. Thomas H. Twisdale, of Spring Hill, N. C. He died at the home of his nephew, Mr. W. G. Kimball.

MAURICE KIMBALL.

WALKER.

Mary Sue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Walker, was born November 29, 1916, and died, after a long and serious illness of measles and pneumonia, on April 30, 1923.

For six years, Mary lived to bless her home, her Sunday School, and the community in which she lived. She was obedient to her parents, affectionate to all, unselfish to an unusual degree, and radiantly happy every day.

It was in the early morning she went away. It was in the morning part of the day, and in the early morning of life. She went to heaven early. There she waits for those who have loved and have lost her for a while.

Funeral by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. R. Potter, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Burlington.

APPLE—HUFF.

On Saturday evening, June 2, 1923, at 4 o'clock, a wedding of beautiful simplicity was that of Miss Grace Glenn Apple, of Greensboro, and Mr. Jesse Virgil Huff, of Winston-Salem, solemnized at the residence of the bride's pastor, Rev. H. Russel Clem. The impressive ring ceremony was used.

Mrs. Huff is the daughter of Mrs. Alice T. Apple, 530½ South Elm Street, and is a young woman of beautiful character and many lovely traits. She has been employed for some months at the District Nurse Home.

Mr. Huff is connected with the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem. The bride received many pretty and useful presents, besides winning the Greensboro merchants' prize for being the first June bride.

The young couple will live on Cameron Avenue, Winston-Salem, N. C.

A Marked Difference.—

A certain firm issued an order against smoking cigarettes, whereupon an employee wrote that he had been handling freight there for thirty years, all the time smoking cigarettes, and that no one had ever found fault with his work. To this the manager replied: "Thirty years ago you and I started together where you are today, but you are still handling freight, and will be to the end of the chapter."

Some Little Things.—

Some author unknown to this writer has a fine word to say of some small things, and he says what he says well, as follows:

"Little words are the sweetest to hear; little charities fly farthest, and stay longest on the wing; little lakes are the stillest; little hearts are the fullest, and little farms are the best tilled. Little books are read the most, and little songs the dearest loved. And when nature would make anything especially rare and beautiful, she makes it little; little pearls, little diamonds, little dews. Agar's is a model prayer; but then it is a little one; and the burden of the petition is for but little. The Sermon on the Mount is little, but the last dedication discourse was an hour long. Life is made up of littles; death is what remains of them all. Day is made up of little beams and night is glorious with little stars."

Are You For The Constitution of The United States.—

Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes made a center shot not long ago when he called attention to the fact that the men who buy and the men who sell illicit liquor are alike culpable and essentially lawless. Of the buying class he said: "These citizens seem not yet to have realized that only one question is involved in prohibition law enforcement: Are you for or against the Constitution of the United States? It is not to be wondered that the bootleggers and criminals will violate the law for the sake of possible illegal gains, but it is difficult to understaand how prominent clubmen, business and professional men, become parties to such violations." If these statements be true, and they are, then the wealthy sport who buys and drinks and the mountain bootlegger who makes and sells are on the very same level.—Ex.

The Real Need of our Country.—

The reports of a revival sweeping over certain sections of Mississippi and the effect it is having moved a business journal, the Manufacturer's Record, to a comment that sounds as though it had been written by a preacher. The comment would be true by whomsoever written, but we give it because it seems to be a confession of serious men of business: "The country needs, more than anything else, a genuine nation-wide revival of old-time religion—the religion that accepts the teachings of the Bible as divine; a religion that makes the employer honest in dealing with his employees and the employee equally honest in dealing with his employer; a religion that makes every adherent of it through and through honest and honorable in every transaction and in every relation of life; a religion which uplifts, which makes men realize that in the literal fulfilling of the teachings of the Golden Rule there is safety, and nowhere else is there safety for business or society. The world is in a turmoil, partly economic, but largely through the failure of religion to function fully in the hearts and lives of those who profess is."—Ex.

Father, Speak to Johnnie.—

Ashamed of nothing but sin; afraid of no one but God. These two qualifications will make a strong man out of a weak one, and a rich man out of a poor one. The condition of the world is one of faint-heartedness. We once heard a great man say that there were usually brains enough in any city to run several cities; but not usually heart enough to run one city. A man and his wife were once seasick, and were out on deck near the rail, trying to get relief. The mother saw their little son climbing to a dangerous position on the rail. She was composed enough to see his danger but not strong enough to command him, so she faintly said to her husband, "Father, speak to Johnnie." The father, with neither composure enough to see the danger nor strength to give a command, said, in a much fainter voice, "How d'you do, Johnnie." Someone, condemning preachers for being half-hearted in their preaching, illustrated his point by accusing a certain preacher of saying, "You must repent in a sense, believe the Gospel as it were and be converted so to speak, or you will be damned in a measure." It counts but little for us to cultivate the dramatic art and play that we are in earnest. A clear vision of sin and a clear vision of God will put us in earnest. But, however great the tension, we must sometimes relax and rest; for "He giveth his beloved sleep." Goodnight.—Exchange.

The Fourfold Judgment of God.—

Noting that we are living in the 189th decade since Jesus prophesied of coming woes upon the world, the Wesleyan Methodist words graphically the present decade fulfilment of the solemn warning of the Master in what is called, "God's Fourfold Judgment—a Call to Prayer." What an array of solemn facts are these:

"1. The worst war the world has ever seen, costing 10,000,000 lives and over $200,000,000,000.

2. The worst earthquake in human history, the one in China during December, 1920, 'which literally shook the globe,' and carried suddenly into eternity a quarter of a million lives. (Some authorities place the estimate far higher.)

3. The worst famine 'the world has hitherto known,' that of Russia, in which millions perished miserably through starvation, and added millions through starvation plus disease.

4. The worst pestilence, in some respects, known to man, world-wide in extent, and exacting a toll of full 12,000,000 lives. In the short space of twelve weeks nearly 6,000,000 persons died. In South Africa the mortality of three wars, and in India in a few months' time 5,000,000 deaths occurred.

Is it, or is it not, significant that all these prophesied judgements, in their worst form should occur in the same decade?"—Way of Faith.

Are You A Sucker?—

No man likes to be called a "sucker," and yet we are inclined to believe that the saying of some one is true, that "one is born every minute." The statement is made that during last year the "suckers" of this country lost to the "fishermen," who went after them with gilded hooks, the enormous amount of $2,000,000,000. Oil well, gold mining and real estate schemes are the usual bait employed. In every case there is held out the promise of great returns from small investments. One of the striking things about this method is that the thing advertised is almost invariably a long way from those to whom the effort is made to sell. Many people, indeed most people who buy, do so merely on the representation of those who are promoting the scheme. They are so infatuated with the idea of getting rich quick that they do not use their better judgment in the matter, but recklessly risk, it may be, the savings of a life time. If the schemes that are so persistently advertised were what they claim to be there would be no need for advertising them. If there is postive evidence as is often claimed that certain land will produced oil in large quantities, there will be no difficulty in inducing capitalists who are in a position to make an investigation to furnish all the money needed. If they will not do it, the scheme usually is either a fraud or a gamble. If the money lost through these means during the past year had been used in legitimate business or been kept in savings banks, many thousands of people in this country would be far better off today than they are as they mourn over their losses. It is far better to deal with people you know than with strangers.—Presbyterian of the South.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. S. L. Beougher is writing some very interesting articles for our Sun columns. Do not miss one of them, as to do so means a loss to him who forgets, or who neglects to read them.

We see it is announced in The Herald of Gospel Liberty that our Bro. Riddle of Burlington is receiving congratulations—it is a daughter. Best wishes to the happy father and mother of the dear little newcomer.

Rev. Hugh Black says: "Of the reality of fellowship with God every religious man is assured. Religion implies such a relationship of love and grace on the part of God. How such a consciousness brings strength and comfort to a human heart let every one who knows the power of salvation attest."

Rev. J. E. Franks is a busy man. He operates a farm, but then he manages to get more work done in his church than many others, and yet we do not recall a single instance of hearing him complain of having so much to do, and that is more than some of the rest of us could say. For instance, dear old Deacon Alfred Moring used to say he had "seen people who were very busy, but never accomplished much". He was hitting at this writer then, all good naturally of course.

Some one has offered the following prayer, which is most suitable and appropriate for us all. There is not a Christian, man or woman, boy or girl, who might not make such sentiment the point of such a prayer: "We thank thee, O Father, for the matchless example of Jesus, thy Son. Through him inspire us contiually to something better than our second best. And through these Christ-spurred lives of ours may others find their way to him and serve him and their fellows with more joy and success. Amen."

Revs. H. H. Butler and I. W. Johnson, D. D., are known locally as the "marrying Parsons", and they do so much of that sort of work that the people seem to look upon them as in a sort of a race to see who may have to his credit the larger number of marriages when they go up to the Conference each fall. Sometimes it is one and then another which gets in the lead, but most of the time they run "neck and neck". They are close rivals for the honors of the year in this line, but the rivalry is harmless and in good nature.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, now engaged in our mountain work, has been called to succeed the editor of this paper as the pastor of the Christian church at Henderson. The editor of The Sun retires July 1 as pastor of this church, in order to give his whole time to editing THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is believed that Bro. Bradshaw will accept, although he has not formerly done so as yet. Bro. Bradshaw should he accept, will have a field to command his best efforts as a preacher and pastor. We wish for him and the church the best of results in their united labors for the cause of Christ.

Have you decided that most important question as to whether you will send your son or your daughter off to school this fall? Well, now, it is about time that you were giving this matter important consideration. Education will be worth far more to your child than the money you may save by keeping the son or the daughter at home. A young man or a young woman cannot hold his or her own in this day of intellectual training without the help of that sort of training. You may keep your children at home at work, making money, but it will mean that you are keeping them in ignorance. Think, now while you may.

"Any true religious awakening, any real repentance will set one asking, 'What must I do?' Touching the springs of feeling counts for little if the springs of action also are not stirred. A resolve that spends itself in emotion without motion does not go very deep or last long." That is a fine thought. Many people object to emotion. It may be if our emotion was always accompanied with motion, that such objection would disappear. Let us try it. Emotion without motion does not get us anywhere, but emotion accompanied with real motion, that is, with the proper effort on our part gives power and fruitfulness to the emotion which the heart sends forth. Let us see that the two, emotion and motion, go together in our lives.

We are all busy these days, or we ought to be, and we have no doubt that our College Presidents, Dr. Harper and Mr. Hook, Dr. Harper at Elon and Mr. Hook for Bethlehem, are as busy as they know how to be, for both institutions are in the midst of a big building program and it keeps them about as busy as they can be. Dr. Harper is leading in the work of constructing new buildings to take the place of the one that was burned last January, and Bro. Hook's work for Bethlehem is in the erection of the first building for Bethlehem. Brethren of the Christian Church, let us give them all the sympathetic encouragement we can, for they are carrying a heavy burden and they are doing it for the Christian Church as representing the cause of Christ.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., has the biggest job of his life on his hands just now. He is leading his people in the work of building and equipping a new house of worship in that city, which it is estimated will cost the sum of a quarter of a million of dollars. Some one said they did not believe that he could do it, but his work is saying, as in answer to this doubter, "We are doing it", and when last heard from, he had not borrowed a dollar with which to do this work, that is to say, that his Norfolk congregation had raised all money with which to pay bills up to a very recent date. He will finish it, the Lord willing, and then this doubting prophet will likely say: "Well, I really did not think they could do it." No doubt that is true, but you see it shows conclusively that you do not always know what you are talking about. Hereafter you will do well to be sure you are right before you prophesy bad things of those you know little about. The building for the Norfolk Christian Temple, under the blessings of God, will be built and on time, or very nearly so, and it will not only be a credit to our denomination, but it will be a credit to the city of Norfolk. Indeed, there are not many church edifices in that city which will be more of a credit to that city than our own Christian Temple.

1923 CONVENTION REPORTS.

Every Sunday School Superintendent in the North Carolina and Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions has received report blanks for both Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society in their church, during the past two weeks. It is very important that these reports be mailed in as promptly as possible, those for Eastern Virginia to Rev. B. J. Earp, 2301 Roanoke Avenue, Newport News, Va., those for North Carolina, to Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia.

These reports show that your Sunday School or Christian Endeavor Society is alive and growing. They are the only source of information upon which to estimate the progress of the work.

These reports are for publication in the Handbook issued annually by the Board of Religious Education. This book is used for reference, and should contain latest statistics and names of officials. A little time on the part of every superintendent and secretary would make possible an up-to-date and useful Handbook. Send in your reports promptly that they may be tabulated and charted before the annual Conventions in July. If your Sunday School or Christian Endeavor Society failed to receive a report blank, write to the Field Secretary, 1012 East Marshall, Richmond, Virginia, at once, and one will be sent.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Question.—Is it a fact that the negro progress in the United States is great?—J. E. F.

I have no means of answering through my personal knowledge, but the following facts are given in the public press of a recent date:

In all history, there hardly is anything to compare with the progress of the American negro in the little more than fifty years since emancipation. An article in the Commercial and Financial Chronicle says there are now in the United States 12,000,000 negroes. They constitute one-seventh of the working force of the country. Of the 3,000,000 men, 800,000 are farmers and 1,000,000 farm laborers. Eighty per cent of the women are in necessary home and industrial life.

Question.—Why do you think it is that so little is preached today about future punishment? I hardly ever hear a preacher say anything even bearing on that question. Why is this so?—Inquirer.

Now, you have asked me a hard question? Of course, all I can do is to think, as to this matter. Some say the spirit of the age is against it. It does not matter what the spirit of the age may think, as long as God has spoken; the preacher of the Gospel should tell what God has bidden him tell to the people. Others may think there is too much refinement in this age to preach such a doctrine as hell. Refinement has nothing to do with it. A refined woman who is not a Christian will meet future punishment just as much so as the coarse who are not Christian in fact. Dr. H. C. Morrison says, in a paragraph bearing on this subject: "For a generation there has not been much said on the subject of the future punishment of the wicked. It is an unpopular subject, but need not be. We are not suggesting that the pastor rant at the people or threaten them, but it would be a real help to present conditions of reckless worldliness and wickedness, if a few tens of thousands of preachers in these United States who devote two or three Sabbath mornings to Scriptural preaching on the fearful fruitage of sin against God, both in this life and the life to come. Let the minister speak positively, but kindly; let him quote the words of the Lord Jesus and point out the true philosophy of sin and the logical consequences of the same. Let him show the unfitness of souls to dwell with God in heaven who live in rebellion against God on earth. There is a way to preach about hell that is offensive and makes people to feel that God is cruel, but there is a pure Gospel on the subject; there are plain Scriptural teachings; there is a sound philosophy of future punishment which ought to be faithfully presented to the people. Men who are lost, destroy themselves; destroy themselves against the will of God, the love of God, and the plan of God for their salvation."

WHERE IS OUR CAPTAIN?

OPTIMIST, TRUTHIST, PESSIMIST.

And what are you—Optimist, Truthist, or Pessimist? And what is an optimist? Webster says it is one who believes that all things are ordered for the best. And what is a Truthist? We have coined the word and now we must make a meaning for it. A Truthist is a person who sticks to the truth all way and declares that truth is better than optimism or pessimism. We do not hestitate a moment in claiming to be a Truthist. Only recently, because we told the truth, as we saw it, we were called a pessimist. That did not abash us, and it did not because that is not our name. And what is a pessimist? It is, Webster tells us, one who is disposed to take the least hopeful view of things. We surely do not belong to that class and whoever put us in it, put us where we do not belong and where we will not stay.

As a truthist we are to tell the truth as a stepping-stone to right and justice. Because we repeated what a few men of national and international prominence have said in regard to the present state of the Church, we were classed as a pessimist. All right, but remember that when optimism and pessimism are both dead, Truthism will be living and standing for the better and larger things of the kingdom of God. We believe in telling the truth, even though the truth may hurt, for more we tell the truth and the more it hurts, the more surely will the people be awakened to the alarming situation, and the more certainly will they seek a remedy for the evil which seems to threaten their best interests. Beloved, shall we tell the truth and so strive to arouse and awaken the people to present dangers that they may do their best to apply a saving remedy, or would it be wise, in the name and for the sake of optimism, to hide the facts and the true situation from the people on whom rests the responsibility of changing the forbidding situation? Be candid and man enough to face this question and give an honest answer. Do you wish your editor, as a journalist for the Christian Church and the cause of Christ to play mum where danger to the cause we love is lurking, or do you wish him to tell the truth, as he sees it in an effort to arouse and awaken the people we serve to face the real evils which lurk along the way we must go? Which is the wiser, to let the truth be hid, and in the name of optimism induce the people to believe that everything is going well and full of hope, when at the same time, the editor knows that there are some things which are forbidding, and need to be corrected as quickly as possible, in order to bring best results? If any one wishes us to shut our eyes to real and serious dangers to the cause we love and for which we labor, and make the people believe that all is going well, in the name of common honesty we shall have to decline the undertaking.

Let me illustrate: John Jones has a sick wife. She is very sick and the doctor is sent for. He is an optimist. He comes in and diagnoses the case as nothing more than a little disorder of the stomach which will correct itself pretty soon, and he bids the family farewell, after he has given a simple remedy for the disordered stomach, saying you will hardly need me again in this case but if you do, call me. He goes down the road and meets a neighbor of Mr. Jones, who knowing of Mrs. Jones' sickness asks the doctor what he thinks of her condition. "Well," said the doctor, "Mrs. Jones is a very sick woman and not much chance to relieve her." Who would wish such a doctor to attend his loved ones in time of peril? If it would be reprehensible in the doctor to so deceive one in such a time, how much worse is it in a journalist to deceive the people he seeks to serve by pretending that everything is going well, when he knows that just the opposite is true. For one we cannot do it and we will not. We mean to do our best for the promotion of the cause of Christ, but if we see dangers ahead, we mean to give the warning and do our best to arouse the people to meet and drive the ugly conditions from us till the cause of our Lord and Master may truly shine in the splendor and glory of real progress.

It was only recently that a dear friend said to us in person: "Well, I have thought that you were unnecessarily alarmed over the fight that is being made against the Bible, but now I am beginning to see that you were right and I was lacking sense to see the truth on that question". That man is a man of sense, he is known throughout the state of Virginia, and in many instances far outside of the boundary lines of his own state as a man of fine reputation and a character unsullied. What do you suppose he would think of the editor of his church paper if the editor had all the while been seeking to minimize the fight against the Bibe and trying to persuade the people whom he, in the good providence of God, had been serving, that it means nothing—that there is no danger to the cause of Christ from this source, and that, too, when he had discovered that the editor was simply trying to make everybody feel that all is well and that there is no danger whatever to the cause we love and serve? If our people wish an editor to do that sort of work for them, they will have to secure him in the person of another, for we cannot do that sort of work.

Now a word as to optimism and pessimism. We are an optimist of optimists, when it comes to the final triumph of the gospel. There is no power in earth or in hell that can destroy the Church of Christ, or the Word of God. For that kind of optimism we stand and by the grace of God we will stand to the end of life.

Any intelligent and well read man knows that while the Christian has the most abiding faith in the final triumph of the gospel of the Son of God, it is nevertheless true that there have been seasons of depression in the Lord's work, off and on from the days of Christ Himself until now. Is it therefore anything strange that such days of depression should come in the twentieth century? Is it strange that a great world war should so depress and disorganize the forces of Christianity that a dark day should hover over the present situation of the Church? Men of common sense know that this is true. Then why should a man be dubbed a pessimist because he has the sense and the courage to be candid and admit the plain facts with a view to stirring the people to better effort that such evil tendencies may be driven into oblivion forever, that the Gospel of the Son of God may face the issue in triumph and glory. Which is better the Optimist or the Truthist? Optimist is a misnomer, except in so far as it is true to the truth. Brethren, think a bit and see if you cannot see the wisdom of telling the truth as it is, rather than white-washing it in the name of optimism, regardless of the facts?

Let us tell the truth and the truth only, for the day is far spent and the night comes on apace!

Well may we stop and ask the significant question:

Where is our Captain?

A recent writer puts the thought this way, and we commend his words to our readers. He says:

There is a story of the sinking of a steamer that illustrates the most vital truth we are stating. The steamer had to be abandoned, and the crew and passengers took to the boats. The captain remained on the bridge until he was engulfed by the rising waves. One of the boats passed him, and he asked to be taken on. But it was thought to be already overloaded, and the fear-striken sailors refused him. The boat rode the waves, but no one on board knew how to guide it to the near shore; and so all on board perished for the lack of the very thing they had refused—the safe leadership of their rightful chief.

That's just such a picture as the world makes today; it is a ship in a storm, drifting here and there without its Captain, Whom it refuses to take on board, and is doomed to death without His leadership.

Why is it that the world is not busy to get Him back? He is what we need. Isn't it strange that the men will hear the story of a Christ that walked on the sea, that fed the multitude, and yet do not cry out to God: 'Oh, send Him back again!' "

ARE THE UNSAVED SPIRITUALLY BLIND?

Certainly, they are! They cannot discern spiritual truth. For this statement, we have the authority of Jesus Christ Himself. Did not He say that without the new birth we cannot see the kingdom of God? Spiritual blindness is the malady which is now afflicting the world, and it has been doing so since Jesus came and offered light to as many as believe. There are many people who have eyes, but they cannot see either spiritual truth or the kingdom of God. Paul says spiritual things are spiritually discerned. Hence, if one have not the spiritual nature, how can he see spiritual truth, or anything that is spiritual? Most certainly, he cannot.

With this principle as standing-ground, would we be not justified in saying that there are most likely thousands of men and women who are in darkness because they have not been opened to see and grasp the truth.

This lack of spiritual truth will keep as many as have it not out of heaven. Jesus said they cannot see the kingdom of God, and we take it that that means such cannot live in and enjoy the kingdom of God, and they cannot simply because they lack spiritual qualification.

Now, spiritual qualification rests on faith in the promises of God. That seems to have been Peter's understanding of the matter. In his second epistle 1:4, he says:

"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

Lust blinds us, but the divine nature gives us open eyes and a clear spiritual vision, enables us to see what otherwise would be hidden.

"I would not be without THE CHRISTIAN SUN for $100 a year; it is certainly a fine paper."—Hon. I. W. Pritchard, Chapel Hill, N. C. You might think that is the statement of a man who does not think well before he speaks, but it is not. Bro. Pritchard is a very conservative man, and he by no means believes in throwing away his money. Hence, the greater weight should be attached to what he says. He has served his State in the Legislature and made an enviable name for himself in the work he did there. His opinion is worth much, and THE SUN appreciates his estimate of the paper's value.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

WITH THE WORKERS.

Rev. H. M. Gray, the wide awake, consecrated, and beloved pastor of our Lanett, Ala., church, writing under date June 4 says: "Our church is going up and we are going to do good work in building. We are not going to leave anything undone about the building. It is going to be a nice house of worship. Am getting along fine with my work. Have just closed a revival. So we are having a good time."

Brother Gray hopes to have the building ready for dedication in August. It is to be a handsome and ample edifice. He is doing a great work, and his people are with him heart and soul.

Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, pastor of our Reidsville, N. C., church, is another wide awake pastor who through consecrated effort brings great things to pass. He has received twenty-five members within the past three months, and the attendance at his regular church services have averaged two hundred. The pastor has a Men's Bible Class composed mostly of heads of families, numbering sixty to seventy-five men each Sunday. Brother Ledbetter knows how to go after the men of the town and get them to Sunday school. He is a man of activity and resources, and God seems to be blessing his efforts. He says that the pastors who lead their people on constantly to new and larger efforts in Kingdom service do not wait for their congregations to lead them on.

The writer was with Rev. J. Lee Johnson, pastor at Catawba Springs, Wake County, N. C., last Sunday. The house of worship is now being enlarged to meet the requirements of the constantly increasing Sunday school and church attendance. It is purposed to have the enlarged house ready by the meeting time of the North Carolina Sunday School Convention with this church middle of July. Brother Johnson is another resourceful pastor who leads his people on to enlarged efforts and activities in Kingdom service. One of his congregations (Wake Chapel) is now erecting a handsome brick structure to take the place of the inadequate wooden structure now outgrown. Brother Johnson is one of our happiest, most aggressive and successful rural pastors. He is doing a great work, and his people are most happy under his leadership.

MEN AND MILLIONS PAYMENTS.

Very many of our people who pledged to Men and Millions are making a most commendable effort to meet their pledges. Many of course have had reverses, and pledges made in the days of great financial prosperity are found difficult to meet in days more trying. I feel, however, that the great majority of these pledges will be paid as rapidly as our people can meet them.

Brother C. D. Johnston, Executive Secretary, hands me the following report for the month of May:

IMPROVEMENTS TO BE MADE.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

The board of Trustees in their annual meeting held May 29th, decided to make three improvements in our Orphanage plant that will mean much to the success of the work of the institution.

First: The Board authorized Mr. W. K. Holt, chairman of the Board and Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent, to have a swimming pool built for the Orphanage children. This is a needed necessity; pools are being built near us and it is the nature of boys to want to go in swimming and some might go to the pools and get drowned and no one know where they were. If we have a pool of our own there will be no excuse to go away from the orphanage grounds for this pleasure, and, too, our pool will be under strict supervision for the protection of the children.

Second: They authorized the superintendent to put in necessary machinery for a first class repair shoe shop for the use of the orphanage and any other outside work we might want to do. This will be quite a convenience to us in the work and will be a help to the children in learning how to repair shoes.

Third: They authorized the superintendent to have plans drawn for a combination kitchen and dining room and present to the Board at its next meeting, this will give the children an opportunity to eat together and will cut out some expense in kitchen help and fuel. This building is to be a two story building and the second story is to be used for a school room or an auditorium where we can have all the children meet in religious worship and song services. It will also give us the space, in the present dining rooms for more children as we grow stronger and are able to care for more.

I want to say in closing this letter that the good ladies have sent in to date 256 sheets, and 245 dresses. This is a splendid response to our call and we are grateful indeed.

ELON LETTER.

I chanced the other day to meet with a man who has given liberally already to the Rebuilding Program. "I am certainly glad to see that everybody is to have a chance to aid in rebuilding our College, from richest to poorest", he said. "I do not think," he continued, "Col. Holland, as Chairman of the Emergency Committee, could have conceived a finer idea than this of offering even to the children an opportunity to contribute to this cause. It will mean not only money which we greatly need, but also a growing loyalty to our College."

This brother is right. He said he was looking forward to the celebration of College Day in his church and anticipating the pleasure he would sustain when he could see little tots making their offering for the College later to be in many cases their own Alma Mater.

Col. Holland did do a splendid thing when he suggested this plan, later approved by the Southern Christian Convention. It would not be right to deny even the poorest and youngest of our Brotherhood the opportunity to have part in this good enterprise. Three cents will lay a brick, says Brother Jack Darden. Every child should be encouraged to have at least one brick in these buildings, which, God willing, are to serve the cause of Christian Education in our Church for a century and more. And many of our devoted friends on that day will want to put in the equivalent of a thousand or of ten thousand bricks.

No general canvass is to be made for our striken College. Our promise has been given not to do so during the Men and Millions period and it is not up till April 30, 1925. But offerings to the Lord's work are always permissible and give such joy to those whe make them. Let the giving on College Day in each church be a sacramental act. Let it be seasoned with prayer and consecrated with joyous sacrifice.

I am gratified at the fine response that is coming in from our pastors, outlining their plans for College Day. We are doing our best to respond promptly from the office. There is a reason for their response and our ready cooperation: the future of our College is at stake, the College that has given us such leaders as L. E. Smith, J. E. Rawles, I. W. Johnson, D. R. Fonville. C. H. Rowland, H. C. Simpson, Mrs. J. B. Gay, Mrs. A. F. Smith, J. Lee Johnson, Miss Ruth Johnson, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, A. W. Andes, P. J. Carlton, H. M. Holland, G. F. Whitley, G. O. Lankford, M. W. Hook, H. S. Hardcastle, H. Shelton Smith, J. T. Kernodle, S. C. Harrell, W. H. Boone, E. M. Carter, J. F. Morgan, B. F. Black, D. P. Barrett, Toshio Sato and a host of others too numerous to mention, who are the hope and inspiration and working force of our Church.

We cannot afford to let the College which has achieved this service for the Church suffer. We will sacrifice to give this College the equipment for a larger service in the strategic field of Christian Education; the hope of the church and of the world.

And so the faithful and true of our Brotherhood are laying their plans well and watering them with the heavenly dews of prayer that liberal response may be made to the cry of our College for help in this tragic hour. Our College has faith in our pastors and in our people. She has faith in prayer and in God.

W. A. HARPER.

THE UNEXPECTED GOD.

How full of surprises God is! He who is most sure of God is never quite sure what He will do next, in what situations He will manifest Himself, out of what griefs He will bring glory.

One Man's Tragedy.

Here is a lad far from home in the midst of a wild country. He is not only a wanderer. He is a fugitive. The anger of a brother whose birthright he has stolen had made it unsafe for him to remain at home any longer. For him it is exile or death. Not for years will he hear again his mother's voice or feel her hand in love and blessing upon his head. Probably never again will he see the father whose fast-ebbing strength gave token that death is not far away. And he has been very much a home boy. He cared not for the fields and the chase. He preferred sitting by the camp fire and listening to the homely conversation of his parents. And now that is all behind him—how far behind him he does not know—perhaps forever. With sinking heart he sees the sun setting in the western sky and watches "darkness fall from the wing of night."

In addition to the distress of his separation from home was the lugubrious weight of his sense of guilt. Had he been exiled because of his espousal of some unappreciated virtue there would have been some compensation. John Bunyan found his prison cell a place of glory. While his heart ached at his separation from wife and children, there was blessed balm in the consciousness that his separation was for conscience's sake. But there is no such anodyne for Jacob. While he sits upon the rocks of the hillside, thicker than the gathering shadows comes about him the gloom of a guilty conscience. "Conscience doth make cowards of us all." What if Esau were upon his trail with such wild blood-thirsty fellows as usually consorted with him? He can picture the scene should he be overtaken—Esau's anger, his own helplessness, a few sickening blows, a wail, spurting blood, darkness. A night bird's call sends a shiver through him.

To add to his unhappiness, there is the uncertainty of tomorrow. What if he finally arrives at his uncle's tents and pastures? Uncles are sometimes hard taskmasters. He will not meet him on terms of equality, for he is a fugitive. If there were any hardness in Laban's disposition, present circumstances would only accentuate it. It is a lonely and comfortless lad that finally makes a pillow of stone and, throwing his cloak over his face, succumbs to weariness and sleep.

His Surprise.

And then the unexpected happened. He dreamed—a dream of angels and of God. To him the dream became a revelation. He was persuaded that his vision was a token that he was not abandoned to his fate, that in spite of his folly and sin, God still loved him. After all, the lonely man was not alone. The friendless had a great Friend, the defenseless a great Defender. And so the place of fears became a place of confidence; the night of despair was lighted by a great hope; the barren hillside was none other than the house of God and the gate of heaven. Had any one told Jacob as night overtook him that God was near, he would have been laughed to scorn. But God was near. And Jacob had a surprise whose gladness he never forgot. In the long, weary years ahead, while he toiled to build a home and get a start in life, he remembered and was comforted.—REV. ALBERT E. DAY, in N. Y. Advocate.

OVERCOMING PROFANITY.

About twenty or more years ago a gentleman, on one Saturday in July, reached Monticello, Ark. He went to the "Hall House," the leading hotel of the town at that day. On Sabbath morning he went to the Presbyterian Church. Dr. S. C. Alexander, father of R. O. Alexander, of Charlotte, N. C., and S. C. Alexander, of Pine Bluff, Ark., was at that time pastor.

After the 11 o'clock worship, the gentleman in question went back to his hotel for dinner. After dinner he went to his room on the second story. From the hall on which his room opened, a stairway led down to a broad front porch that extended the entire length of the hotel. This porch, being liberally supplied with chairs, furnished an inviting gathering-place for men, guests and others about town.

The guest in the room just mentioned desired to be alone and to spend at least a part of the afternoon without interruption. Soon after settling down for the afternoon, as he supposed, he, somewhat unwilling, became aware of voices of men from the front porch below. These voices rapidly became more numerous and earnest, good-natured, but boisterous and profane. Our would-be-alone guest arose and closed the door and windows. It was a warm afternoon and it soon became, if not intolerable, certainly very unpleasant. Meantime, the voices from the front porch became more numerous and the profanity seemed to increase. Something must be done, ought to be done; but what? With no plan of action, save to do that which was right and tactful, the gentleman arose, took the chair in which he was sitting and descended to the front porch. There, grouped around a good-natured, loud, profane-talking leader he saw about fifteen men, all talking rather loudly and all in good spirit and apparently all indulging in profanity.

Again, with no plan of action, save to try first masterly inaction, he placed his chair near to the leader and joined as adroitly as he could in the conversation. He did not swear, but talked at as lively a pace as any one. The leader addressed him and fairly deluged him with profanity. The reply of the recent addition was prompt, interested; but without profanity. Gradually the policy of the gentleman who had joined the group, without ceremony, appeared to be convincing to the entire group, leader and all, that it was entirely possible to talk at random and in the way that a company of men, without nothing special to talk about, can talk, without profanity. After a time, the profanity began to show signs of weakness and in thirty minutes there was no profane word to be heard at all, although no one had been admonished about it. The plan, not thought out, but suddenly adopted, had worked.

In thirty minutes more the group, one by one, had disappeared and only one young man was left alone with the guest of the upper room. In a short time these two were engaged in a personal talk about Jesus.

The young man said frankly that he was not a Christian, but that his mother—whom he was soon going to see—over in Mississippi, was a Christian, if there was any in the world.

He agreed to try to settle the matter of becoming a Christian himself during the visit that he was soon to make.

1. Sometimes the best way to cure an evil is not to do the evil. A masterly refusal is strong testimony. "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from evil."

2. A mother's life is the best preaching of the Gospel that a son ever knows. It is heard when all other voices are silent.—R. B. W., in Presbyterian Standard.

The Herald of the Christ.

This lesson opens the quarter's study of New Testament heroes and heroines, concluding the six months' study of Great Men and Women of the Bible. Standing between the Testaments, as it were, with a character like that of the old prophets, and a message which prepared for New Testament teaching, stands John the Baptist, the "Herald of the Christ."

Many years had passed since the stern warnings of Jeremiah and the Messianic prophecies of Isaiah. The world was at peace. The captives in Babylon had returned to their native Jerusalem where the walls had been rebuilt and the wonderful temple restored. Though generations had passed away since the promises of the prophet, still there were many who were waiting for the fulfillment of Isaiah's words. They were looking for the coming of a great king, for had not the prophet said that His name would be called "Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace." And he had also foretold how one would come to make ready him, a Herald to proclaim the coming of the King, crying "Prepare ye in the wilderness the way of Jehovah; make level in the desert a highway for our God."

With this message, John came. All four Gospels record his life and divine mission. His was a career which fulfilled God's plan for a life He needed. From a godly home, through the wilderness to the preaching by Jordan, even to death in prison, his was the life of a hero, who met life fearlessly with all of its demands upon him, and died bravely. Certain factors must have had a great influence in shaping this life, and certain characteristics marked it, which are suggestive in character formation at all times, especially in our own day, when fearless, local heralds are needed.

His Home and Training.

A godly home is the greatest of blessings. John's father was Zacharias, a faithful priest of the temple who was eagerly watching for the Messiah of Hope. His wife, Elizabeth was related to the Virgin Mary. Both were old, and had "walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." John, the Baptist, was born six months before Jesus, and his name, given by his father by angelic command, meant "Jehovah's Gift". Zacharias and Elisabeth regarded the boy as a very precious gift, and from them he must have received true Jewish teaching, of God, of His promises and His comands, of the warnings and prophecies of God's servants. In the temple, he probably saw frequently the faithful praying for the Messiah who was to come to bring peace and happiness and hope to the world. He grew up breathing the very atmosphere of devotion. And then from that home, he went into the wilderness. Here he "grew and waxed strong in spirit," and here he was until the time came for his public work. Great men know God. They take time to listen to Him, to learn His will. Religious teaching, coupled with Christian worship, is an invaluable method of developing Christian heroic men and women.

His Character.

The life of John the Baptist was the very pattern of self-denial. He lived a simple life, without luxury, without thought of self. The simplest of food and clothing supplied his needs. He was a Nazirite, or one who vowed "to separate himself unto Jehovah; to separate himself from wine and strong drink." But this self-effacement did not lead him to hide all through life. When his preparation was complete, and the time had come, he showed himself to be a fearless messenger.

All classes, Pharisess, Sadducees, people and publicans and soldiers flocked to him from every quarter. Wrong doing he denounced without fear or favor. "Repent" was his constant message. And multitudes who heard him turned to God. John the Baptist did not flatter nor smooth evils over. Declaring "Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance" he pointed out their duty, their responsibility which could not be shifted. Righteousness depended upon their own lives and hearts.

John, the Baptist, was humble. When men asked if he were the Christ, his reply is characteristic: "There cometh he that is mightier than I, the lachet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose." "He must increase, and I must decrease." John 3:30 sums up his whole attitude. His zeal was for His Lord's honor. His part was to be faithful at all cost.

John, in prison, was anxious for the cause. He sent disciples to learn if Jesus were really the Lord Christ. Jesus showed His power through miracles, and then gave to the people a great testimony to His forerunner: "Among them that are born of woman there is none greater than John: yet he that is but little in the kingdom of God is greater than he." John was a herald, who went before, but he was a member of the old order, and "the least member of the spiritual kingdom was greater than the greatest member of the old order who had not entered into the kingdom." John was killed before the crucifixion. He never knew the fullness of God's great, loving plan of salvation. Yet he was, and is our example, the first great witness for Christ.

"Herald of Christ, the day is come,
Day by prophetic lips foretold,
When from the shadow of the tomb
The page of life shall be unrolled:
The daylight dawns; the bright beams glow;
First witness of that light art thou."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

July 1, 1923.

Subject: "Lessons from the Paslms."

VII—A History Psalm.

Ps. 44:1-8.

(Patriotic Consecration Meeting.)

"Today is as full of God as any yesterday."
—Dr. Alexandria Maclaren.

"Lord thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations." God is eternal—for all times, and the story of Hs love is told by father to son; His wonderful works are told from generation to generation. Verse 1.

The nations which have disobeyed God's laws have peerished. Men and nations have prospered as they have lived in harmony with the divine law. These stories have been given to us for our teaching. "History repeats itself." Verse 2.

"I come to thee in the name of Jehovah of hosts," were David's words as he approached the giant, Goliath. The spirit of the Lord is our strongest ally in conflict, physical or moral. Verse 3.

"In God We Trust" is engraved upon every silver dollar. Does our nation live up to this motto? Verse 6.

"The history of the progress of men is the history of God's works, when men have listened and obeyed. So the psalmist looked upon the history of his own people." Howard K. Williams.

"We are co-workers with God" was Paul's way of expressing God's hand in our lives. As He guides men, He determines the destiny of nations.

"Jesus Christ, the same yesteerday, today and forever." His power is measureless, His love unending and His mercy and forgiveness for all. Time cannot chance Jesus Christ.

Try prayed. Do we not need God's protection In times of danger and stress of war, our counand guidance just as much today to direct the affairs of state and nation rightly?

Plans for the Meeting.

Decorate with the American and Christian flags for this Patriotic Consecration Meeting. Make a patriotic poster to advertise the meeting, and let the Lookout Committee send invitations to all young people in the community to this "Fourth of July Meeting."

Pledge to American Flag: "I pledge allegiance to my flag and to the republic for which it stands, one nation indivisible with liberty and justice for all."

Report of Committee on Temperance was read and adopted, as follows:

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE AND MORAL REFORM.

We often hear people speak of the wonderful progress of the past century, and ascribe it to reason. They are mistaken. Reason, speaking by the mouth of Aristotle, had laid down as an axiom that the inferior races are designed by nature to be the slaves of the superior races. The emancipation of the slave, the banishing of the saloon, the closing of the brothel, were effected when it was clearly seen that they were against the will and the religion of Jesus Christ; and when men are emancipated from want, ignorance, and crime, it will take place by the same means. Sociologists may prescribe, anarchists and saloonists may plot, Socialists may scheme, but power to lift humanity comes from religion.

We pay taxes to take up the wounded, secure anticeptics, put them to bed, and pay the keeper of the inn, but we too often fail to make the road to Jericho safe.

Perhaps there never was a time when the people of this country needed to heed the teachings of Jesus Christ more than now. Too many Church members seem to think that great evils can be removed merely by talking about them. Many of our citizens hold meetings, pass resolutions, listen to eloquent orators, sing songs, shake hands, and go home. Their voices soon die away. The crowds being disbursed, the resolutions are soon forgotten. And many imagine that these things can take the place of deeds. Jesus, it would seem, placed little reliance on things of this kind. When He sent out His disciples, He did not say, "Pass resolutions," but "Heal the sick, cast out devils, freely ye have received, freely give." Some words and some resolutions are good, but the only words that are heeded much are the words of a man of action. "The wicked flee, when no man pursueth," but they break the speed limit when a brave and loyal officer of the law is after them.

While this Convention is in no sense a political Convention, and your Committee would not, in the remotest way, say for what political party its members should vote, we desire it to be distinctly understood that as good and loyal citizens of the United States, we would "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

Resolved 1: That we stand for "temperance in all things," moral reform, law, and order.

Resolved 2: That we will not, knowingly, support any person for any position who does not, by word, and act, stand for these things.

Resolved 3: We have no sympathy with, or vote for, any person who, by word or act, resorts to any unlawful means to overthrow the Constitutions of our States or the United States of America.

Resolved 4: That we pledge ourselves to co-operate with all law-abiding citizens in promoting the cause of temperance, moral reform, and the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom in the world.

DANIEL ALBRIGHT LONG, Chairman.

Report of Commission on Church Union with the Free Will Baptist Church read by Dr. W. A. Harper, and adopted as follows:

REPORT OF CHRISTIAN UNION COMMISSION.

The Eastern Virginia and North Carolina Conferences, at their regular sessions last fall, memorialized the Executive Committee of the Convention to appoint a Commission on Christian Union. The Convention appointed the following persons on the Commission: Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. A. R. Flowers, D. R. Fonville, and W. A. Harper. Dr. L. E. Smith was made Chairman, and W. A. Harper, Secretary.

Correspondence was entered into with Rev. R. F. Pittman, President of the Free Will Baptist Convention, which resulted in a meeting of our Commission with theirs in the Hotel Bland, Raleigh, N. C., February 12, 1923.

At this meeting, full and free and brotherly discussion was had respecting the positions, beliefs, and practices of the two Churches, and the following agreement entered into:

AGREEMENT BETWEEN FREE WILL BAPTIST AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

We, representing the Free Will Baptist Churches and Christian Churches, hereby agree—

1. That Jesus is the Head of His Church.
2. That the Bible is the sufficient rule of faith and practice.
3. That Christian character is the proper test of fellowship in the Church of Christ.
4. That the right of private judgment or the liberty of conscience is a privilege and duty of all.
5. That the reciprocity of ministers and members between our Churches is desirable.
6. That the name of the Church of Christ is a matter for His followers to determine, though Christian is a proper name for all believers.
7. That the local Church should be autonomous.
8. That fraternal delegates should be interchanged for our public assemblies.
9. That we should write for each other's periodicals and visit and use each other's institutions.
10. That a united Protestantism is the goal of our Churches.

It was further agreed at this meeting to send at least five (5) fraternal delegates to each other's general Church meetings, to print the agreements in our Church papers and to exchange with each other's members 200 copies each of the Free Will Baptist and THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE.

The Proceedings of the Raleigh meeting were printed in our Church papers. Dr. W. C. Wicker wrote an article for the Free Will Baptist, copies of our papers have been interchanged, ten brethren of the Free Will Baptist Church have been designated to attend this session of our Convention, and space has been allotted the question of "Christian Union" in our program, with Rev. Thomas E. Beamon, of the Free Will Baptist Church, as one of the speakers.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

We feel that our work has already borne good fruit in the better understanding of our two Churches, and we recommend:

1. That the Convention elect a Commission on Christian Union, to continue to cultivate closer relations and co-operation with all denominations, and with the Free Will Baptist in particular, and that the members of the Commission be our fraternal delegates to visit other Church bodies.
2. That we send five fraternal delegates to the Free Will Baptist Convention, which meets at Winterville, N. C., on September 11-13, 1923.
3. That at this time we formally receive the Free Will Baptist fraternal delegates, invite them to seats as visiting brethren with us and record our profound satisfaction at their presence at this session.
4. That we invite them to send fraternal delegates to our public assemblies, and that such delegates be given opportunity to be heard at every such meeting.
5. That special prayer be now offered for the progress of Christian Union in our own and other Churches.

Convention met and called to order at 2 o'clock. Worship conductedducted by Rev. R. L. Williamson.

Report of the Board of Education was read by Dr. W. A. Harper, Chairman, and adopted, as follows:

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Christian education—Christ through education—is the hope of the world. A nation that has separated education and religion must find a solution to the problem such separation has entailed. A democracy cannot exist without a citizenry of character, and character apart from religion, all experience teaches, is impossible.

This means but one thing for the Christian Church—the strengthening of her agencies of education. The home, the Church, the college, with all their auxiliary organizations and institutions, must be federated into a unified program of Christian education. Our young people should be educated in our colleges, and our colleges must be made in every way worthy of their support and patronage.

THE CRISIS AT ELON.

In view of these great principles, the crisis precipitated at Elon on January 18, 1923, demands of our people a full measure of sacrifice and loyalty. The burning of the administration building and records, together with the library and auditorium, was a blow well calculated temporarily to close down the college. But we are happy to record that only one day was lost by our college in adjusting herself to the new situation, and that not a student eft on account of the fire. This is a situation calling for satisfaction and congratulation on the part of our people.

On January 24th, the Board of Trustees assembled in extraordinary session and faced the crisis with heroic determination. They voted to rebuild on a $300,000 basis, being challenged to do so by the citizens of Alamance County, who proposed to pay one-third of such an amount. In addition, they voted to raise $300,000 for endowment. Both decisions seemed absolutely necessary in view of the situation confronting the college.

What has transpired since has gratified every heart. We are yet some distance from our goal, but we are facing the future heroically, hopefully, confidently. We urge our people to sacrifice, as never before, for our college, that a disaster, which seemingly threatened Elon's very existence, may prove a blessing in disguise. Many have expressed the conviction that it would be so, but unless our people support such a conviction with sacrificial giving, it will not be so. Again we urge them to sacrifice nobly for our college, and full endorsement of the trustees' action is hereby recorded.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

The Board of Trustees of Bethlehem College have let the contract for their first building for the sum of $14,000, and plan to open the institution to students this fall. The plan permits the basement to be used for dining-room, kitchen, furnace, and storage, with the first floor for offices, recitations, library, president's home, and laboratory work, with the third floor as a dormitory for lady teachers and lady students. The men students will room in homes nearby, but dine in the boarding department.

Bethlehem is to be of junior college grade, with a full standard high school course preceding. It will fill a large need in our educational work, and we should give it every encouragement.

COLLEGE DAY.

"College Day" was celebrated in our Churches during the summer of 1922. The people enjoyed the programs, and great good was accomplished. This is a custom that should be kept up perpetually. Some Churches can use one month to better advantage than another. We, therefore, suggest that June, July and August be considered college months, and that Elon and Bethlehem Colleges both be represented in the programs from now on.

ELON TRUSTEES.

We recommend that the Secretary of State of North Carolina be requeted to amend the charter of Elon College so as to permit a total of thirty trustees instead of twenty-four, as at present, with a quorum of ten instead of eight, as at present.

Report of the Board of Religious Education submitted by Dr. W. T. Walters, Chairman, and adopted, as follows, items referring to finance being referred to Committee on Finance:

REPORT OF BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

To the Southern Chritian Convention, in session at Henderson, N. C., May 1-3, 1923:

Report of work of office of field secretary, May 1, 1923.

Tabulation of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Reports.

List of all Sunday School and Christian Endeavor workers is kept in the office. A handbook was edited and published, giving minutes of five Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions held in 1922, and statistical tables for both organizations, as far as statistics could be obtained. Two thousand copies were published and mailed free of cost to all ministers and Churches in the Southern Christian Convention. The handbook showed 200 Sunday Schools, with membership of 20,618. The Southern Christian Convention Annual, published some months later, shows 201 Sunday Schools, with a membership of 22,165 (Georgia-Alabama statistics from handbook), 71 Christian Endeavor Societies—junior, intermediate, senior and alumni—have been reported during the year. Definite statistics regarding memberhip could not be secured from all, but all have been active this year.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions.

Five Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions were held in 1922, including two new Conventions, organized in Georgia and in Alabama. The field secretary attended all sessions except the 1922 session of the Alabama Convention. Four of the Conventions already are working on 1923 programs, and one Convention has been held—Alabama. The office of the field secretary co-operated in planning programs, sending out report blanks, and sending letters to all teachers and officers, urging attendance at the Conventions. In the North Carolina Convention, the field secretary acted as both general secretary and recording secretary in arranging program and recording minutes. Leaflets were distributed at all Conventions.

Chautauqua and School of Methods.

The 1922 session of the Chautauqua and School of Methods was held at Elon College August 30th to September 4th. The attendance was small, but otherwise the session was very helpful. Forty-three enrolled for the week, and a great many others attended one or more classes and the evening sessions. Averaging daily attendance at the various classes was as follows: Pastors—Dr. W. W. Staley, teacher, 15; Sunday School organization—Prof. A. L. Hook, 4; adult workers—W. P. Lawrence, 4; elementary workers—Mrs. Bullock, 6; missions—Dr. J. O. Atkinson, 20; Bible—Dr. J. U. Newman, 20; daily vacation Bible School, over 50. Financially, Elon College gave $100.00, which was used in advertising the Chautauqua.

Receipts during the week were:		Expenditures:
Evening offerings	$ 20.30	Board	$186.75
Enrollment fees	43.00	Huffines Bros.	4.53
Board	164.50	Burlington Ptg. Co.	1.75
Books, etc.	20.10	Church Supply House	20.95
		Daily Vacation Bible School.	4.00
	$247.90		$217.98

Balance, $29.92, turned into treasury of Board of Religious Education.

The program for the 1923 session of the Chautauqua, to be held at Elon College, July 30th to August 5th, is largely arranged and the advertising begun.

Institutes.

Since April 1, 1922, institutes have been held in all Conferences. In April, 1922, Churches of the Georgia-Alabama Conference were visited in one-day institutes, and eight places in the North Carolina Conference.

In May, 1922, five institutes were held in the Valley of Virginia and ten Churches visited.

In March, 1923, thirteen institutes, two sessions in most cases, were held in Eastern Virginia, reaching thirty-three Churches. Total attendance, 1,191. Children's story hours, 212; average attendance at afternoon sessions, 32; night, 61.

In April, 1923, a number of institutes were held in the Alabama Conference. In addition, five nights were spent by the field secretary in teaching a class in the Sunday School institute held in Christian Temple, Norfolk, and three nights in leading an institute in Richmond.

Children's Day.

"Children's Day" programs prepared for 1920 and 1921 were used by a large number of schools in 1922. Offering envelopes were sent to all schools. Thirty-eight Churches responded with offerings, amounting to $216.97.

Men and Millions Day.

In co-operation with Dr. Atkinson, Dr. Harper, and Mr. Johnson, a leaflet was prepared for "Men and Millions Day" in the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies during January, 1923. A great number of schools observed the day. Five thousand of the leaflets were mailed to Churches requesting them for use.

Contest for 10 Per Cent Increase.

A contest for increase of 10 per cent in enrollment was held in May and June, 1922. Report cards, with a plan for 10 per cent increase, were mailed to every Sunday School in the Southern Convention. Weekly reports were requested for six weeks. Sixty-four schools responded, of which 30 reported a 10 per cent increase during the contest, or more than 10 per cent, and 27 reported an average attendance of 70 per cent or more of the enrollment; 1,111 new members were enrolled in the 64 schools reporting.

Total offerings reported, $1,075.13. Average attendance of 64 schools for six weeks, 71 per cent of enrollment.

Office Work.

The bureau of information has been maintained, and a great deal of literature mailed out. About 850 personal letters, and 5,000 circular letters have been prepared and mailed, and 300 inquiries answered by mail, and 1,300 postal cards mailed.

Christian Sun.

Sunday School notes and Christian Endeavor notes have been furnished weekly for The Christian Sun, and also other material weekly.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools were conducted last year at Bethlehem (Valley of Virginia), Pleasant Grove, Va. (N. C. Conference), Holland-Holy Neck (Eastern Virginia), and at the Elon Chautauqua. The field secretary co-operated in organizing, purchasing books and supplies, and assisting during the first days of all.

4. That we advocate the continuation of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor institutes as inaugurated by our board.

5. That we recommend that steps be taken at the 1924 session of the Southern Christian Convention for the merging of the Board of Religious Education and the Board of Education into one board, to be known as the Board of Christian Education, and that under the terms of the union the new board be required to keep a secretary in the field for Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work.

6. That we heartily commend the work being done by our field secretary, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, and ask the hearty co-operation of our people in making our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work more efficient.

Sunday School Missions.

It is gratifying indeed that our Sunday Schools, one by one, are adopting the plan worked out by this Convention and ratified by all our Sunday School Conventions of giving one offering per month for missions, one-half for home and one-half for foreign, and urge same be continued. An increasing number of schools is carrying out this program to their edification, and in most of them there is a missionary program or an address before the whole school either every Sunday or once per month. Donations from these schools, not counting Burlington and Christian Temple, because their gifts go to individuals as already named in this report, amounted the past year, from April 1, 1922, to April 1, 1923, to $2,060.50. One-half of this amount goes to the support of our mountain work, and the other half to foreign missions, as already stated. We reiterate our abiding faith in this plan for our Sunday Schools, and have the faith that, resulting from it, we shall have in the future not only more funds for missionary purposes, but more recruits for the missionary field. The missionary emphasis must of necessity be made upon the minds of the youth, and there is no better place for this than the Sunday School.

Our Mountain Work.

There are at present three organized Christian Churches in Carroll County, Va., of which Rev. Elisha Bradshaw is the pastor in charge. The total membership April 1st was 34. We have one combined Church and school building at Elk Spur, which is serving a most useful purpose both for the day school, for which there are separate rooms; for Sunday School and for Sunday worship, for which there is an adequate auditorium.

There is pressing demands for another such building for our other two congregations. The land for this building has already been donated to us, and much labor and timber and assistance promised in erecting a building. We are at present maintaining two day schools, in one of which are two teachers, in the other one teacher. We have three Sunday Schools. The work is certainly a most worthy one, and the opportunity for real service is great indeed. It is doubtful if we have undertaken a Christian service which is and has been more thoroughly appreciated than among the people in Carroll County, Va.

Foreign Missions.

Since our last report to this body we have finished paying the $21,000 agreed upon with the General Convention Board for Japan, and by agreement one-half of our foreign funds will go to begin the work in China and one-half to continue the work in Japan and Porto Rico. The General Convention Board will add 20 per cent to the amount for China. We have paid out for foreign missions since our last report (April 1, 1922), $9,281.10.

We regret to report that of the two missionaries who had volunteered to go to China, one has decided not to go at all, and the other is in doubt about his going, and so gives no definite promise at the present for the future. We are hoping and praying that the Lord will give us, at an early date in His own good time and way, workers for this important field.

We are happy to report that there are now under appointment for going out during the present year five promising missionaries, three of whom will go to Japan and two to Porto Rico. There are other volunteers for the mission field, some of whom are in our colleges preparing and are to go out as soon as equipped. During the present year a very handsome and adequate Church has been built and dedicated at Santa Isabel, Porto Rico. Rev. D. P. Barrett and wife, who are the sole representatives from this body on the foreign field, continue faithful at their post, are in good health, and are most happy at the completion of the long-needed Santa Isabel Church.

Our Burlington Christian Sunday School is to be most heartily congratulated on the zeal they display in behalf of foreign missions in the support of Miss Stacy in Japan at a salary of $1,000 per year, and Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., on its support of Mrs. Toshio, at a salary of $30.00 per month in Japan, and Miss Olive Williams at a salary of $60.00 per month in Porto Rico, and two other missionaries on the home field. We cannot commend too highly the example of these two Churches, and sincerely trust that others of our Sunday Schools will follow this lead.

"Men and Millions."

One year ago the Convention voted for the Mission Board to assume the responsibility of carrying on the work of "Men and Millions." Since that time, through our secretary and his helpers, group meetings of ministers and captains in every district of all the Conferences have been held. With a few exceptions, every Church of the Conferences in the Convention has been visited either by the secretary himself or an assistant, and in most instances all subscribers have been visited and given an opportunity to make some payment on their pledges. All funds have been sent to Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston and accounts kept by him with the Churches. Through him, the money has been transmitted to the treasurer, C. D. West, Newport News, Va., who has handled same according to vouchers drawn and presented by Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston. Their reports give amount of moneys paid in, expenditures made, and the actual financial results achieved during the year. Independently of these reports, we have endeavored to recreate interest in the movement and in every entrprise of the Church through sermons, addresses and the printed page. The co-operation of captains in many Churches has been all that could be desired, and it is a joy to have fellowship with men and women so deeply interested in Church growth and kingdom development.

The number of tithers in the Churches has been considerably increased, though we are not prepared to give exact figures. Much of the best literature on the subject of tithing has been put into the hands of our pastors and captains, and some of it at least has reached the people directly, and many have reponded.

Owing to the fact that there were two years immediately following the enlistment period during which there was no organized or constructive effort at collecting pledges, we feel that the results thus far are not to be discredited, nor are they of such character as to discourage. We have the faith to believe that those who pledged, for the most part, not only did so in good faith at the time, but will live up to that faith as their own financial conditions will allow. Almost to an individual, we have had the renewed promise that, though a longer time will be required owing to changed financial conditions, pedges will in time be paid and the obligations discharged. To this end, we must still labor, pray and pursue.

Increase in Membership.

According to the Annual of this year, as compared to last, the total membership of the Churches composing the Conferences of this Convention has increased from 28,251 to 28,418; the total of 167 members. To this may be added the membership of the three congregations in Carroll County, Va. (34), making the total increase for the year of 201 members.

Report adopted as follows:

To the President and Members of the Southern Christian Convention:

As chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., I beg to make this report for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1922, and ending March 31, 1923.

On April 1, 1922, we had in our care eighty-three children; since that time we have admitted thirty children and have sent out twelve, leaving in our care on March 31, 1923, the end of our fiscal year, one hundred and one children —sixty boys and forty-one girls. We have thirty-eight boys, ages from two to ten years; seventeen boys, ages from ten to fifteen, and five boys, ages from fifteen to eighteen years. We have thirteen girls, ages from two to ten years; sixteen girls, ages from ten to fifteen years, and twelve girls, ages from fifteen to eighteen.

So far as handling the work in the institution is concerned, we are in good shape, as we have this number of large girls; but on the farm we only have five boys who are large enough to be of much help to us, and they are in school nine months in the year and several of them will go out when the school term ends.

We are very grateful for the loyal support of our Churches and the kindly interest that has been shown us. Our people have been liberal, considering the depression we have been going through and the many calls we have to meet.

The cotton mills have been real good to us and have been very liberal in their contributions of cloth. The fertilizer manufacturers have also been kind to us and have made contributions in fertilizer to help along in the work.

The good women of our Church have helped in a splendid spirit and have made and sent to us many little dresses for the little girls and a number of suits for the little boys, besides sheets, quilts, pillow-cases and many other articles which have been of much help in the work.

The health of the chidren has been exceptionally good, except in the months of January and February, when a scourge of "flu" and pneumonia struck us. We had fifty cases of "flu" and seven cases of pneumonia, but were successful in handling them, and did not lose any.

We have not been able to take all the children that made application to us, but have taken the most needy and have had to turn the others away. We could make room for thirty more, if we had ample funds to assure us that we would not get financially embarrassed.

We feel that our church has a great opportunity to do a great work of love and charity through our Orphanage. So many, many mothers have been left helpless with a family of little children and no means of support, that it is often very touching to witness their dire distress. When we think of the abounding wealth in our denomination and listen to the cry of the helpless and have to refuse their pitiful plea on account of the lack of funds, it makes us feel that our denomination is doing a small part, when it is only taking care of one hundred children.

May the day come in the near future when our people will awake to their Christian duty and make use of their opportunity in this work.

Amount brought forward from last year	4,528.09
Total	$ 30,318.59
We find that the total expense for the institution for the same period, including all repairs and improvements, was	18,100.61
Cash on hand April 1, 1923	$ 12,217.98

Very respectfully submitted,

H. W. SIMPSON,
JNO. R. FOSTER,
G. S. WATSON,
Auditing Committee.

April 19, 1923.

Very respectfully submitted,

W. K. HOLT,
Chairman Board of Trustees of Christian Orphanage.

Special prayer for Rev. George D. Eastes, led by Revs. W. H. Denison and G. O. Lankford.

An offering was received for Brother Eastes, amounting to $53.50, which was turned over to the President to be delivered.

Following resolution offered by Dr. W. A. Harper, was, on motion, adopted:

Resolved, That Mr. W. E. McClenny be elected the official historian of the Southern Christian Convention, and that he especially be requsted to publish articles and books growing out of his researches, to collect original records for our college libraries, and to report in writing at each session of the Convention.

Report of Committee on Finance was submitted and adopted as follows, except the items concerning the apportionment of funds, which was referred to a commission, to be appointed and report at next nession:

Henderson, N. C., May 3, 1923.

Your Committee on Finance begs leave to make the following reports:

Treasurer's Report.—Dr. W. C. Wicker, treasurer. Your committee has examined this report thoroughly and carefully, and we find the receipts correspond with the statement submitted by the Elon Banking and Trust Company.

Disbursements.—The drafts drawn by the President and Secretary of the Convention correspond with the treasurer's report. This report is absolutely correct. The balances carried forward by the treasurer's report correspond with the balances submitted by the bank's statement.

Recommendations.—We recommend that the balance to the credit of the Christian Orphanage fund ($6.05) be paid by draft in favor of the superintendent, and account closed.

We also recommend that the overdrafts of $200.00, drawn in favor of the Mission Board, be refunded.

Recommendation No. 3—Patron, Dr. W. W. Staley:

Whereas, the "Men and Millions" pledges will expire, except in cases where the time is extendd, in 1925; and, whereas, some provision must be made to keep alive the work of the various departments of the Convention; and, whereas, this can be done more effectively by some permanent financial system; and, whereas, the membership of this Convention, after leaving out non-residents, indifferent and destitute ones, is 25,000; now, therefore,

Resolved, That the Conferences composing this Convention be requested to ask the local Churches, at the 1923 session, to pay to the Convention, annually, the sum of $2.00 per capita, payments to begin with the 1925 annual Conferences.

This would make a total sum of $50,000 for the following purposes, divided according to the following schedule, or some modification thereof—for:

	Per Cent.
Education	30
Missions	40
Publications	8
Convention	2
Orphanage	5
Superannuation	5
Sunday Schools	5
Christian Endeavor	5
	100

(Note.—Referred to a committee, to be appointed by the President, to report at next session.—Sec'y.)

We further recommend that the presidents, secretaries, or leaders, of these various departments be permitted to go into the various Conferences and solicit, from the Churches or individuals, funds to carry on the work in these departments.

The recommendations submitted to your committee by the Convention, under this report—"Report of Secretary Religious Education, Dr. W. T. Walters"—were only those carrying items of expense.

Recommendation No. 1.—"That the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College be continued under the supervision of this board, provided the Convention will make financial provision, and that our Churches be urged to avail themselves of the fellowship and training offered there."

Your committee decided that this recommendation was outside of their jurisdiction, as this should be referred back to the Convention to be threshed out on the floor.

Recommendation No. 7.—"In order to maintain this department, the Southern Christian Convention donate $1,000.00 for the present year's work from the Convention fund."

Your committee approves this recommendation.

The following bills have been approved by your committee:

Dr. L. E. Smith, for traveling expenses	$20.31
Bill expenses for supplies paid by your secretary, Dr. I. W. Johnson	8.00
Also salary	25.00
Assistant secretary and typist, Miss Mary Andrews	20.00

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN KING, Chairman.
K. B. JOHNSON.
JAS. L. FOSTER.

The following resolutions offered by Rev. E. B. Flory were adopted:

Resolved, That the Board of Trustees of Elon and Bethlehem Colleges are hereby authorized to arrange for a "Library Day" in all our Churches for the benefit of the libraries of these colleges.

Whereas, a disastrous fire visited Elon College on January 18, 1923;

Whereas, no general canvass for funds to rebuild is possible, in view of pledges given during the "Men and Millions Forward Movement Campaign"; and

Whereas, every member of our brotherhood should have an opportunity to have part in a "Greater Elon Program";

Whereas, further, Bethehem College needs additional funds in her building program; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That during the college period this summer an offering be received in every Church in cash for these colleges, and that the money so received be divided as follows: 25 per cent to Bethlehem and 75 per cent to Elon.

Second, That the Churches be urged to make this offering at least an average of $1.00 per member.

It was moved and carried that the Proceedings be printed, and that 500 copies be distributed among the ministers and Churches of the Convention, same to be paid for by the Convention.

Report of the Special Committee on Publications was read and adopted as follows:

We, your Committee on Publications, submit the following report:

1. We recommend that the Annual be printed on the same terms as last year, and we further recommend that the secretaries of the various bodies, whose proceedings are to appear in the Annual, shall have their minutes in the hands of the publishers by December 1, 1923.

2. That the salary of the editor of The Christian Sun be fixed at $1,800.00 a year, beginning as soon as he may be relieved from pastoral work, and that he be expected to give practically his entire time to the editorial work.

3. That the respective duties of the editor and the managing editor of The Christian Sun shall be as follows:

The editor shall be responsible for the matter, other than advertisements, and all matter other than advertisements shall be furnishd by him. The managing editor shall furnish such matter only in case the editor fails to supply sufficient copy to fill the paper.

The managing editor shall be responsible for the mechanical appearance of the paper, including proof-reading, and for the advertising matter appearing therein; and he shall conform as nearly as may be, in the make-up of the paper, to the agreement between him and the editor as to the space allotted to the respective departments. The managing editor shall not be required to publish anything which shall, in his judgment, be detrimental to the business interests of The Christian Sun.

That in case of failure of either party to conform to this specification of duties, complaint may, and should, be made to the Board of Publications for redress.

4. That the Convention hereby express its appreciation of the excellent paper that the editor and managing editor have given us during the past ten months, and that the Convention pledge its loyalty and hearty support to these brethren and do all in its power to increase the circulation of the paper.

PAUL.

James W. Paul, son of Noble B. and Nancy Paul, was born in Granville County, N. C., May 23, 1849, and died February 9, 1923, age seventy-three years eight months and sixteen days. January 15, 1871, he married Mrs. Nannie A. Harris, who died in November, 1921, and unto them were born eight children—Nannie, Pattie, Hassie, Claude, Harvie, Sue, Charlie, James Lee and Carl. Pattie died when two years of age. Hassie married William Ferrebo, and died in 1910.

Brother Paul united with the Church when a young man, and always was a true Christian. He was a man in possession of a vast store of information and of excellent social qualities. His home life was ideal. His business relations were above reproach. His character was clean. A devoted father, a useful citizen and a faithful Christian has gone to his reward.. A true epitaph to his memory is "An honest man."

The funeral was conducted by Rev. F. W. Fogleman, assisted by the writer, on Sunday, February 10th, and the burial was in the family cemetery near the home where he lived for fifty years.

C. E. NEWMAN.

COBLE.

Finley Rike Coble departed this life on May 12, 1923, being at the time of his death fifteen years and eleven days old. He was critically ill for three weeks previous to his death.

He leaves to mourn his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. John M. Coble, two sister, Bettie Vann and Martha Laird, two brothers, John and Richard, besides a large number of relatives and friends.

Finley was an unusual boy. He was energetic, cheerful, thoughtful, and aspiring. Best of all, he was a Christian. As such, he was a member of the Burlington Church, was actively engaged in the Christian Endeavor work of the Church, was treasurer of his Sunday School class and a member of the Willing Workers' Missionary Society. He had made a commendable beginning, lived to good purpose, and has not died in vain. His influence will live in the lives of those who are left behind.

Funeral from the Church on Sunday afternoon, May 13th, conducted by his pastor, the writer.

G. O. LANKFORD.

CALLED HOME.

Braxton Perry , son of W. T. and Ella E. Perry, died May 31, 1923, aged 25 years 3 months and 25 days.

He confessed Christ in early life and united with Union Christian Church. He was fond of his Church and its services. He was an usher of the Church and very popular. He was courteous, gentlemanly and kindly disposed.. He had many friends. All who knew him liked him. His kindly smile of life was with him still in death. .

The funeral services were conducted from Union Christian Church by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Troxler taking part. The interment was in the Church cemetery. The attendance was large, and the floral tributes were beautiful.

P. H. FLEMING.

BENNETT.

James Lulon Bennett died on the 17th of April, 1923. Pneumonia, following measles, was the cause of his death. Lulon was fourteen years of age, a bright young Christian of Piny Plains Christian Church.

It was indeed a very sad burial service when the young man was laid to rest in the Church cemetery. Father and mother seemed both to give him up, while the other children, both older and younger than Lulon, seemed grieved in an unusual way. May our Lord in His own good way work out good for those who remain on earth and stablish and strengthen the hearts of the family by this seeming unfortunate and untimely death.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

LONG.

Mrs. Wm. J. Long was born April 22, 1867, and died February 28, 1923. She was married to Brother Wm. J. Long on April 10, 1887. To this union four children were born, as follows: Sadie L. (Mrs. Benjamin Maffitt), David Leroy, Robert Vernon and Raymon. The husband and the first-named three children survive her. Mrs. Long united with the Christian Church in girlhood and remained a member until death. May she rest in peace until the day dawns and the shadows flee away.

CARDEN—HARWARD.

The marriage of Miss Minnie Doak Carden, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. S. Carden, of Durham, and Mr. James Edgar Harward, of Henderson, took place at 9 o'clock on the morning of April 4th, at the home of the bride, on Shepherd Street.

The house was decorated with palms, ferns, cut flowers, and the ceremony was performed beneath an improvised altar of green and white. Just before the ceremony, Miss Margaret Highsmith sang "Because I Love You, Dear," and the wedding music was played by Miss Vera Maynor. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Stanly C. Harrell, pastor of the First Christian Church, Durham. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a traveling suit of midnight blue poiret twill, with accessories to match. She carried a bridal bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley.

The bride had as her maid of honor Miss Hester Stuart, of Raleigh, who wore a dress of beige crepe satin draped with lace, and carried a shower bouquet of roses and sweet peas. The ring-bearer was little Miss Naomi Carden, sister of the bride, who was dressed in Nile green taffeta and carried the ring on a white-satin pillow.

The bridegroom had as his best man his brother, Mr. George Harward, of Fayetteville.

Mrs. Harward is one of Durham's lovable girls, and has many friend who regret that her marriage takes her away from Durham. She attended school at Elon College and later at the Durham Conservatory of Music, and is an earnest and enthusiastic Church worker.

Mr. Harward is a promising young business man, being connected with the Mideastern Supply Company at Henderson.

Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Harward left for a Northern trip, after which they will reside in Henderson.

A HISTORY OF THE CHAPEL HILL, N. C. CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Eastern N. C. Christian Conference which met in Nov., 1909, appointed I. W. Pritchard, W. E. Lindsay and E. W. Neville, a committee to meet with the Home Mission board of said conference to look over the field and see what were the prospects of a Christian Church at Chapel Hill. This met at the home of W. E. Lindsay, on Feb. 22, 1910. Those present of the Home Mission board were Rev. W. G. Clements, chairman of the Home Mission board, and Rev. J. D. Wicker. Those present who were members of the Christian church were Rev. T. W. Strowd, I. W. Pritchard, W. E. Lindsay, D. S. Long, W. A. Ellington, E. W. Neville and J. P. Foister.

The committee recommended the purchase of the lot for sale by Dr. T. J. Wilson, Jr., on College Avenue, for the sum of $500.00.

Bond Issues.—

Sixteen Southern States sold more than eighty-four million dollars' worth of bonds during the first four months of 1923. All these bond issues are for public improvements—good roads, and schools, etc.

A Prisoner Has Rights.—

Notwithstanding the opposition of the political bosses, North Carolina has concluded that our prisons shall have humane management, and we hope that no man, and no set of men, shall be allowed to prevent it. It is time for action, strong and decided. The fact that man is a prisoner does not necessarily consign him to be the footmat of his keepers. Even a prisoner has the rights of justice and life. He also has the right to wholesome food and humane consideration, unless it be in the case of some incorrigible person, and even then the prison body as a whole should not be subjected to such treatment as the incorrigibles deserve. Let us have prison reform according to the best modern ideals which rest upon scripture as a basis.

The Moody Spirit Still Alive.—

That the spirit of Dwight L. Moody is still alive was evidenced by the reports presented recently in the annual meeting of the Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago, which the noted evangelist founded in 1894.

The emphasis in the year's work of the association was found in the work of the missionary book funds, the year's receipts for which, $22,580.63, from thousands of individual donors, made possible through their contributions the gratuitous distribution of 73,680 Colportage Library books, 23,039 Evangel Booklets, 77,434 scripture portions, and nearly 40,000 gospel tracts, in 1,820 shipments to the spiritually needy and especially amongst prisoners, lumber-jacks, miners, the "boys" of the army and navy, mountaineers, and homesteaders of the great far west, including also thousands of evangelical books in Spanish to Latin American countries.

The publications of the Association, thoroughly evangelical, are also taken to the homes and to individuals through volunteer colporters or "book-missionaries" as originally planned by Mr. Moody himself, and the organization still seeks the co-operation of those who feel a leading towards this important evangelizing ministry.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, Fancy Gap, Va., has recently been in a series of meetings in his Mountain work. Let us hear from your meetings, brother.

Bro. John King, Suffolk, Va., was, we understand to speak at Mt. Auburn, Warren Co., N. C., last Sunday. He was to speak on his travels in Europe. We should be glad to have heard him, as we have no doubt he was deeply interesting.

What are you doing in your church for the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN? Undoubtedly there is room for much work in that line. If each subscriber would get another, how soon our list would double, and no one would be hurt, but all concerned would be helped, and that includes the Church. Try it and report results.

What has become of Rev. Jno. G. Truitt? Since his graduation, we hear almost nothing of his whereabouts. Clean up that rusty pen, brother, and let the Sun readers hear from you. We understand that he is to study next year in Europe. If so, THE SUN will expect many a rare literary and spiritual treat from him.

It is good to be charitable, but it is even better to be true to God's Word, for if God's Word be not true, then even the doctrine of charity has no foundation on which to stand. The truth is, if your Bible is not reliable, you have no foundation for any Christian truth, except the vaporings of men, and that is next to nothing, when not backed by the truth of God. Hear! Hear!

That is good news from Bethlehem College in this issue, from the pen of Rev. G. D. Hunt. They are pushing and hoping to open this fall. Let us pray for them and otherwise help them, as far as we can, for they are doing a great work and should have every possible encouragement. We are getting anxious to have the new President of Bethlehem make his bow to our readers. Let us hear from you, brother. The people will be looking and expecting words of hope and encouragement from you, as the leader of the institution.

We regret to learn that the Rev. William M. Jay, D. D., pastor of Holy Neck church is to leave Eastern Virginia, having resigned his pastoral charge to take effect, if we make no mistake, Oct. 1. He is going to his old home in Pennsylvania and we understand will take charge of the Christian church at Everett, Pa. He is a man of real ability and we wish for him great usefulness in his new field—he is a Christian gentleman and a brotherly brother. One other thing should be added, he is blessed with a fine wife for a pastor, and that is a great thing for any pastoral charge, as well as for the pastor.

In this issue we give the baccalaureate sermon, or an abstract of it, as preached by the Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., LL. D., for Elon College, May 27, 1923. The sermon was actually preached in the Christian Church at Burlington, N. C., as since the burning of the college chapel, January 18th, no suitable place could be had at the college. It was a Christian-like thing to do for Dr. Lankford and his Burlington Church to offer their building for this occasion. The crowd was large and the interest deep. Never mind, we hope to have our new auditorium at Elon ready long before the next commencement. It will be a beautiful building and a fine tribute of Alamance County to the cause of Christian education, as the building will be the gift of Alamance County. We wish it may please God to have Dr. Clark to come again to see the new college building and to talk to our young people concerning their highest and best interests.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, the new pastor of the Suffolk Christian church, is expected to begin his work Sept. 1. Dr Staley, as pastor emeritus, will likely live in Suffolk and do a part of the work. It must feel agreeable to put off the harness after so long a time of service as Dr. Staley has had with the Suffolk church, and yet there is a sense in which this putting off the harness of work and responsibility, will make him lonesome. When a man has been so busy as Dr. Staley has been through forty-one years, it is well calculated to make him feel lonely. We wish our Brother Hardcastle a long term of the most helpful and useful service in the same field. Bro. Hardcastle is a graduate of Elon and Yale.

They tell us that Gov. Al. Smith of the great State of New York wishes to be President of the United States. No, sir, not by our vote, he is the man who refused to stand by the Constitution of the United States. We do not wish him President, for the time might come when he would refuse to stand by the Constitution of our country, during his term of office, and then what would our country look like, with a President who was standing against the Constitution of the United States? Alas, we do not need any such a man, and we are not going to have him either. Then there is another thing to think of in case he should have a desire to become President—and that is he had sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States, but he had no regard for his oath and turned against his country in order to help the liquor business. A thousand times no—not Al. Smith for President.

We are soon to be electing pastors again for next year. We put in one earnest plea for fairness in the matter. Do not allow "a church boss" to decide the matter of the choice of a new pastor. Do not let any one family, or any clique in the church, decide the matter. In the name of Christianity and common decency, do see that the Church itself elects its own pastor. No one man has any business in electing the pastor. It is not a one man job—it is for the whole church, and we do not wish to see any one man decide the matter for the church. Do let the whole church give its honest choice—let the pastor be chosen in decency and righteousness. Tell the church boss, if you have one, that he may stay home that day, and if the work of the church does not suit him, then he can stay at home every day, if he likes, unless he is willing to quit playing the "church boss"—for there is no job for him anywhere in the church.

The work on the buildings at Elon is progressing nicely, and soon we hope to have in place of the old Administration Building, which was burned last January, four new buildings. These, when finished, will be the Alamance Building (the new administration building), the Whitley Memorial Building, the Science Hall and the new Library Building. The old students and friends of that institution will hardly know the campus when they come back at the opening of the fall term. May it not be that every student will wish to be the first on the ground at the next opening in order to have the first sight of how the dear old Elon will look. No doubt about it, if all goes well, under the blessings of God, the old place will look like a new place by September 1. Let us all, at least as many as can, go to see the new opening this fall. It will be worth seeing, we believe.

A plenty of room for Jonah. Yes, that is just what we mean. We wish the men and women who are continually crying out that there are no great fish which could swallow Jonah, would learn what they are talking about. We once saw a big fish which was about ten feet through to the bottom of his stomach. An ordinary horse might have turned around in that fish, and certainly such a horse could have walked into his wide open mouth with comparative ease. This fish was seen by hundreds and possibly thousands at Norfolk, Va., where it was on exhibtion. This is no hear-say story—we saw it with our own eyes. Now here comes The Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va., telling of another similar fish. The Advocate says: "The big fish that has been on exhibition in Norfolk could have provided accomodation for Jonah down to Nineveh with either lower or upper berth. According to his captors his dinner basket contained two thousand pounds of fish he had eaten that morning, including an octopus as big as seven men and five hundred pounds of rock to aid digestion. He could swallow the third quarterly conference, including the presiding elder, and then be hungry." But men who do not believe the Bible will not believe a man, and who can blame them? If they repudiate the highest authority in the Universe, then why should they credit even an eye-witness to ordinary matters? But we saw the big fish, all the same, and others have done likewise, and yet the man who refuses to believe the Bible will surely discredit ordinary mortals. Enough said.

THE BIBLE AS A CURE FOR THE WORLD'S ILLS.

Religion and world politics vied with steel in the discussion in the annual meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute in New York last week. Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation and president of the Institute, devoted most of his annual address to a defense of the Bible and a plea for turning toward Christian principles in business, political and personal affairs. The following are a few pointed paragraphs from that address:

"The moral and religious principles of the Bible, both the Old and New Testaments have never been, and can never be, successfully combatted. Since the preservation of history commenced there has never been anything approaching the holy Bible as a literary production, or a code for proper and desirable human conduct, or as a foundation for future hopes.

If any here should believe this is an exaggeration, which is not probable read again this Book and you will be surprised. Visit Palestine in the light of, and under the inspiration of, the Bible. The landmarks of Palestine are as described in the Bible. The more we read and study, the more we must be convinced of the absolute reliability of the Book of books.

One who reads of, or personally witnesses evidence of, the rise and fall of great nations and communities and cities, whose ruins are so great that they attract the attention and admiration of the entire world, is led to believe that an overruling God determined their destinies. Corinth, for a long time a dominating city, known as the luxurious and wicked city, today has only a small community with a few remaining magnificent ruins partly uncovered; and similar cases are numerous. Such nations as the United States, even, or Great Britian, France, Italy, Japan, China, Germany, Austria, Russia, will do well to constantly bear in mind the history of the past and the possibilities of the future. Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.—Wesleyan Mcthodist.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—Do you think any man of sense really believes that an ape is his ancestor?—Inquirer.

Your question implies a doubt that there are such men—and I must admit that it does not seem reasonable that any intelligent man, made in the image and likeness of God, should so far forget himself as to prefer to regard himself as having come from the ape family rather than from the hand of Almighty God. I have to admit that there are some men who are claiming that they believe that human family came from the ape. I am glad to say, for myself, that I do not at all believe it. How can it be true in any sense? How can any man of plain, common sense believe that he sprang from a monkey? If it be true that in the beginning an ape developed into a man, do you not think some of the apes which began to develop a little later ought, by this time, to be showing some signs of becoming a man? But so far as we know, we have no such indications in that direction. If any man will be comforted in the thought that an ape or a monkey was his ancestor, let him find what comfort he can in the thought; but as for me and my house we choose to believe that the God of Heaven is our Father and that we came from His own hand. Do not be annoyed because some men cannot see any higher than to class himself as having sprung from a monkey. I am sorry for that class of people, but I am glad to say I do not and never did and hope never to feel that I belong to the monkey tribe.

Question.—Do you think the "wets" are giving up the fight against prohibition?—A Sort of Backwoodsman.

If we judge by appearances, I should have to answer, "No!" They are fighting prohibition now by every sort of effort possible, as it seems to me. They are resorting to almost every conceivable plan to down prohibition. If they can make a plan that has no truth in it, that does not keep them from using the plan, only if they can make it work. Some people are disposed to let up in their efforts on the ground that all is safe now. But all is not safe. We need to watch and work now as never before. Indeed, prohibition is assailed today as if it were a monster that is invading our country for its ruin; but we all know, even the men who are fighting it know, that the whiskey business is the chief curse of our land. We also know, and they do, too, that prohibition is one of the greatest blessings that has been given to our nation. The men who are fighting prohibition are the men who will do almost anything for money, and that is what they are after—they would take money in exchange for the souls of men, if they could do it, we fear. They do not hesitate to abuse and show a lack of respect for the Constitution of the United States. Only a few years ago a man who would not stand for the Constitution of this country would find not much room in it for him or his business; but now men are permitted to show their contempt for both our country and its Constitution, and nothing is said. We are giving too much liberty to that class of men. If a man will not stand for the Constitution of the United States, he ought to be sent out of its bounds and let him find a home with a people who can give him permission to do as he pleases; but we cannot afford to do that sort of a thing.

Question.—Is Christianity gaining in the United States, or not?—Thad.

According to announcements from Washington, there were nearly a million of souls gained in 1922 over the gain of 1921. That is hopeful and promising, and yet we must admit that over forty millions of Church members ought to have gained more than one million members in a year. Institutionally, the Church of today is making big gains, and it was never so liberal in money gifts as now. That much is hopeful, and the general outlook is good in some respects.

Question.—What influence is materialism exerting against the Bible and its circulation among the people?—Jasper.

Here is the answer. It is from the Presbyterian of the South, and is well worth your attention:

Materialism is sometimes said to be gaining ground in the world, and some people are frightened for fear that it will gain the ascendancy and overthrow religion. Materialism refuses to accept the idea of spirituality, and of course refuses to accept the Bible as the inspired word of an all-wise God. Materialists make a good deal of noise, while the professors of the true religion of God go on quietly in the even tenor of their ways and little is heard from them. As long as the Bible is circulated and read in large numbers, there need be no fear from materialism. There is the fear in the minds of some people that the Bible is not read as much as it was in former days. The fact is that the Bible is today by far the most popular Book in the world. During the past year, the American Bible Society alone put into circulation in this and other countries 5,000,000 volumes of the Scriptures. The total number of volumes published during the year by all the Bible publishers of the world was 30,000,000. It should be remembered that this vast number is only the output of one year, added to the hundreds of millions that were already in circulation. The demand is far greater than the supply. And we have God's promise: "My Word shall not return unto Me void."

Question.—Who has been the biggest minister money-maker in this country in the last fifty or seventy-five years?—John Thorndyke.

We believe that Henry Ward Beecher, forty-five years ago, got the largest salary of any minister in this country, but his Church in Brooklyn gave it to him to help him out in the great struggle he had with Theodore Tilton. If memory serves aright, the Church paid him $100,000 a year for a short time, but that did not make him the biggest money-earner of any of the preachers in this country, as is testified by the following clipping from an exchange:

Money-making is not usual with preachers, but there is one preacher in this country who, by his own labor, has made an amount of money that would satisfy most business men, or would at least make them and others think they were very successful money-makers. And he has made this money on a side issue, while he has done the regular work of pastor of a large city Church. This man is Rev. Dr. Russell H. Conwell. He is pastor of a large Baptist Church in Philadelphia. He has found time to be a lecturer as well as pastor, and during many years he has appeared many times on the lecture platform. One of his lectures, "Acres of Diamonds," he has delivered more than 6,000 times. For his lecturing he has received $10,000,000. The whole of this has been spent in aiding young men to secure an education. So little has he spent on himself that he had never had an automobile until a friend gave him a Ford car. Evidently, he has known how to make money, and he has known how to spend it. We wonder how many business men who have made large sums of money have given all away, except enough to provide a modest living for themselves and their families!

WILL YOU?

The coming Chautauqua to be held at Elon College July 30th to Aug. 5th, should have the careful and prayerful consideration of every man woman and child in the Christian Church that really wants to see the work of the denomination go forward. If you are called on to take any part in making this occasion a success, for mercy sake do not say, I can't and ease your poor conscience by making some flimsy excuse that would not pass muster before a tribunal of sluggards or hypocrits.

This Chautauqua is under the direction and management of the Board of Religious Education —a body of people that receive not a single penny for their services, but who are doing every thing they can to put the denomination in the front ranks in every way. Miss Lucy M. Eldredge is the field secretary of the Board, and is working for less than she can command in other fields. Why? If you love the kingdom and its cause, if you love your denomination, if you are a loyal brother or sister, and can possibly do so—I say attend the Chautauqua— and enter the department of study that appeals to you most. Spend your vacation learning truths that are worth while and that will be of service to you in your future life. Meet us at Elon—and be convinced of the worth-while-ness of this institution, and for any information that you may want relative to the Chautauqua, write Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1012 East Marshall St., Richmond, Va. Make your reservations early, as it will be impossible to entertain more than one thousand at this session.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

This year's Convention will meet at Mt. Carmel Church, Walters, Va., the 17th and 18th of July. All member schools and societies are urged to elect and send delegates. All superintendents, presidents and pastors are urged to attend. The program is being arranged particularly for delegates and officials.

The Convention has an official membership of over 200. In 1920, the attendance was 112; in 1921, 103; in 1922, 77. Let us get off the toboggan, and onto the derrick. Let us make this year's attendance representative of the interest we have in Christian education in the Eastern Virginia Conference.

James H. Lightbourne,
Executive Secretary.

TO WHAT ARE WE COMING?

Who could have thought such a thing possible? Who could have thought that the Old Conservative Presbyterian Church could have possibly come to such a state of mind and heart, as that they would divide over tolerating the teaching of false doctrines as taught by a man of another denomination, and yet that is just what has come to pass. Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, a Baptist minister of New York City, was sometime ago chosen as one of the pastors of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church in that city.

Dr. Fosdick soon began to teach error, which seemed to many to destroy the foundation stones of the Christian Faith. Serious objections were raised by Presbyterians because a minister in the Baptist denomination was allowed to teach such error in a Presbyterian Chruch, North, in session at Indianapolis, Ind., called on the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church of N. Y. City to discontinue the services of Dr. Fosdick. To this objection was made by sixty-five Presbyterian ministers, but of course that was only a few among so many. Dr. Fosdick resigned when he knew the attitude of the General Assembly, but the Fifth Avenue church refused to accept his resignation, and not only so, but they refused to accede to the wishes of the General Assembly.

Then the General Assembly of New York, as we understand it, took up the matter and reaffirmed the statement of its faith as set forth in the Assembly in 1920, which is as follows:

"It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God and our standards that the Holy Spirit did so inspire, guide and move the writers of Holy Scripture as to keep them from error.

"It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God and our standards that Christ offered up Himself a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice and to reconcile us to God.

"It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God and of our standards concerning our Lord Jesus Christ that on the third day He rose again from the dead with the same body with which He suffered, with which, also He ascended into Heaven, and there sitteth at the right hand of His Father, making intercession.

"It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God, as the supreme standard of our faith, that our Lord Jesus showed His power and love by working mighty miracles. This working was not contrary to nature, but superior to it."

That seems a pretty clear stand for the Word of God as the revealed will of the Father, and so far as the Presbyterian Church is concerned, it seems to make it clear that that Church is to stand for the teachings of the Bible, as they understand them, and in this we rejoice, and for the reason that the most important thing in this world is the truth of God's Word, and no true Christian can have any peace of mind and heart while repudiating that truth, or any part of it.

As will be seen there are five points in the Christian Faith on account of which divisions in the faith of the Presbyterian Church have arisen, however, the great majority of the ministers stand squarely for the truth, but it is not unanimous, since the few ministers in the Presbyterian Church seem to be greatly disturbed and determined to kick over the traces and do as they please. Some of these are the Rev. W. P. Merrill, D. D., a leader among them, who says: "The Assembly has attempted to put a yoke on our necks; which I, for one, will never wear." That looks as if he means to do as he pleases,regardless of the Assembly and the Bible. Dr. Henry Sloan Coffin, a Professor in Union Seminary agrees with Dr. Fosdick's position and declares that if Dr. Fosdick is put under a ban, he himself should be placed under the same ban. We hope the Presbyterians will have the courage to put Dr. Coffin under the same ban with Dr. Fosdick. Then Dr. Kelman, the imported pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church (he came from England) says: "If there had been any such reference, and if it had been necessary for me to profess my agreement, I could not have accepted a call to any church in Americca." It is pity that he did not know the true attitude of the Presbyterians before he left England. Then there is still another of the disgruntled ones who enters his protest against the attitude of his own church. It is Dr. L. Mason Clarke, who says: "In all frankness, I do not believe one of these five points. Certainly the Scriptures are not inerrant and never were."

In the light of these expressions, it is easy to see that our Presbyterian brethren are in for a great conflict, but we wish and believe that they will stand for the truth as revealed to us in the Bible. We rejoice that in the main denominations which have spoken so far are standing for the teachings of the Bible. Of course there are some individual exceptions, but that is to be expected in such a day as this. Dr. Clarke is certainly very plain. He frankly owns that he does not believe the doctrines of the Inspiration of the Scriptures, nor the Virgin Birth of our Lord, nor the Sacrifice for the salvation of the lost, nor in the resurrection of our Lord with the same body with which He suffered, nor in the miracles of Jesus.

In all frankness, when we arrive at such a point in our belief as to Christian teaching, we will not attempt again to preach the truths set forth in the Bible, and just as frankly we wish to say that we believe the only course of honor for these men to pursue is to retire from the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, and indeed from the ministry of the Gospel in any church, anywhere. How can any Christian wish to hear these men, when they say they do not believe the great fundamental teachings of the Church which is now supporting them—giving them a salary on which to live?

If the Bible is not to be believed, as true upon these great fundamental doctrines, then what do men wish to preach it for? If it is not all true, how do we know that any of it is? Indeed, if the inspiration of the Bible be not true, and if the Virgin Birth, and the sacrifice of Christ be not true, then what have we as truth? If the Bible be false as to these doctrines, we might as have no Bible, for if it be false in its great fundamental doctrines, then who will dare to claim that anything it teaches is true? Alas! Alas! Alas! We are glad to espouse the truths of the Bible. We are glad to be counted as ignorant, if to believe the Bible means so much. If we have no Bible to stand for, as the revealed will of God, then we have nothing to contend for, and we are all heathens, without hope and without God in the world, but hold! We believe the Bible and we believe nine-tenths of the Church also believe it. God grant that the people of His Church may believe it even more and more.

QUITE A BOUNTIFUL HARVEST.

This is a day of upheavals. Some things rise and some things fall. Things move in one direction or another. They cannot stand still. Things must move. They do move, and as a result, things come to pass—some for good and some for evil. One of the greatest upheavals of modern times is the overthrow of the liquor power. The harvest of blessings to the human family which has come through this one channel has been remarkable indeed. Some day when the history of the achievements of prohibition has been written for our common country, we shall have a book of wonders. It has been nothing less than a great moral revolution, bringing multitudes of rich harvests to the people of this country.

As indicating something of what that history will be for the whole country, we give below a brief sketch of what it has already accomplished in Indiana. We clip it from The Western Christian Advocate and it is full of the most hopeful promises of good to our common country, if it can be maintained permanently. The Advocate says:

Mr. Shumaker, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Indiana, informs us that commitments to jails in that State in 1922 numbered only 29,203, as compared with 39,176 in 1917. The total number of commitments for the last five wet years was 207,688, and the total number for the first dry years (under State law) was 117,289. On September 30, 1922, twenty-eight Indiana jails were entirely empty. The average number of commitments to the State Penal Farm of Indiana for the last three wet years was 2,013, and the number for the first three dry years was 1,382. There was a decrease in the number of commitments to boys' and girls' reformatory schools. The resources of banking institutions increased by 36 per cent. Life insurance increased by 59 per cent. The number of deaths from alcoholism was practically cut in two.

If Prohibition has done in three years that much for Indiana in the face of opposition, such as almost no other movement has had in this country, what must it have done for the whole country! If it has done so much for one State in three years, what would it not accomplish for the whole country if continued permanently and properly enforced? Can you answer that question?

In the light of such facts, how can a man, or any set of men, who keep up a fight against prohibition be regarded as the friends of our country? Indeed, they are in fact the enemies of the highest and best interests of this fair land, and we believe the day will come when they will be so regarded. The men who oppose and keep up a fight against prohibition will some day be regarded as the worst enemies our country has. Indeed, they are so regarded now, at least by the most far-sighted of our citizens and the day will come when their memory will be hissed from the best ranks of American citizenship.

If you wish a fair example of the light in which these friends of the whiskey business will some day be held, look at Gov. Al. Smith of New York. It was only a little while ago that he was elected Governor of New York by an overwhelming vote. It was so large as to put the presidential bee in his hat, and he was hopeful of becoming president of the United States. In his duties as Governor of that great state, he came to the fork of the roads, where he must take a stand for prohibition or for liquor. He took his stand for liquor supposing, as we suspect, that he would help himself by thus crushing the hopes of many a helpless wife and child and blighting the hopes of thousands of the best people of New York State. In such a moment he turned to the liquor element and gave them his support as Governor.

Today he is shorn of his glory and for the reason that he deliberately turned his State over to the control, at least as far as he could, of the liquor element and that perhaps, the worst element in any state in the Union. What is the result? We doubt that he could now be elected chief magistrate of the dog-killers association of the United States. The public press seems so incensed against his cowardly act of turning his state over to the liquor element that they are calling for his impeachment as Governor of that a great State. And do you say: What crime has he committed that he should be impeached? Why he has taken a stand against the Constitution of the United States, a crime little less than high treason. Impeachment is just what he deserves, and if the great State of New York does not feel willing to stink in the nostrils of the good people of the United States they will act on the suggestion and impeach their unfaithful Governor, who has turned the influences of the great office which he holds against the morals and high interests of the people, and in doing so, he deliberately sought to turn the management of the the State over to the hands of the worst element—the liquor people—in the state and nation, at least so far as he can do so. Impeach him? Yes, if New York wishes to keep its place of respectability and power in this great country. Yes, impeach him, not because he loves his cup, but because he has done his best to defeat the Constitution of the United States. This is the crime of which he stands guilty by a public act as the Governor of a great state. If the governor of a great state does not respect the Constitution of the United States, what can we hope for the Constitution?

DEDICATION OF THE CHAPEL HILL, N. C., CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Christian church at Chapel Hill, N. C., was dedicated on Sunday, June 3rd, 1923, the editor of this paper preaching the dedicatory sermon. Rev. Britton J. Howard is the pastor, and he did what is not very often done in the matter of church dedications—he had every dollar of the indebtedness raised and paid before the day of dedication, so that at the close of the dedicatory services the notes which had been held against the church were burned in the presence of the congregation there assembled, and there was real heart-rejoicing over the event. The Chapel Hill church is not a large building, but it is a very neat and attractive house of worship. It has not a large membership, but it has some fine people in its membership, and its future, under the blessings of God is hopeful of good work. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, the gifted pastor of the Durham Christian church, was present and took part in the services. The presence also of the venerable Rev. W. G. Clements was an inspiration and gave much pleasure to the congregation. It was Bro. Clements who organized this church and, if we mistake not, he was its first pastor. It seemed good indeed to have him appear in the dedication service and offer the invocation in the opening of that service. Then in the closing of the morning service Bro. Clements and Mrs. Julia Holt had charge of the burning of the notes which had been held against the building. It was peculiarly appropriate that he should witness and have part in this important item, as he had been largely instrumental in building the house and organizing the membership. He is now between eighty and ninety years of age, and very feeble, due especially to a fall he sustained some years ago at the railway station in Morrisville. He has of late been otherwise ill, so that he was not so much as expected to be present on this occasion. Only in the early part of last month he was considered dangerously ill, but he was spared and given strength to rally and get able to attend this dedication, riding some twenty miles on automobile to do so. Bro. Clements was a hero of the Civil War, having lost an arm on the battlefield at Winchester, if we mistake not, but he has been even a more faithful hero in the war of rihteousness against sin. Many long years has he been given to the church to preach the gospel and he has done his work well. For organizing churches and building houses of worship he is second to few, if any, in the Christian Church of North Carolina. In this particular, it may be that it is "neck and neck" between Bro. Clements and Rev. P. T. Klapp, for both have done fine work in building up the cause.

Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., who is now in his eighty-fourth year, was greatly missed on this occasion. It was to his disappointment that before he knew that the dedication of the Chapel Hill church was set for the first Sunday in June, that he had agreed on that day for a family reunion of the Long family at Graham, N. C. This he much regretted, but felt because of his peculiarties of both family and church relations at Old Providence, Graham, he could not change his plans. We greatly missed him.

REV. B. J. HOWARD, Pastor.

Rev. Britton J. Howard, the pastor of the Chapel Hill church, is a very modest man, but is bravely on sentinel duty and doing his best to maintain the traditions, teaching and work of the Christian Church in this important centre. He deserves the large sympathy and the prayers of our people. In his efforts his devoted wife is standing with him and making whatever of sacrifice may fall to her lot, and doing it uncomplainingly and bravely for the cause she loves.

During our short stay in Chapel Hill we were most comfortably entertained in the homes of Bro. I. W. Pritchad and Bro. W. D. and E. W. Neville. Our visit to Chapel Hill on this occasion was a delightful one and we trust not in vain in the Lord. We were glad to see our old friend of the long ago, Bro. W. N. Pritchard. He is quite gray, but otherwise youthful.

The North Carolina University is located here and is a large part of the community—I was told by one party that it now has nearly two thousand students. It is said to be growing by leaps and bounds. The campus is almost crowded with buildings, many of them new ones, and still others are going up. I think they count on spending a million dollars a year on the new buildings for the University. Both men and women students are admitted. I understand that they have about fifty young women there as students now.

Altogether Chapel Hill is a center of far reaching influence, not only for North Carolina, but far beyond state limits. It therefore becomes a matter of great importance that we maintain a vigorous and active church here. We were late in beginning the good enterprise, but now that we have begun, let us go on to larger and better things for the Kingdom of Christ.

J. P. B.

A RICH PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

They do seem to be rare, but they should be as common as Christians. By that, we mean to say that every Christian ought to have a rich personal experience, and not one ought to be satisfied without the full satisfaction of such an experience. Every true experience is a gift from God, and we are sure that He can supply every Christian with such experience, if the Christian will put himself in right relations with the Lord. He is ready to bestow, only so rarely can He find one whose heart and mind are fully yielded to him for such a purpose. It has been argued that there are only a few such experiences and that they were given for specific purposes, and that we cannot expect them for every one. That may be true, but we do not believe it is true. God is not partial with His children to bestow on one a rich personal experience and then withhold it from another of like character and life. It may be that comparatively few receive such gifts, but if that be true, it is true because the person who receives the ordinary experience failed to prepare his mind and heart for the extraordinary experience, and failing to do so, he does not receive the experience of a rich gift for the mind and heart. It was because the heart could not receive it, not because the Giver could not give it, nor yet because He would not.

William Cowper, the poet and hymn-writer, had a most ordinary Christian experience. He was driven to despair, almost, and was about ready to give up and die. He had walked up and down the floor in his room for a long while and was profoundly agitated. At least he ceased from walking up and down the floor, and seating himself by a window and seeing a Bible nearby, he reached for it and began to look through its pages, hunting for some consolation and help in the moment of his trouble.

We are told that after reading a short while he said: "The passage which met my eye was the twenty-fifth verse of the third chapter of Romans. On reading it, I immediately received power to believe. The rays of the Sun of Righteousness fell on me in all their fulness; I saw the complete sufficiency of the expiation (sacrifice) which Christ had wrought for my pardon and entire justification. In an instant I believed, and received the peace of the Gospel! If the arm of the Almighty had not supported me, I believe I should have been overwhelmed with gratitude and joy; my eyes filled with tears; transports choked my utterance. I could only look to Heaven in silent fear, overflowing with love and wonder. But it is better to describe the work of the Holy Spirit in His own words: 'It was the joy which is unspeakable and full of glory.' "—1 Pet. 1:8.

Cowper was despairing, and yet he was given such a definite and rich experience. It may be that some of the rest of us might come to enjoy such experience, if first we should come into a condition of despair, where we might realize that we could do nothing for ourselves and must depend solely on Jesus Christ for the gift of such a rare experience. He can and will give it when we are prepared and ready to receive it. Let us make it the one point of our daily prayer to seek for the bestowment upon ourselves of this sort of definite Christian experience, and may you be abundantly rewarded in your seeking.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Is the world getting better or worse? That question is often asked in a tone that expects the answer to be, "Worse." If required to answer categorically, I would say: "The good is growing better, and the bad is growing worse." We live in a world of mixed conditions, and there is continuous warfare between good and evil. It is impossible to estimate good by itself, because it is always in conflict with evil. The peak of this conflict is seen in the temptation of Jesus, when Satan tested Him in the field of hunger, presumption, and ambition. As Jesus won in that struggle, good will win in the end. But as the conflict is now between human and Satanic forces, the victory is not always sure at any one time; but in the final battle, good will win, and there is a steady gain for Christianity.

To admit that the world is growing worse would be to reduce faith in the Gospel and discourage effort to save the world. All progress in righteousness is by faith—"We walk by faith, not by sight." The sea casts its worst upon the shore, and that is what human eyes see. All the processes of publicity bring the worst in sight. Papers, pictures, amusements, gather up the trivial, the immoral, the criminal in society and present them on page, screen, and in human speech. If the world is to be judged by these witnesses, then the conclusion is that the world is growing worse. Satan throws the worst to the surface to discourage effort and weaken faith. The police station does not give a true insight into all the city. The hospital would indicate a loss in human health. There is a difference between bootleggers and legalized saloons—one is a violater of the law, the other makes all a party to wrong. Some say that intemperance is worse than ever; but the increase in home-building, in schools, in bank deposits, in general thrift, tells a different tale. It is simply the sharper conflict between temperance and intemperance. It is Christian pessimism to say that the world is growing worse.

The fight is for the kingdoms of the world to be won to the kingdom of God; and this is promised: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ: and He shall reign forever and ever." That is revealed through John. There are many indications that Christianity is gaining power among the nations. The almost universal desire for peace; the desire for co-operation in the settlement of international questions; the desire to free the nations from tyranny; the appeal of destitution to Christian nations for help; the hunger of peoples everywhere for liberty, opportunity, education, and self-determination; the Christian activities in missions, benevolences, and service for all needy conditions; the increase in religious organizations and personal workers; the liberality of Christians toward human progress—all these indicate a growing interest in human welfare through Christian service. In this country there has never been such a large percentage of our population attending Church meetings, never so much money contributed, per capita, or so many institutions that minister to the helpless and unfortunate. Welfare agencies are looking after the neglected, and even the criminals. The good is growing better. W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Not so long recently President Henry S. Pritchette, of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, said that far too many people are going to college these days. Dr. Arthur W. Bailey, educational pastor of the Second Congregational Church, Holyoke, Mass., declared at the recent session of the Religious Education Association, that some people are not worth educating—their intelligence is too low.

So it seems that another inspirational ideal of our American life is to be rudely snatched away from our youth. The preamble to our Declaration of Independence has long since been discarded. Soon after, the fundamental clarion call to greatness was challenged—that every boy had it in his power to become President, and every girl the wife of the President. Now, we are calmly told that too many of our youth aspire to go to college, and that a lot of us are not worth educating.

President Pritchett and Dr. Bailey would have all the boys and girls of the nation corralled and given the intelligence tests about which we hear so much today and certain persons designated as being of sufficient mental ability to be set aside for various callings and professions, the others to be consigned to mines and factories and the occupations requiring brown rather than brain.

Un-American? Yes, and un-Christian. God is no respecter of persons. It is a pagan notion that condemns certain persons to servitude and others to lordship. Mind is not all that enters into achievement. Character, too, counts, and diligence of application and the spirit of co-operation and good-fellowship. Success is essentially spiritual. Even boys adjudged to be dullards have startled the world by their life achievements. Edison couldn't learn books, and Darwin was a hopeless blockhead—so his teachers said. So said they, likewise, of Wordsworth, and of John Wesley and of many an other.

A college is more than a mind factory, with certain machines in the form of professors and curricula, by which ignorance becomes knowledge and from which a glorious success will eventuate. A college is a section of life. What a man is in college he will be in the work-years of his career. If he will apply himself honestly to his duties, associate cleanly with his fellows, cultivate the spiritual virtues of the Christian way, keep himself well-rounded and sympathetic in his attitudes, whether he be genius or dullard, college is the place for him. If his idea be to get by with a bluff, to do things slyly, he would blush for his mother to know, to live for self and not for the service of his fellows, to ignore God as the constant champion of his every experience and his supremely important helper, to neglect the incorporation in his daily life of those simple, yet essential virtues of the Christian pathway, then college is no place for him.

No man is too dull to be entitled to come to college with character of the Christian type as an asset of his life and with the ideals of the Christian way as his inspiration. Nor is any one brilliant enough to deserve to come without these spiritual endowments.

It goes without saying, in view of these considerations, that the aspiring youth should select his college with clear discernment as to its Christian atmosphere and spiritual ideals. What is its estimate of the value of character—Christian character?

Without Christian character, higher education is an engine of destruction. Unless the world desires Kaiser Wilhelms and Verduns as the result of higher education, great concern must be had to see that colleges admit no young people who cannot pass the character test, and that colleges should themselves be made seminaries of Christian character as well as laboratories of learned research.

Who should come to college, then?

All who aspire to serve with their life in the spirit of the Christian faith, all who conceive of leadership as willing service to God and brotherman. Christian colleges open wide their doors and hearts to every young man and young woman whose life is inspired by this gripping, uplifting ideal.

Are you worthy to come to college? Yes, if you wish to be a Christian rather than a Hun, a servant of mankind and not a fiendish ghoul of selfish indulgence.

Aspire to be a real man, a real woman, and so come to college. W. A. HARPER.

NOTE.—That is one of the finest things which has come to our people from President Harper. We believe every boy and girl should be given a chance to qualify themselves for active service in the Christian life, and the fact that some are not brilliant is no argument in favor of consigning the non-brilliant ones to oblivion and helplessness for life. It was the celebrated Adam Clark who, in his boyhood days, was so dull that he was regarded as a fool; but he got a chance to go on with his studies, and then he became one of the finest linguists of his day and one of the greatest commentators on the Scriptures of any day since the Christian era, although he would likely have been put out of school and refused a chance to learn if he had been under President Pritchett and Dr. A. W. Bailey. Dr. Harper is right. The boy or the girl who aspires to get an education has something in him more than dullard tendencies. Give him a chance to fill his place in life with credit to himself and the cause for which he labors.—EDITOR.

THE PEOPLE WHO DO NOT GO TO CHURCH AND WHY.

Number II.

Another cause for non-churchgoing is, that in many small towns there are four churches where there should be but one. It is not zeal for Christ that establishes these churches, but simply denominational strife and their highest reason for continuing to exist is competition. In an Arizona town there are five churches that could be well supplied with one; not one hundred miles from there, there are Indians and Mexicans by the thousands who have never heard the gospel. Is it any wonder, under such conditions, the church groans for financial support, and the people stay away from the everlasting begging?

Magic lanterns and moving-picture shows in the church have materially assisted in keeping intelligent people away. The church vaudeville is but a poor imitation of the better service which the street can furnish. Few people are caught by silly pulpit themes. The crowd which comes to hear the "Seven Sneezes" will sneeze and not come again. One preacher made this announcement in the town paper: "To-night the Methodist brethren, with Rev. —— as sky-pilot, will give a feed in the basement of the Christian church. For Christ's sake come and get your money's worth. At the same time —— will dispense brain and spiritual provender for the nominal sum of nothing. Subject: 'Naaman the Leper!' You are cordially invited to all of the above, now and forever, amen, so mote it be." People worthwhile do not care to patronize such down-right foolishness. Jesus never condescended to one unworthy artifice.

The automobile craze, golf playing, Sunday baseball, the Sunday theater, week-end pleasure hunts, and such like, have very unfavorable bearing on church attendance. Business interests are at times placed before personal obligations to the house of God. Churchmen employ the Lord's Day and even the hour of public worship in the attempted furtherance of their financial affairs, to their own spiritual impoverishment and their brother's hurt. The real peril of the age is the possibility that among the engrossing interests of modern life there shall be no outlook at all, no holy city of the soul. That is the materialism that curses American life—the shut-in, self-absorbed, unhallowed life.

You meet those who say: "If you could get out into the world a little you would not need to go to church. I have learned that God is everywhere and I have learned that you can worship God at any time and in any place." Yes, he can, but does he? You can worship God any time and anywhere; but unless you learn to worship him sometime and somewhere, you will not be able to worship him anywhere and at any time. The necessity for human worship is not in the nature of God. It is the need of the human soul. It is not a law which is theological; it is psychological. You and I might have learned to read the classics without ever going to school; but we did not. You and I might become saints with wings, without ever having devoted a day or an hour to the learning of the Holy Word, without ever devoting the Lord's Day, or a sacred season, to that discipline of the soul by which we come into communion with the Infinite. Oh, yes, a man can be religious with very few brains, with very little talent. But to be religious he must use what brains and talent he has, and the business of learning Christianity and its practice demand patient days and plodding years. If some men have found a very helpful and satisfying service outside the regular forms of church work, it is because of the fruits of the Spirit; the roots are in the church, but they spread everywhere and produce fruit outside the enclosure.

Some stay away from church to escape all service, to shirk obligation. They have no taste for what the church offers, and it does not alarm them that they have no taste; they think the food insipid; they seem to be wholly unconscious that it is the food Heaven has prepared that is unpalatable to them, and appear not to know how serious a symptom it is. In religion some men claim the right to do as they please. The sense of fairness would compel them to grant that right to others, and if all others took that right, there would be no church, there would be nobody to build churches, nobody to support preaching; that course followed would utterly destroy the church. Could that organization some work a little in take the place of the church? While it stands valiantly against one or two cardinal evils, and strongly supports a few great virtues, it has no program for the whole man with all his good and all his evil, and for the whole world with all its vice and all its virtue, like that set forth by Christ. Those who do not support the church may not realize the seriousness of a neglect that would let the church die. What organization now existing would take its place in imparting moral and spiritual truth to the young? The church has not even a rival in the field. No other oranization makes even a pretense at it. Would they be satisfied to have the voice of the preacher stilled in the land? Who would create public sentiment —that mightiest of all weapons for the elevation of a people? Who would create the moral atmosphere out of which all reforms spring, and moral betterment comes?

Are the people who stand aloof from the church not conscious of having lost something during all these years in which they have neglected to refresh themselves at the Fount of wisdom? Are they unaware of the finer, more sensitive moral fiber that might have been theirs if only they had kept themselves in the environment where such fiber is produced? Are they not alarmed that they have lost their taste for Christ's work? Oh, the deceptiveness of that philosophy that reclines in rocking-chairs, unconcernedly smoking its pipe, while the enemy is battering down the doors. Philosophy of ease, I'm not my brother's keeper. No, sir, I'm not. Soothing to the nerves, no doubt. But a man ought to think about his nerves hereafter as well as here. Ah, when the King of all the earth arises and asks, "Why came ye not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty?" What will your answer be?

DURHAM NEWS.

The Baraca Class of the First Christian Church held a very interesting and enjoyable celebration and social on Thursday night, June 7th. The celebration was in honor of one of their members, Mr. J. L Cash, who has attended Sunday School for twenty-three years without missing a single Sunday. Following is the program which was rendered during the course of the evening: Song; prayer, T. J. Hayes; business session; song; speech, Dr. W. H. Boone; speech, Mr. D. L. Boone; speech, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell; special music; social hour.

Dr. W. H. Boone, who is teacher of the class, made a very interesting talk, using for his subject, "Batteries." In his talk, he brought out the idea that if you had a battery which had several dead cells in it, it was considered dead and did not have any power. He said that several batteries put together were considered a dynamo, and that the Baraca Class could be very well compared to a dynamo with a number of batteries. If one of these batteries dies or gets so it will not spark, then the class has no power and the class has to get to work and find out where the dead cell is. He spoke of Mr. Cash as being one of the strongest cells that he knew of anywhere, and that the class would be at a great loss without him. He always responds, and every cell in him is alive. There is no death there. Mr. Cash gives the Christian Church a record that no other Church in the land has or rather has ever made public, and that he has been a faithful Church worker and Sunday School worker for twenty-three years, and that is something we all ought to be proud of.

Mr. D. L. Boone, who is superintendent of the Sunday School, spoke of the faithfulness of Mr. Cash, and that he had been a man who has been faithful for twenty-three years and a man who regards his Sunday School work as a privilege as well as a duty, and he hoped that Mr. Cash would continue this record for many more years unbroken.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell spoke in a rather humorous vein, and also spoke of the sparking ability of Mr. Cash. He said that when Mr. Cash was called upon to do a thing, he was always ready and willing. He compared him to a live cell in the battery that is always ready to spark when you touch it to test it out, and that the Christian Church, and especially the Baraca Class, could not do without him.

The Baraca Class gave Mr. Cash a little token of their appreciation of his great record and work that he has done for them, and hoped that he would continue on for many more years to come.

After the program, the attention of the audience was turned to an enjoyable social hour in which a delicious ice course was served. During this time, a large white birthday cake with twenty-three candles was brought in and presented by the Baracas and Philatheas. Attending the celebration were members of the Baraca and Philathea Classes, with quite a number of their friends also.

PAGE VALLEY LETTER.

Since writing my last letter I have held one more five-day meeting—my last meeting of the present Conference year. As a result of this meeting, I received four new members into St. Peter's Christian Church. During the past two months I have been baptizing the members received into my Churches with which I have held evangelistic meetings since March 1st. So far, I have baptized forty-four persons this spring, and three last fall, making forty-seven in all that I have baptized during the present Conference year. I have a few more yet to baptize this summer.

On Sunday, June 17th, I immersed five persons. Among this number were an old man and his wife. The old man, who had never made a profession of religion before, will be eighty-two years old in August of this year.

The Sunday School work at all six of my Churches is making fine progress this summer, notwithstanding the fact that so many of the men of the various communities in which the Churches are located are away working in other States this year.

Since closing my last revival meeting of the year, I am kept busy filling my eight preaching appointments per month, making pastoral visits and working in my garden. Vacations and I are strangers to each other.

A SISTER SPEAKS HER MIND.

Dear Christian Sun:

Your pages, week by week, hold many good things. Especially do I prize and thank you for the article in May 31st issue on the "Sphere of the Church," both for what our editor says and for what he copies from the Presbyterian Standard. To many minds, these godly writers have sounded none too soon the note of alarm. For one, my heart long has been burdened by the falling away of the Church from her appointed mission. The reign of grace "through righteousness unto eternal life" seems slipping farther away. Present-day activities of the Church seem to center about things which, if not alive to grace, at least largely are superficial. Toward the saved, shallow and misdirected policies cruelly assail and hinder Christian experience and growth, while toward the unsaved, these same policies, with their element of pampering to worldly demand, dangerously pervert the way into salvation. Worship fast is becoming a lost art. The Church, all denominations, in many instances, has become a veritable beehive of action, but until worship is revived and the Church's power through the workings of the Holy Spirit no longer dissipated and her purpose diverted, will the unsaved be constrained.

Never can work count for worship, nor can work, without worship, which is the acme of spiritual experience, bear spiritual fruit.

Mrs. J. J. Lincoln.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

If we of the Southern Christian Convention are to do our part of world wide evangelization and grow in numbers and in influence, as is our privilege, we must certainly rear and send out more missionaries than we have been doing. It is enough to make us hang our heads in shame and humiliation when we recall that now for twenty-five years the whole Southern Convention has only sent out from its own numbers one missionary and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett, who remained in the work. I often wonder why this is and who must face God in the judgment for this responsibility and answer to such a showing. We people of the Convention may think we will have great growth and prosperity, but we shall have to take it out in thinking until this sad and tragic condition is faced and answered for. From the beginning till now God has never prospered a non-missionary church to any appreciable degree. And He never will.

We are told that the great majority of those who enter the ministry and the mission field decide to do so, for the most part, by the time they are fifteen years of age. Evidently in our homes and in our Sunday schools we are not laying the missionary opportunity before our youths, nor are we bringing emphatically to mind the missionary burden and God's missionary message. This Southern Convention ought to be sending out from one to five missionaries every year, instead of sending out one in twenty-five years. How long one wonders before we can be awakened to our real condition and real needs. As long as we defer this matter we may expect our heavenly Father to defer His blessings in bountiful increase and prosperity. O, if our Christian parents, and especially our Sunday school teachers, could realize the possibilities for Kingdom growth and the responsibilities therefor which rest upon their shoulders. J. O. Atkinson.

PRAYING IN THE HEATHEN TEMPLE, AND TO JESUS.

No doubt many Sun readers are not aware of the varied activities and experiences of a missionary on the field. In a personal letter from Mrs. Susie V. Fry, Utsunomiya, Japan, May 23rd I find the following, which was not intended for print but which I think makes very interesting reading:

"Every Sunday morning two of our school girls and myself go to the church to help with the Sunday school. While we are doing it, groups of girls are conducting Sunday schools at four other places. In the afternoon similar groups conduct Sunday schools in seven other places. We teach the Bible and Gospel filled hymns. Because of the anti-christian spirit of the public schools, this is only seed sowing now. But a great harvest may appear most anytime.

This morning, when I went to the school, I found that one of our next door neighbors had taken their baby to the hospital. We remembered it in our chapel prayer. I went over and told the grandmother and she said that she went to the heathen temple and prayed for it yesterday. But that the little cousin, who is a graduate of our Christian kindergarten had prayed to Jesus for its recovery. The older brother of the baby also graduated from our kindergarten this year. Each one of those mothers was a member of the first Sunday school and the first Bible class I ever conducted in this city. The grandmother would not let the daughters join the church, but the truth is showing in these younger children.

Earnestly yours,"

J. O. Atkinson.

OUR WHOLE DUTY.

A good sister deeply interested in our Men and Millions Movement writes: "I am praying that the church I love may see the light on this (Movement) and do their whole duty, I fear the consequences as revealed to us in Revelation 11:4-5 and that our candlestick will be taken away from us. So I am praying that this Revelation will help all to see their whole duty." The verses referred to are as follows: "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."

Having planned our work on the basis of income from Men and Millions, it is readily seen what a calamity will come to us if we do not do our whole duty, and in the failure to do this certainly much light, if not the whole candlestick, is taken away. Here is devoutly hoping that all of us shall do our whole duty in meeting our pledges to Men and Millions as God may prosper and help us. J. O. Atkinson.

"THE TRINITY."

(No. VII of the Series.)

God Is Fire.

"God is a consuming fire."—Heb. 12:29.

The apostles of Jesus Christ teach us that the substance of God is spirit, that the supreme quality in God is love, that the supreme intellectual quality in God is light, and that the supreme relation of God to man is paternal—Father. In the above text we have an apostle, the author of the epistle to the Hebrews, saying that "God is a fire." In this, God is described as a consuming or a destructive agency; and we have not so known Him. Christ came "not to destroy, but fulfill," and that meant to fulfill the vow of God in the purifying and the development of the soul into eternity as well as the laws of the land. St. Paul, as other writers, makes it quite clear that love is an eternal thing, "endureth all things and never faileth" (1 Cor. 13). In what sense, then, is God fire?

Fire is another natural element of the universe which is known in a trinity. It is composed of hydrogen, oxygen and electricity, and the combination of these three make the one thing called "fire."

Scientists tell us that every flame, whether it be that of a great conflagration or that of a gas jet, or that of an ordinary oil lamp or candle, consists of three different kinds of flame; that is, cones, or hills of flame, one within the other as you would fit funnels over one another, or within one another. What have you, then? First, there is the inner cone, which is at the bottom next to the burner, shaped hollow like an inverted glass, in which no combustion takes place.

We learned in our chemistry that a small piece of paper can be depressed in a flame and the center of the portion in the flame would not even be charred; we learned also that a platinum wire held in the flame becomes red hot only on the outer edges, while the center remains black.

Second, we have the intermediate cone, or the one next over and above the lower, called the "light-giving" cone. Here it is hydrogen mainly that is consumed and particles of carbon become white heat. Hydrogen being the main element consumed, light is predominant, and from this we get the most of the light of the flame.

And then we have the outer cone—the top one—in which, owing to contact with the oxygen in the air, combustion is perfect, and the result is mainly heat. Wherever combustion is the greatest there we have the greatest heat. It is in this cone, next to the outside, that the impurities of the outside are consumed.

It is rather significant that the apostle has used this natural utility, familiar to us all, as a symbol of the great parent Spirit of God—God manifested and God outflowing. Let us examine it in this light—oxygen, hydrogen and electricity. Oxygen is not hydrogen, nor is hydrogen oxygen, etc., but without all three of the elements combined there would be no fire. Now, take a look at God as a trinity. Father, Son and Holy Spirit are as the oxygen, the hydrogen and the electricity, separate and distinct, but combining in one whole to make God. God is our Father in universal life; in the Son, He is our light; and the Holy Spirit is the outflowing life of Him like the "juice" from the dynamo going out along the wires, giving the world its light and industry its power. God's wires are every where. Touch them and you have all that He is, limited only by your own limitations.

Now, let us follow the illustration of the cones. Here it seems that God has adapted the whole analogy as descriptive of Himself. We have seen that the center of the flame is at absolute rest. There is no combustion at all, and in it there is complete and absolute protection. In the heart of the eternal Father is rest and peace and absolute freedom from all sin and dangers.

In the next cone there is a brilliant light, and only partial combustion. This is the light which emanates into space, dispels the darkness, and guides man without stumbling. In the Son is the brilliant light, the "light of the world," which moves from the Father into the world and guides mankind, without stumbling, into all truth. "He that followeth Me shall not walk in the darkness," said Christ, "but shall have the light of life." "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." Christ moves from the Father and draws all men to the Father.

And now we have the outer cone. This is the cone of consuming heat. This is the cone next to the outside which is so full of poisons, carbons, etc. This is the cone of fiery tongues that licks out into the outside and burns up the impurities. Is it not true that God has promised to send fire and sword? And he has sent it in the Holy Spirit.

The flame of the Holy Spirit burns. It moves out into the world and into the hearts of men, burning up all that is low and base and corrupt, gathering out of the world (which is His kingdom) all things that cause stumbling and that do iniquity, and draws it into his fire and burns it. There we have "weeping and gnashing of teeth" (Matt. 18:40-43). There is always gnashing of teeth when righteousness burns iniquity. But as the outer cone purifies and draws to the inner cone and there all becomes light, so the Holy Spirit purifies and draws to Christ, who is the inner cone, and we, too, become the light, according to His own declaration, when He said: "Ye are the light of the world."

Is it not true that so long as we live in the sphere of low desires, indulging in the appetites and tendencies of the baser part of our natures, the fire-breath of the eternal peace, light and heat," torments us with the pricking of conscience and restlessness, which is the inevitable consequences of wrong living? And is it not true also that in all this there is a pleading for the way of rest and peace and happiness? What would you say it is? Is it not the Father's heart in the inner cone, the center of all light and rest, of all truth and light and of all-consuming force which pleads, through the light of the world, Jesus Christ, to each sinful soul, saying "Come unto me"—to me in this inner cone of safety; to me in this inner cone of rest, peace, joy and happiness—"and I will give you rest" and peace and and joy and happiness. Talk about joy in the Holy Ghost—such is not some trance possessing us in which we feel happy, but it is the joy of seeing an enemy subdued and righteousness enthroned. When from the inner cone we can look out and see God's Holy Spirit burning up iniquity, purifying everything around and establishing righteousness, we then know the work of the Holy Ghost and we have joy in the Holy Ghost.

When a soul comes to Christ—responds to these outer pleadings—what happens? The measureless peace of God from the inner cone is breathed into the soul; the measureless light, from the middle cone, Christ, illuminates it; and the measureless power from the outer cone protects it forever. God is a fire, but that means a fire of consuming power and purifying life, that brings peace, and light and joy forever. A fire is one flame, but no fire exists without the three cones, and the three cones make the flame. God is one God, but God is always in Father, Son and Holy Ghost. He exists in the three and the three make God. So we have God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit.

Now, what about hell-fire and eternal torments? Isaiah says, "Who among us can dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us can dwell with everlasting burnings? He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly."—Isa. 33:14.

Who is it and what is it, throughout all time, that can stand the fire? Who is it and what is it that no fire can harm? It is the righteous and that which is upright; because they rest securely in the Father's care, in the central cone of peace.

The Apostle Luke (16) gives us a dramatic example of God's consuming fire and man's ability to endure the burning, an example which towers above all other, viz: the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. It is said that Dives, after death, his body already buried on earth, "lifted up his eyes, being in torments," and, seeing Abraham afar off, cried, "I am in anguish in the flame." What was the flame? The physical body of Dives was in the tomb on the earth, and a material fire would have been useless. Anguish is not a physical thing. It is of the soul mental, moral and spiritual; and a flame that produces anguish of soul must be something that will ignite and fasten itself to the qualities of soul. Now, the soul of man is in the image of God, and God is a consuming fire. Then, that of the soul that is anguished and tormented must be that of God's image igniting the spirit-lamp of the man. (Proverbs says, "The spirit of man is the lamp of the Lord," 2:27) suffering the pains that are produced by the fires of reviving memory and the flames of unselfish remorse; of the agony that was brought on by a clearer vision of truth and right; of the reproach of an enlightened and awakened conscience and the travail pains of the new birth, bringing forth from the old engrossing selfishness to a heavenly unselfishness.

Did it ever occur to you that the only sins that Dives was charged with were riches and selfishness, and that it is through the torments of these flames he suffers until he is purified of them? As gold ore is committed to the furnace and the flames, to rid it of the dross, so the soul of Dives which came from God, and destined to return to God, must have been committed to everlasting burnings to rid it of its wrongs. And now the firebreath of God's love in hell is burning the dross of his selfishness, of his indulgences, of his indifferences to others, of his godlessness and purifying him.

If he had not been given this flame in hell whereby he might be awakened to right apprehensions of his sinfulness, would God, his Father, have done all He could for His Child?

But now the man's feeling begins to soften, and he thinks of those he has left behind. So there is something of God in him yet, and it is coming forth. What a glory is being wrought in him by these flames! What a spirit of missions now possesses him! He would send missionaries to the world to save mankind from the torment. We see no signs of the flames consuming his spirit, but rather firing it into the true spirit of God. We see no signs of his spirit being harmed, but instead he is being freed from all that has bound, enslaved, and deadened his spirit; and the moment he feels the refining effect of the flame, his spirit comes to life and he begins godliness. Even hell shall serve the Lord.

Have we any account of God not forgiving a penitent soul? Is penitence of a soul, which never dies, limited to the flesh? And do all possibilities of the soul die with the flesh? If the soul, at death of the body, becomes a dead soul and must pass with the flesh, there is no hereafter, no heaven and no peace for souls—no God. But this can't be true. It is the soul that lives and loves and is like God, and not the flesh; and this soul goes on forever, carrying with it all its qualities. It is the soul that repents, and not the flesh. And the life of the soul is one continuous life with which death has nothing to do except to free it from the limitations of the flesh and to serve as a portal to the spirit world, where it may know God more fully.

Let us be grateful to Him for this symbol of the purifying, transforming and melting power of his all-conquering love; and let us strive to apprehend the wonderful and comforting teaching underlying this luminous figure. "God is a consuming fire."

FROM BRO. SCOTT'S FIELD.

Mt. Bethel.

Mt. Bethel is still going forward with the work of the Master. The increase in attendance shows that new interest is among the people of the Church. The Sunday School is one of the best had there in years, and we are hoping for continued increase.

All-day memorial service was held on Sunday, May 20th. Rev. J. W. Patton preached two powerful sermons to large congregations.

Revival services start Sunday, July 15th, with Rev. H. E. Truitt, of Princeton, N. J., doing the preaching. "Children's Day" exercise will be the feature of the morning service, and Bro. Truitt will preach in the afternoon. A good meeting is looked forward to.

Belews Creek.

The people at Belews Creek have been doing a splendid work this spring. Several improvements have been made, including the painting of the Church. This is an evidence that the people are interested.

Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, of Alabama, assisted the pastor in the all-day memorial service held on Sunday, May 27th. The services were well attended. To many, the day was a real homecoming and reunion of friends and loved ones.

A senior Christian Endeavor Society has been organized, and now has a membership of about forty. The interest in this part of the work is very inspiring. Plans are being made for immediate organization of a Junior Society, in order to enlist all ages of the young folks in the work with a definite goal.

The revival meeting will start the fourth Sunday in July. Rev. W. J. Edwards, of Coleridge, N. C., will do the preaching.

Berea (Alamance).

Dr. W. P. Lawrence, head of the English department of Elon College, spoke to one of the largest congregations ever gathered at Berea, on Sunday, June 3rd, memorial service. The people were highly pleased with the service. The sermon by Dr. Lawrence, and the special music by Mrs. Ireland were the features of the day.

The people are looking with great hopes toward the revival meeting which is to begin on July 1st. Engineer A. Richard Brothers, of Raleigh, N. C., will assist in the meeting.

Auburn.

"Children's Day" was observed at Auburn on Sunday, June 10th. The program was splendidly arranged by the committee, and the children carried it out in a highly pleasing manner.

The members are to make some needed improvements immediately, including the painting of the Church building. Special series of meetings will begin Sunday, August 12th.

Kallam Grove.

Services were held at Kallam Grove Sunday afternoon, June 17th. A very good congregation was present. There is to be found in this field plenty of work to do. The people seem eager to have a Church, and it is sincerely hoped that, through the help of God, the work may be started anew. The Church membership now is only about fifteen. It seems almost a discredit to our Church that we have not made the work go. Through Christ, all things are possible. We are asking you for your prayers, as we undertake the work, that the work may progress.

Wm. T. Scott, Pastor.

Elon College, N. C.

The great State of New York refuses to stand by the Constitution of the United States. When the South refused to stand for the liberation of the slaves, it was said to be in rebellion. If so in that case, much more is it so now as to the State of New York, for it refuses to stand by the Constitution of the United States and has washed its hands of any effort to do so by repealing the law-enforcement act which was passed specially with a view to making the Eighteenth Amendment effective. Now Gov. Smith says New York will not help to make it effective. That is rebellion against the Constitution of the United States. We are surprised that a Governor of a State who refuses to honor the Constitution of the United States, is permitted to hold office. If there is no more respect for the Constitution than that, and if there be no more loyalty to the same than, that, we do not see how it can be long maintained. Disrespect for the Constitution of our great country, especially by a State and its Governor, seems to be getting perilously near to Bolshevism.

NOTICE.

Bro. W. A. Newman, Henderson, N. C., wishes any of our brethren who may be passing that way would notify him and let him make appointment for preaching in the Henderson Christian Church, as the Church is now without a pastor, as Rev. Elisha Bradshaw does not come to serve the Church as was expected at one time.

ABSTRACT OF BACCALAUREATE SERMON.

The following is from the baccalaureate sermon preached by Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., LL. D., at Elon College, N. C., the leading college of the denomination of Christians, May 27, 1923:

"To whom much is given, of him shall much be required."

There has never been a generation of young people to whom so much has been given, in God's good providence, as the one now entering upon the most active period of life.

This fact brings with it congratulations for the fortunate youth of this century, whose natal day was so auspicious, and it also brings, with every opportunity, a tremendous responsibility.

Consider for a little while what rare and unusual gifts God has showered upon those whose childhood and young manhood and womanhood fall within the last quarter century.

Educational advantages have increased wonderfully in most parts of our country since we began to date our letters "in the year of our Lord 1900." My brief experience in school teaching was in the long-ago period of the little red schoolhouse, when the one teacher of the school had as many classes as scholars, from the A B Abs to the advanced class in geometry; when college boys who taught winter country schools in New England were chosen for their muscle as well as for their brains; since it was occasionally necessary to thrash boys bigger than themselves, or else suffer the ignominy of themselves being thrown out into the snowdrifts. Then the grammar school was the limit of the educational advantages of most. Now we can say, almost without qualification, that it is possible for every boy and girl in America to get not only a little red schoolhouse education, but a college education if he desires it hard enough, and has the pluck to earn it.

I am not decrying the day of the little red schoolhouse. Far from it. It started a multitude of noble men and women on careers of the highest usefulness. Thank God for the self-sacrificing, conscientious schoolmasters and schoolmarms who in the old days, for the love of youth and for the Master's sake, wielded the spelling-book and the birch with equal efficiency.

Yet, who will say that the equipment and the teaching, the standards of the profession and the honor in which it is held, are not far higher now than fifty or even twenty-five years ago, and are not constantly rising, the country over?

Moreover, there is a far wider scope given to the word "education" than in former days. To be educated in these days is not simply to be able to construe Latin and Greek, not simply to be able to turn Latin odes into poor English poetry, but "to be educated" is to know something of many things, and, if possible, everything of some one thing. A place has been found in the educational world for the hand-worker as well as for the brain-worker.

To learn to lay a good brick wall is an education. To learn the best composition of fertilizers is not to be despised any more than to plumb the depths of Aristotle and Einstein. There is a famous university in New York State founded on the principle that every kind of learning is worthy of the respect and the careful attention of the ripest scholars.

The student who studies pigs and learns the best way of breeding and feeding them is worthy of as much honor as the archaeologist who has deciphered the inscription on Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb. The man who "knows beans" thoroughly, who can make the hens lay two eggs in the nest where one was laid before, is entitled to respect, as well as the man who knows every fine point about the Greek dative.

I claim that this is a great advantage to the young men and women of this generation, and opens to them a multitude of opportunities unknown a generation ago. The idea of education has been broadened so that there is a place in the educated world for every one who has the will to learn and to serve his age with what he learns.

Again, the wonderful advances in applied science open wide new doors to young people of this generation. Take the one field of electricity. God has put His modern miracles at your disposal, young people. Not only the telegraph and telephone, which you shared with a past generation, but wireless telegraphy and wireless telephony, the marvels of the radio, are all yours.

I was born in the tallow-candle age, seventy years ago. You were born into the age of electric lights. All the modern machinery which oil and gas and electricity have made possible are for you. It is as though God had opened a new kind of Pandora's box for you, with no ills, but only blessings, and said, "Help yourself; they are all yours."

Once more, there is a vast responsibility, and a blessed opportunity, in these days for the educated men of today to show the very necessary and vital connection between education and religion. The sharper the tool, the worthier should be the purpose for which it is used.

In some quarters there is an impression that most young men and women lose their religious zeal when they go to college. It used to be taken for granted that education was the handmaid of religion and religion the fundamental support of education. Our fathers planted the Church first and the schoolhouse close beside it. Most of the earliest colleges were inaugurated and endowed for the express and avowed purpose of raising up godly and capable young men for the Gospel ministry. In those days their trustees were for the most part preachers, and all were outspoken Christians. They put religion first and education second.

Now the position is reversed. Religion is second in many colleges, and not a good second, either.

But this gives you a wonderful opportunity, young men and women of this graduating class, and all who like you leave academic halls this year, as Christians. It is a task worthy of the sturdiest of you to bring back the old relation of religion and education, not making them two separate affairs, but one and indivisible.

Exert all your influence to lead your generation of educated men to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness; not to put God second or third or last, in your lives, or in the lives of those whom, like you, He has especially blessed. But make Him first and always supreme. Let it not be longer said that to send a boy to college is to destroy his faith and to quench his zeal and to weaken his usefulness in the Church. Make it evident that a college education gives a man a larger, broader foundation for his beliefs, and intensifies his desire to serve God and his fellowmen.

In doing this, do not be discouraged by any seeming obstacles. Jehovah is the God of the intellect as well as of the emotions. More are they that be with us in this effort to make religion supreme than they that be against us.

Religion is not an impotent thing, fit only for the old and for the morose. We are told by some that Christianity has failed because it did not stop the world war, the greatest crime in all history since the crucifixion of the Christ. It is not true. Civilization has failed; but Christianity has not failed, for it has not yet been tried. Ambitious politics started the war; national selfishness and greed, and not the spirit of Christ, are trying in vain to end it.

Moreover, in some nations the perils, disasters and sufferings of the war, instead of destroying Christianity, have intensified the religious spirit and have made the people more thoroughly Christian. They have learned that kings and generals as well as horses are vain things for safety, and have been thrown back upon Jehovah. He has become their strength and their shield.

Then, never be discouraged or doubtful of final victory. There is no power in the intellectual world any more than in the physical world that can demolish the rock of ages. It is our business, as educated men, to range ourselves on the side of God and an aggressive Christianity, with no quavering doubts or unworthy fears as to the outcome of the fight.

Let us revert to our text: "To whom much is given." Who are they? You, to whom I speak. You, who live in this age of untold educational advantages.. You, who are mounted on other men's shoulders. You, who can view a far wider horizon than your fathers ever saw. You, who do not have to study your lessons by firelight or do sums on the back of a wooden shovel. You, who have so wide a choice before you for making any kind of an education count for God and country. You, into whose hands God has put all the million marvels of electricity and all the inventions and discoveries which will make this first quarter of the twentieth century forever famous in history. You, who live in an age where an unnatural struggle seems to be going on between science and religion, between faith and sight—a struggle which you can help settle aright, showing that since true science, not "science falsely so-called," is God's science, and true religion is God's religion, there can be no real conflict. You, who live in these perilous and supremely critical days of the world's story, when nations, indeed a whole continent, hangs in the balance between peace and war, and when the world is perhaps on the ragged edge of bolshevistic chaos. You, who have Jehovah on your side, the history of the ages to guide you, the Bible and the Holy Spirit to lead you.

You, with such unmeasured opportunities, have untold responsibilities. To whom much is given, of him (of you) will much be required.

COLLEGE PERIOD.

I am sure the churches of the Southern Convention have the information concerning College Period. That at the last session of the Convention it was decided that the months of June, July and August should be the time in which the churches might arrange for a program for that purposse. A very fine program, however, has been prepared by Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C. He will be glad to supply copies for any one making requests for same.

It is very important that the churches have this exercise; and to ask for an offering that day. When the people, young and old, begin to put money into our colleges there will be a personal interest and as a result greater efforts will be made that the colleges may be a real success.

The people are becoming anxious to know the requirements and the standing Bethlehem is to have. This will be given out when the president gets here and has time to arrange same.

The walls of the basement are almost completed and the sub-floor for the first story is on. The building will be ready in time.

It will be well for the pastors to mention the school and names for prospective students may be sent to the President. A College Day Exercise would help some to decide their course.

THE WORLD'S BEST KNOWN SHAKESPEARE SCHOLAR VISITS NORTH CAROLINA.

William Thornton Whitsett.

Sir Israel Gollancz of King's College, London, spoke on "Shakespeare, the Man, and the Artist" at the North Carolina College for Women on June 5th. Sir Israel is the world's best known Shakespeare scholar, famous among English speaking people as the editor of the Temple Shakespeare, and is chairman of the Council of the Shakespeare Association. He landed in New York May 3rd, and came over, primarially, to attend the British-American Conference to be held at Columbia University. This is his first visit to our shores, and he will return to England June 16th. He will visit Washington and Boston while here, and is making the Hotel Majestic in New York his home while in this country. For ten years he was at Cambridge, and for the last twenty years has been the head of the English department at King's College, London.

Sir Israel is a man of medium height, active and vigorous, still in the sixties, affable and interested in world affairs, with a clear, ringing voice, and a good platform presence. He is a typical scholar, so thoroughly saturated with his favorite author, Shakespeare, that he readily draws upon him for quotations suitable for almost any line of conversation. He believes with all his heart in world unity, and the united comradeship of the English speaking people, and is at home when talking upon this subject.

In an interview he spoke of the waning influence of Tennyson in this day, but expressed the opinion that there would soon be a re-action and that Tennyson would become more popular than ever before. He mentioned the great interest throughout England in the work of Walt Whitman and thought that Whitman was, perhaps, the best-known of American authors in his country. Emerson was mentioned as having already a large place in England, with a constantly growing influence. Sir Israel grew enthusiastic when speaking of Ambassador Walter Hines Page, and declared of him, "He was a genius in his relationships with both men and affairs." He mentioned the great service that Page rendered in the matter of the Ter-Centernary Celebration of Shakespeare, and was full of admiration for Page's fine address upon that occasion. Page was an Honorary President of the Shakespeare Day Committee, since this has been incorporated into the Shakespeare Association the connection with this country is preserved by having our present Ambassador, Hon. George Harvey, as one of the Honorary Presidents, the other being the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Balfour, K. G. O. M. The treasurer is Sir Charles C. Wakefield, Bart. who has given a fund of twenty-five hundred pounds sterling, for the purpose of establishing an endowed Sir Walter Raleigh lectureship. In the Shakespeare Association the following have been put on as vice-presidents,—H. H. Furness, G. L. Kittredge, A. H. Thorndike, and Alfred Noyes, to represent this country. Sir Israel hopes to raise a fund of about one hundred thousand dollars to be used in furthering the influence and study of the works of William Shakespeare. As Chairman of the Council of this organization he is now active in promoting interest in the organization. The headquarters of the Shakespeare Association is at King's College, Strand, London, and Sir Israel expressed the hope that many American scholars would become interested in the work of the Association.

Sir Israel expressed the thought that it was very easy for him to feel at home in North Carolina, for he had given the best of his life to the study of the English of the day of Queen Elizabeth, and it was a gallant hero of the day of Elizabeth, Sir Walter Raleigh, who had shown such interest in North Carolina that he sent an expedition in 1584 for the settlement of a colony on Roanoke Island, and had spent much of his fortune in his efforts to colonize this very state.

During his public address he was given close attention, and while his topic was a strictly literary one, and was presented to a packed house on a hot June morning, he succeeded in carrying his hearers with him to the close of his address. His earnestness, and absorbed interest, in his own life's work along the lines he was talking did much to enable him to do this. His visit was a great treat to those who were so fortunate as to hear him, and those who met him will have increased respect for the scholarship which has given him such wide fame. In Shakespearean research there is no close second name to that of Sir Israel Gollancz.

OUR ALABAMA LETTER.

DEAR BRO. BARRETT:

I would like to say to our people all over our dear old southland, that our Bethlehem College building is going up—the walls are appoaching completion, and it will not be long before our long looked for school may be at work. This school will in no way hinder our work along other lines. but will greatly help every way.

Our own people love our own Church more fervently. Other people will have greater respect for us and the cause we represent. Every enterprise of our own dear Church will take on new life, all helping it to assume its rightful place among the Churches of our great Country.

Oh, yes, Christians of Georgia and Alabama and of our entire Church, can you not realize even now what a tremendous program God has intrusted to us as a people? Think of it—to build Bethlehem College and so enlarge our borders and make more substantial every line of Christian service.

Who in all our Brotherhood would not like to have a part in building such an enterprise? God help us to become anxious to give of our means to support the great movements of our Church, and then to give our sons and daughters to the greatest cause that the world ever saw—Christian Education, Christian Culture and Christian Service.

G. D. HUNT.

Wadley, Ala.

The Sun greatly rejoices with our brethren in Georgia and Alabama in the good prospect of soon having Bethlehem College in active operation. If the work is faithfully done, as we trust it will be, then we believe a new day will dawn. indeed it is already dawning and giving a new impetus to every part of our work in the further South. Give Christian Education its rightful place, but do not let it usurp the place of the Holy Spirit in the work of the Church and we shall soon see the dawning light of this new day. Our best wishes are with our brethren in Georgia and Alabama in their great undertaking. We await the hour of the opening of Bethlehem College with a deep interest. Let every one who can lend a hand in helping, do so and the quicker the better. If Bro. Hunt cannot get to see you, write him and tell him what you will do. If you have the money in hand, send it to him and if you have not the money now by you, write him and tell him when you will send it. Such a course will not only help him, for it is practically impossible for him to see every individual in Georgia and Alabama who may belong to our Church, or who may be its friend, and then such a course will greatly encourage him in his work for the college.—EDITOR.

MODERNISM AND THE CHURCH.

The Prsebyterian of The South says that "modernism is the fault of the Church." That is a hard blow, but if it is true, the sooner we find it out, the better. That paper declares that "this recent and menacing enemy of The Church is the most dangerous assailant the Church has. It is eating at the life. It, like malaria, is sapping the vitality of the faith. Its philosophy is materialistic. Its evangel emphasizes man's ability to save himself. Its doctrine of sin is low. We believe the testimony of The Presbyterian of the South is true, and it is not a moment too soon that warning is given, for a great danger to the evangelical faith is even now preying upon the vitals of Christianity. Alas! That paper goes on to make its meaning plain by saying: "It may humble our pride to know that the spread of this noxious poison gas is due largely to the fault of the Church. Modernism discredits and rejects much of the Bible. It puts "the soft pedal" on the necessity of regeneration, and God's demand of repentance. It slurs over the deity of our Lord, and the stern requirement of Calvary. It is the business of the Church to teach the Word of God. Has the Church been doing it? If so, how happens it that most of the Bible is a sealed Book to most of the members of our churches? The average sermon is a fine essay on moral themes, but does it teach the Word? The average Sunday School lesson, so disconnected and "scrappy," leaves the average Sunday school scholar in utter confusion as to the fact that the Bible is one Book, with one theme. Many Christians, because they do not know any better, say: The Old Testament is out of date, and has no application to this age. They do not think of the Old Testament as a part of the Bible as much as the New. We have allowed this idea to prevail. We have thus opened the door for the doctrine of "A Progressive Revelation." Now beloved people, we have been trying for years to get our people to wake up along the line of this danger, but have found it hard to do, most likely, as The Presbyterian points out that the people know but little of the Bible, and the lack of such knowledge opens the way for a multitude of errors to creep into our work. Let us more and more teach the Bible—it is what the people need to know. Yes, let us teach the Bible in our pulpits as well as in our Sunday schools. One thing we believe we can count on that is during these years when the Church has left its doors open to all sorts of teaching, it did so because it was not awake to the dangers of modernism, but now that the Church is awakening, look out for the theological fur will fly, and our modernists will most likely find some one at the door of every church in the land who will the modern scholar and say to him: "Thus far, but no further." That is: "We do not henceforth allow our pulpit to be a place for speaking against the Bible. The time is passed for that sort of a thing in a Church of the Lord Jesus Christ." Amen to the thought! Men who do not believe the Bible the Word of God are not hereafter to be our teachers. Let it be so!

The person who is really in earnest, subscribes and pays for his Church paper. We are not so much concerned about the subscriber who is now taking THE SUN. It is the indifferent and the unconcerned that we are looking after. It is the non-subscriber that we want to interest, and we earnestly solicit the aid of our readers in this effort to put the paper in the home of every member of the Church.

Subject: "Mary, the Mother of Jesus."—Matthew 1:18-2:5; 12:46-50; Luke 1:26-56; 2:1-52; John 2:1-11; 19:25-27.

Golden Text: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for it is he that shall save his people from their sins.."—Matt. 1:21.

Devotional Reading: Luke 1:46-55.

A Survey of the Life of Mary, the Mother of Jesus.

Words seem inadequate to express the life of a mother. Her love, her sacrifice, her untiring devotion are beyond mere words. All of these qualities are found in the highest degree in the mother of our Lord. In other lessons, we have studied the birth of Jesus, His boyhood life, but in our study we have given no lesson to thinking definitely of the life of Mary, whom "all generations shall call blessed."

"If I were hanged on the highest hill,
I know whose love would follow me still,
Mother O' Mine."

When Phillips Brooks wrote these memorable lines, doubtless he saw the mother whose influence guided him to his life work. He remembered her tireless teaching. He still felt her spiritual touch upon his life. So if the whole story of many a great life were known, would a mother's patience and love be revealed. Mother devotion knows no limits. Obscure, unheralded and unknown perhaps, hers is the great influence which makes men wise and women good.

Mary first appears as a girl, humble and pure. Gabriel came to her with the greatest message ever born to woman, and she says simply: "Behold the handmaid of the Lord." Standing in divine presence, she could only wonder and believe. Her life must have been pure to have merited this divine favor, but she is only conscious of a joy that this blessing has come. There is no spirit of pride or arrogance to blot the picture.

With Elisabeth, Mary appears as one whose hope is doubly confirmed, and she pours out her soul in praise and adoration in the great Magnificat:

"For he that is mighty hath done to me great things and holy is his name."

Mary, the mother of the Bethlehem stable, is the subject of great artists and hymn writers. The Madonna of art pictures her character in her face. But even here, as her Son receives the adorations of the shepherds, who had heard the angels' song, Mary is led to wonder, to ponder over His coming, and the promises made by the angel of the annunciation.

Mary, the faithful mother, is portrayed in only a verse or two. But we know that her Son grew strong physically. She must have cared for Him. We know that He was filled with wisdom. She must have taught Him. We know that He became a favorite with both God and man, so that neither His spiritual nor His social nature were slighted.

Mary was faithful to the feasts and ceremonies of her church. The long journey was made to Jerusalem, when Jesus was twelve years old. They stayed through the entire celebration, and then the boy Jesus remained behind, talking with the learned doctors of the temple. When He was missed, the mother was concerned, and sought him sorrowing. When found, the rebuke called Him to remind her of His duty in His Father's house, but they did not fully understand, the mother kept pondering.

The mother of the babe, the mother of the boy, still has the mother heart for the man. At the marriage in Cana of Galilee, Mary expressed her confidence in this Son of hers, bidding the servants to do whatsoever he said. Her interest never left Him. Her love was always His. She was even at the cross in those dark hours, and Jesus remembered to entrust her to the care of the loving disciple, John. (John 19:26, 27). After His ascension, Mary met with the disciples in the upper room, where "all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication" (Acts 1:44), before Peter's great Pentecostal sermon.

Dr. Wells, in Peloubet's Notes, sums up her character thus: "The character of Mary is one of the sweetest and finest imaginable. She was humble, trusting, obedient, loving, self-sacrificing. In her study for three decades of the world's Redeemer and her long brooding over his deeds and words, in her knowledge of him and faith in him, she may well be called the first Christian. And in all this she is a lovely example for Christians to the end of time."

"And if our faith had given us nothing more
Than this example of all womanhood,
So mild, so merciful, so strong, so good,
So patient, peaceful, loyal, loving, pure,
This were enough to prove it higher and truer
Than all the creeds the world had known before." —Longfellow.

Mary, the virgin honored by God; Mary the loving mother; Mary the faithful follower. Surely here is a heroine worthy of a foremost place in the rank, not only of the earth's great, but of the earth's good.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

July 8, 1923.

Subject: "What Does Christian Brotherhood Mean?"—I John 3:10-24.
(A Peace Meeting)

Thoughts on the Topic.

Brotherhood is rooted in love, love for God, and love for fellowman. Without Christian love, Christian brotherhood is impossible. Verse 10.

"Love one another." Can one truly love God, without loving all His other children? Verse 11.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" was Cain's question to escape blame. "Am I not my brother's keeper?" is the Christian's question, and only one answer is expected or possible. Verse 12.

Love for others is a test of our Christian experience. "Jesus love" is big enough to reach to uttermost parts of the earth. How big is your love? Verse 14.

"For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten son." Can any one doubt such a love? He came and lived, and even died for us. How far are we willing to go for Him? Verse 16.

There are many appeals for our sympathy and help: the needy, the sick, the orphan, the sufferers of the Near East and other lands, and a score more. Large gifts may not be possible, but a loving heart finds some way to express love in a material way that will make life happier for the more unfortunate. Verse 17, 18.

Obedience to God's commands brings happiness and success. Living in harmony with His will, would make all men brothers in spirit, in deed and in truth." Verse 22.

"Large is the life that flows for others' sakes,
Expends its best, its noblest effort makes.
Devotion rounds the man and makes him noble;
Love is the measure of the human soul."

"Science has made the world very small. It remains for Christianity to make the world a true Christian brotherhood."

"The best Christian, the real and wholesome Christian, mingles with life as Jesus did, above it in holiness, yet a part of it in wholesomeness, feeling it his mission and the mission of the Christ he serves to lift the world to a better and higher life."—Wm. Pierson Merrill.

"Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul,
May keep the path, but will not reach the goal;
While he who walks in love may wander far,
Yet God will bring him where the blessed are."
—Henry Van Dyke.

Plans for the Meeting.

Christian Brotherhood depends upon friendliness. World peace begins in neighborhood peace and working together. Invite your neighbors to this meeting, and discuss how your community can be more Christian. This may even be a meeting with another nearby Christian Enedavor Society, with special features for a vacation meeting.

Try a Bible Verse-Finding Contest, asking the first to find each verse to stand and read it clearly to the society. The following verses fit in with this subject: John 15:12; Romans 1:12; Acts 2:1; John 17:21; Romans 15:5, 6; Matthew 26:15; Acts 20:35; Galatians 6:2; Ephesians 5:2; Philippians 2:1; Hebrews 10:24; I John 4:7; Colossians 2:2; John 3:16; I Peter 4:8; Luke 10:27.

The spirit of Christian brotherhood is exemplified in the parable of the Good Samaritan. It would be an interesting feature for this meeting to have this parable dramatized by some of your Junior or Intermediate boys and girls

In his latest volume "Under Twenty" Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of Broadway Tabernacle, New York, gives a talk on "Preparedness," much of which fits in with this topic. Especially the following paragraph, which may be used as a reading for the meeting, or the basis for a five minute talk:

"Be ready to meet your fellow human beings on the high and broad plain of humanity. It is sometimes said that every human being is a possible foe. This is true, but it is just as true that every human being is a possible friend, and it is this second fact upon which you are to build your life. Assume that everybody is friendly to you, until somebody by his action demonstrates that he is your foe. The unhappiest people in this world are the people who are suspicious. They start out with the wrong idea, and starting wrong, they go farther and farther astray. There are men and women who always imagine that others do not like them, or that they are talking about them, or that they are trying to slight them, or insult them, or that they are doing something underhanded against them. Pity such people for they are truly wretched.

"Always assume that everybody is your friend. Be ready always to give a friendly greeting to everybody. James Russell Lowell never wrote anything truer than this:

"Be noble! and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own."

"Down deep in the heart of our enemy, there is something which will respond to a friendly appeal if we only have grace enough to make it. We are the child of God, and our alleged enemy is also the child of God, and therefore we and he are brothers, and this being so, we must go out to meet him as sa brother. Be ready at all times to say "Brother," and to extend a fraternal greeting."

Suggested Hymns: "Fling Out the Banner"; "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations"; "Onward Christian Soldiers"; "Wonderful Peace"; "Jesus Shall Reign"; "Blest Be the Tie that Binds".

"Who counts his brother's welfare
As sacred as his own
And loves, forgives and pities,—
He serveth Christ alone."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

Bethel Church, North Carolina Conference, near New Hill, N. C., is the next church to decide to hold a Daily Vacation Bible School this summer. Who will be next?

A Young People's Missionary Society was organized at the Shallow Well Christian Church, North Carolina Conference, recently. Miss Lela Brannon is the Secretary-Treasurer. The Society meets monthly on the third Sunday.

Through the kindness of the editor, the "Christian Sun" for July 12th will be a speciail Chautauqua Number" with articles concerning the Chautauqua and its place in the life of the church, with special reference to the 1923 session, and cuts of some leaders.

Miss Pattie Coghill of Henderson, is planning a recreational program for the Chautauqua and School of Methods which promises a good social time for those who enjoy outdoor life. "Elon Night" on Saturday night, August 4th is under direct charge of Rev. W. T. Scott, and will be a night which no one should miss.

"Win One" (See Proverbs 11:30) is the theme around which the program of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will be built. This gathering will be held at Catawba Springs July 10th, 11th and 12th. President Stephenson visited this church on June 3rd, and found splendid interest in the Convention among the folks who are to entertain the delegates and visitors this year.

Rev. Thomas E. Beaman, of Goldsboro, North Carolina, State Secretary of the Free Will Baptist Sunday School Board has consented to deliver an address at the Chautauqua and School of Methods, on Friday morning, August 3rd. Mr. Beaman is one of the leaders in the Free Will Baptist Church, and is intensely interested in the Chautauqua and in getting a number of the young people from his church to attend.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Franklin, Virginia, who will conduct the morning worship periods at the Chautauqua at Elon, July 30th to August 5th, has announced the following subjects for the five mornings: 1. The Living Church; 2. The Working Church; 3. The Power of the Church; 4. The Vision of the Church; 5. The Hope of the Church. Dr. Rowland will also preach Sunday morning, August 5th.

Beginning with next quarter, the Franklin Sunday School will have a separate Junior department in its school. The school has long had a separate Beginners-Primary Department, which just now is proud of a new piano for the children's work there, and this new Junior Department is another step to which the progressive workers there have been looking forward to, and one which will make possible a more effective work for the Junior boys and girls.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, sang a special song at the Valley Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, to tune "Auld Lang Syne", the words being these:

"Report, Report,
Report, Report,
Report, Report, Report,
Report, Report,
Report, Report,
Report, Report, Report!"

As the secretaries of the North Carolina and Eastern Virginia Conventions are endeavoring to secure a report from every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society before the meeting of their Conventions, the sentiment of this song is very timely. It is important that these reports come in, and the co-operation of superintendents and secretaries will make easier the work of the Convention secretary, and more effective the work of the Convention.

NOTICE.

The North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet in its fifth annual session, at Catawba Springs Church (located about ten miles south of Raleigh and two miles west of McCullers), July 10, 11, 12. The program promises to be a good one, and every pastor and superintendent should plan now to be there and see to it that his school is represented by a full and progressive delegation. Our slogan for this convention is "Just as enthusiastic, and twice as big, as last year." Will you help us put it across? Let us boost it every Sunday from now until it becomes history, and it would not be amiss to talk it during the week. Try it; it will do you good.

The good people at Catawba Springs are getting ready for the convention with a vim and earnestness that means you will be provided for in such a manner that you will never regret the little sacrifice that you may have to make to be there. The long and short of it is, we are doing our very best to make the Convention "our biggest and best," and we are depending on you to be there when the thing opens and stay until the very last session. Will you disappoint us? I hope not. If you have not already done so, elect your delegates next Sunday. Fill out your report blank and mail it to Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1912 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., so she may have it tabulated and ready when the Convention opens. This is your Convention—will you honor or dishonor it? Sing it—talk it—whistle it—and meet me and mine at Catawba July 10, 11, 12, 1923. Thanks.

C. H. Stephenson,
President.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory)-
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Christian Orphanage

MANY INTERESTING ITEMS.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

Our good friend Mr. Erwin A. Holt of Burlington knows how to make the children happy. The Swarthmore Chautauqua gave a week's entertainment at Burlington and Mr. Holt gave the Orphanage children ten tickets. Two good friends donated the use of their machines to carry the children to Burlington and we let ten go at a time and all the larger children got to go several times each. The manager of the Chautauqua, Mr. Broadman, gave all the little tots a special invitation to attend the childrens Pagent given on Saturday afternoon, titled "The old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe." We carried thirty eight of the little folks and they enjoyed the program very much. The larger children are very grateful to Mr. Holt for making it possible for them to attend these concerts and all of them look upon Mr. Holt as a very kind friend and one who remembers those who are helpless and makes it possible for them to have a little of life's joys.

The little tots are very much indebted to Mr. Broadman for giving them a special invitation to attend on Saturday afternoon. We are grateful indeed to both Mr. Holt and Mr. Broadman for their kindness to the children.

We received a letter this week from Holland-Beamon Co. of Suffolk, Va., stating that they had shipped to the Christian Orphanage a car of coal to keep the children warm and comfortable during the winter months. We are very grateful to Holland-Beamon Co. for this liberal contribution and pray that God will richly bless them.

We have received several letters recently stating that some special one had been designated in their Sunday School to make a ten or fifteen minute talk in behalf of the Christian Orphanage on the day the special monthly offering is taken. This is a fine idea and I certainly expect great results from this new and increased interest. If someone would make a ten or fifteen minute talk in behalf of the Orphanage on the Sunday when the special offering is taken you would see a wonderful increase in Sunday Schools that adopt this idea and I will be glad to furnish the speakers any information in regard to the orphanage that I have so they can acquaint themselves with the facts. I would be delighted to hear from someone from each church.

The following has been sent in since our last report.

C., 5 sheets; Women's Missionary Society, Pleasant Hill (A), 5 sheets; Willing Workers Class, Mrs. Susie Alexander, treas., Columbus, Ohio, 11 dresses, 1 blouse; Ladies Aid Society, Sidney Christian church, Sidney, Ind., 1 quilt, 1 dress, 1 pr. pillow cases; Missionary Society, First Christian church, Coshocton, Ohio, 16 dresses, 2 pr. pants, 2 boy blouses, 1 little suit, 1 princess slip.

SAM DAVIS AT DENDRON, VA.

Sam Davis, of Norfolk, Va., the well-known pianist, entertained the people of Dendron, Va., recently with some of his choice selections. Mr. Davis is well-known throughout Eastern Virginia, and when once your Church puts on a program in which Mr. Davis plays his accustomed part, you are made more anxious to have him again. The Dendron Church has put on no program for several years that drew more people than the coming of Sam Davis. And since Mr. Davis is a member of the Christian Church, we take pleasure in saying that no Church would make a mistake by arranging a date with Mr. Davis and have him put on a program. Too, we feel that our Churches should use Mr. Davis in their revival services. The excellent manner in which he conducts the music for your revival service will add no little to the success of your meeting.

AYSCUE.

On the morning of June 7th, Brother Benjamin Franklin Ayscue, who was nearing his eighty-first year, died. He was a soldier in the Civil War for four years, and a soldier of the cross from early life until the day of his death. He was ordained a deacon of Liberty Church fifty-two years ago by Dr. J. W. Wellons.

On November 14, 1866, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Ayscue; to them was given four children—two boys and two girls. Ollie W. and Miss Margelia have never married, but have lived in the home with their parents. Tollie F. and Miss Ludie (Now Mrs. Stainback) married and settled nearby. Brother Ayscue is survived by his wife, four children, several grandchildren, three brothers, and one sister.

Brother Ayscue was truly a good man. He experienced the blessings of a peacemaker. He was loved and respected as a Christian by all who knew him, but most by those who knew his every-day life best. We shall miss him so much, but Heaven is richer, and many more will reach her portals because he has lived.

A large crowd attended the funeral services held at Liberty, the Church that had been blessed by his life of service. Brother Chas. E. Newman had been engaged by Brother Ayscue for many years and was present for the funeral service. Rev. G. J. Green, a former pastor, and the present pastor assisted him.

AN APPEAL

To the Churches of My Charge at Franklinton, Mt. Auburn, and Pope's Chapel:

Beloved,—The president of Elon College has sounded a bugle call. In behalf of our colleges—Elon and Bethlehem—he wants to know (1) when we will celebrate "College Day"; (2) How many copies of the "College Day Bulletin" you want sent you; (3) Will you pray for Elon and Bethlehem and boost the offering? Our colleges are struggling with the problems of existence. Calls for money and students are numerous and urgent. I trust the deacons will arrange a "College Day" as soon as possible. Every one who is loyally interested, write Dr. Harper for a bulletin immediately—let us rally to the support of Elon and Bethlehem today.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE REBUILDING PROGRAM AT ELON.

AS SEEN FROM THE ARCHITECT'S VIEW POINT.

By Herbert B. Hunter, Architect.

There enters into the selection of a type of architecture for a building or a group of buildings intended for use as a college certain important consideration. First, the location would govern the type to a certain extent in the matter of climate and available materials. Secondly, the character of the building or buildings in place necessarily has to be considered in order to avoid too great a contrast between the new and present work. Also the matter of economy has to be dealt with. The architect, in making his preliminary studies for the college, gave all of these questions the study they warranted, and as a result submitted the colonial period of design, which was accepted by the college.

The colonial period of design, in a great measure, suggests the character of the institution itself, since its simple, yet beautiful, lines are in keeping with the sturdy principles which have made Elon what it is. Colonial architecture at once suggests to the mind the untiring fortitude and determination which was evident in the founders of this institution as well as in those who founded this great nation of ours. It is, therefore, altogether fitting that this period of design, which is distinctly American in its origin, as well as its use, should be adopted by Elon College, an institution which stands for the principles cherished by our forefathers, who created not only the type of design, but the ideals and precepts which are being instilled into the youth of America at Elon College today.

FROM THE STANDPOINT OF THE GENERAL CONTRACTOR.

By J. W. Stout.

One of the best standards by which to measure a community, town, or city is by its buildings; a community with beautiful homes and large, commodious, and attractive business buildings will always attract the attention of the man or woman in search of a place to live or a place to transact business. Therefore, if the buildings of a town or a community are a good standard by which to measure it, they might be used as a good standard by which to measure a college or an institution of any kind.

Elon College has launched out on a great building program, which, when completed, will place it well in the front ranks with any of the colleges of our State. Its buildings are all to be of fireproof construction, well designed for economy and service, as well as for strength and beauty. They are to have brick exterior walls with stone trim, concrete floor slabs, metal partitions, steel trusses for roof construction, and slate roofing, and all to be steam-heated and electrically lighted, and are to have all of the most modern improvements in mechanical equipment.

These buildings will place Elon in position to render much better service than it has in the past. It, perhaps, has not been able to render as full and complete service on account of having inadequate building facilities as it would have otherwise. These buildings will surely attract to Elon a majority of the boys and girls from the Christian Church and many from elsewhere. It will also attract the attention of the people as a whole from this and other States; but the greatest of all benefits, it seems to me, will be due to the fact that our new college will attract the attention of our own people to their own beloved college.

I think this building program is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, step our Church has ever taken, and it is my hope and belief that we will get acquainted with ourselves soon and learn that we are a great Church with a great college, doing a great work with a great president and faculty, and with a great future before us. If a college is to be measured by the standards of its buildings and its president and faculty, Elon is destined to be recognized as one of the very best colleges in this great Commonwealth of ours.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Special Notice.

After Saturday, July 7th, let all letters intended for the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN be addressed to him at Elon College, N. C. Do not forget now and continue sending your letters to Henderson, as we are to move to Elon College about July 10th.

A recent writer says: "Primarily, the lack of religion is at the bottom of all our ills." If that is true, and we do not doubt it, it is high time we were getting religion into every heart and life.

Rev. T. E. White has done a good work this year in his new field at and near Windsor, Va. We understand that the field has called him again. That is a real testimony to their appreciation of his labors.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, now of Fancy Gap, Va., will retire from that work about the middle of July, and will devote much of his time till Conference to evangelistic work among the Churches; but he will be open to engagement to serve as pastor after that time.

With four or five new buildings going up on the Elon campus, and the looking for four hundred students for the new session in September, Dr. Harper has his hands full, and he is about as busy as a bee. Lend him a helping hand in every way you can.

Are you making preparation for the Elon Chautauqua? It begins July 30th and runs to August 5th. The management is seeking to make it the most helpful occasion of this sort which has been given, but they need the co-operation of our people, both the ministers and the Church people.

We understand that Rev. W. B. Fuller, Ivor, Va., is open to engagement for another Conference year. We wish that some of the needy fields may use him as pastor. He is quite a young man and full of vigor. Give him a consideration in making your selection for another year.

What has become of Rev. W. H. Garman, pastor of our Lambert's Point Church? We hear of him occasionally, and the reports are favorable, but we hear nothing directly from him. Brother Garman must try to get over his excessive modesty and let his brethren know what is going on in his field.

Elon, sphinx-like, is rising from her ashes and pressing on to a bigger and a better Elon. Let us lend a hand so far as we can, for Elon needs any help any of us can give her. As we understand it, the following buildings are in course of construction: "The Alamance" (the administration building), "The Science Hall," "The Whitley Memorial Building," "The Carlton Memorial Building," "The Library Building." That looks like five buildings going up at once. Well, whether four or five, it is a fine piece of constructive work, and they are saying now that they will have two of these buildings ready for the opening of the next term, early in September.

When the whiskey business was outlawed, we naturally thought the worst of it was over, but, in fact, the fight was but just beginning, and now, three years after the Constitution of the United States forbade the manufacture, sale and use of liquor, the fight is worse than ever. President Harding, in the face of this situation, declares that prohibition has come to stay, and we believe he is right. It ought to stay, if we may so decide, basing our judgment on what prohibition has accomplished so far. It is the greatest moral victory this country has ever gained. We believe it is about time to take from men their liberty, if they persist in fighting the Constitution of the United States. Why not? Such men are evidently enemies of our country.

One says: "Our sin is not in being rich, but in not being rich enough. We have not realized on the potentialities of the earth God has given us." Yes, that is true, we believe, and along with this thought ought to go another which is close of kin. Many of us are poor because we have not been willing to divide our profits with God and His work. We seek to keep it all for ourselves. Why did the wise man assert that there is "that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." "The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." That is the truth. Withholding by hoarding up tends to poverty and we believe that is the explanation of much of the poverty in the world. Think it over and decide just what you will do about it. If you like the suffering of poverty, go on your way doing as you please, but do not forget what it means.

The fifth Annual Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Christian Conference, is announced to assemble at Catawba Springs Christian Church, July 10, 11, and 12. Catawba Springs Church is near McCullers, N. C., a few miles out from Raleigh. All who are going to attend this Convention and want entertainment are requested to write at once to Rev. J. E. Franks, Route 2, Cary, N. C. Delegates so giving notice will be met either at Raleigh or McCullers. Bro. C. H. Stephenson, who is the president of the Convention, says Catawba Springs Church is making great preparation for taking care of this Convention, and he wishes every school to be represented. Do not forget the Convention and so fail to go, for the people will look for you and be disappointed if there is not a large attendance. Let us give them all they want—Church and homes full of people and the heads and hearts full in providing for them.

Are we forgetting to sing? Or have we forgotten how to sing? It may be that we do not sing with the spirit and with the understanding, as Paul said we should. At any rate, there seems to be something wrong with our singing, at least in many places. Here is what a recent writer has to say as to singing: "Are we to become a songless people? It is often remarked, 'Congregational singing isn't what it was.' It isn't. It has slipped badly. What is the trouble? Sometimes we charge it to the organ, the choir, but that is not the root cause. For you may hear just as poor congregational singing in choirless Churches. The real reason is that singing is becoming a lost art. We all hear great singers nowadays, if not at first hand, then by way of the phonograph and familiarly with their dazzling excellences shames our own mediocrities and we do not try to sing at all. In my own boyhood days, every young lady was supposed to take piano lessons and "vocal." Now, our girls are "going in" for other things. There is less of singing in the home than there used to be; the phonograph has put an end to that. And if the phonograph hasn't altogether succeeded, the radio threatens to complete the job. If things go on as now, we shall soon have to praise the Lord by signs."

Is it wise or unwise, is it scriptural or unscriptural to have our preachers to advertise the subjects on which they will preach on Sunday? There is a wide difference of opinion among the people. It may be that if the preacher, or whoever has the writing of the advertisements, if gifted in presenting the subject in an attractive way, some good might be accomplished, but really, if the advertisement is poorly prepared, it is worse than no advertisement at all. We have seen a good many announcements that would have tended to keep us away from the service advertised on the ground that if the sermon were as poor as the advertisement, we should think it possible to go somewhere else and get a better spiritual feast. A recent writer gives us his view of the matter, as follows: "From every side, the preachers and the Churches are exhorted to cultivate the daily newspapers and seek the utilization of all publicity agencies. It looks all right. But I've been thinking back over more than a quarter century of the life of Kansas City, and judged by results, newspaper publicity doesn't seem to count for much. For the men who from our-of-town pulpits have preached to large audiences are not the men who have largely figured in press notices. Churches that in former years contented themselves with modest notices are now taking display ads of generous proportions. Maybe it's wisdom. And maybe it isn't. Personally, the Catholic Churches, with no such competitive exhibition of their wares, are more to my liking in this regard."

On Thursday, June 21, 1923, Deacon J. F. Coghill, of Fullers Church, Vance County, N. C., celebrated his eighty-first birthday, and the occasion was one of unusual interest. His sons gave him a big barbecue, in which three pigs were roasted, and besides a big dinner was spread. Relatives from Washington, Virginia, Georgia, and how many other States and sections we cannot tell, but let it suffice to say a big crowd gathered and spent the time socially till dinner was announced. Then Deacon Coghill was introduced by one of his sons, and before we went to the table the deacon made a few remarks of a very pleasant and touching character. He looked on the crowd somewhat intently, and then said: "I am proud of my kinspeople; they are a good-looking crowd, and I welcome you here today; glad to see you once more in this life. Make yourselves at home after our brother, Dr. Barrett, has asked a blessing, and help yourselves to the good things which my boys and neighbors have prepared for you." Then a blessing was asked, and the table was relieved in part of its burden. Deacon Coghill has long been a most useful man in the Church and community. The occasion was one not likely to be forgotten soon. Many of the kinspeople, in the afternoon, bade the venerable man good-by and went to their homes. Deacon Coghill is very feeble, but kept up through the day and greatly enjoyed the visits and good wishes of his kinspeople. The students of Elon College will better know who Deacon Coghill is if I tell them he is the grandfather of Miss Pattie Coghill, who graduated from Elon last May. To this venerable man and his loved ones, I feel sure showers of love was poured out on this his eighty-first birthday, with many good wishes that he may be spared yet to see many other such days. God bless the venerable man and his hosts of relatives and friends. Just as we closed these exercises, Mr. T. W. Pittman, a lawyer, of Henderson, N. C., and, if we mistake not, a Baptist deacon, made a few remarks fitting to the closing of the occasion. It was a day of good-fellowship and a real family reunion.

WHAT REFORMS ARE MOST NEEDED IN OUR NATION TODAY?

To tell what reforms are most needed in our nation today, we must first tell what reforms the Church needs most. The Church makes the nation, so we must reform the Church if we would reform the nation.

There is too much pride in the Church. We all know that "pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." Knowing that we should endeavor to keep our hearts free from pride. Yet, there are some who are so filled with pride that when they come to the Church, that they come not to worship, but to criticise those who are doing all they can for the Master's cause. They are filled with pride, and they scorn people that are not as proud and haughty as they are. They think they are so much better than their friends that they cannot speak to them when they meet them at the Church and other places, unless it is a word of scorn. We are taught that, "in Heaven we all shall be equal." I would like to know what these who are so proud they can't speak to their inferior friends, are going to do when they all get to Heaven! The nation would be better if the hearts of the people were filled with lovingkindness instead of pride.

There is lack of interest in the Church. It is the duty of every one to do all he or she can to support the Church. Yet, there are some, even some who are members of the Church, who seem to feel that all they need to do is to aid in the financial support of the Church. But far more than this is needed. They should attend all the services of the Church. They should take an active part in the work of the Church. They should use their best efforts to bring others to the services and into the membership of the Church. It would be well for us to ask ourselves, "What kind of a Church would ours be if every one in it were just like me"?

We must do all we can toward the upbuilding of our Church, for the Church adds to the safety of life and property. It makes men honest and law abiding. It elevates the character of the people. It helps to forward everything that is good and to overcome all that is evil. How many respectable people would continue to reside in the community if all the Churches were taken away? Still, some are not doing anything to keep the Church alive. If we would have the Church in our community, we must be up and doing, or we will wake up and find that we have deserted the Church, and our Church will be no more.

Men like Martin Luther are needed in this nation of ours. When he was toiling at his version of the Bible, he imagined that he saw the devil, and promptly hurled his inkstand at the arch-enemy. The incident is highly suggestive of the attack he made upon "the devil and all his works" when he translated the Holy Scriptures into the vernacular of the common people.

This nation needs, more than anything else, a nation-wide revival of old-time religion. The religion that accepts the teachings of the Bible as divine; a religion that makes the employer honest in dealing with his employees, and the employee honest in dealing with his employer; a religion that makes every adherent of it through and through honest and honorable in every transaction and in every relation of life; a religion which uplifts, which makes men realize that in the literal fulfilling of the teaching of the Golden Rule there is safety, and nowhere is there safety for business or for society without religion.

The world is in turmoil, partly economic, but largely through the failure of religion to function fully in the hearts and lives of those who profess it. And only through a nation-wide and world-wide revival of the religion of the cross can the world be saved from chaos.

There is lack of training in our nation. America is full of half-trained leaders because students have stopped school too soon. A little education is all they want; a little smattering of books, and then they are ready for business. Half-trained medical students are performing bunglesome operations because of their haste to begin. Half-trained lawyers stumble through their cases, and preachers bungle away in the pulpit, when they should be preparing to do better work. We all cannot be leaders, but surely God has something for every one of his followers to do, so we should strive to obtain all the knowledge that is possible for us to obtain.

Reading books that are not wholesome is ruining this nation as much as any other one thing we can do. There is no surer road downward than the putting of bad and unclean books into the hands of children and young people. The opposite is true also—there is no surer road for children leading upward to a noble Christian life than to have their hearts and minds filled regularly with good and wholesome literature. This being true, why don't parents who love their children and desire their highest good, be on the lookout to see that their children are supplied with the very best of books? Unless parents are careful, their children's minds, before they know it, are thoroughly poisoned with the literary trash which, through their carelessness, they have permitted to come into their home, to the moral downfall of the child. Dear parents, let this great mistake go on no longer. Put good and wholesome books before your children to read, for many, many girls and boys are drifting far from God by reading books that are not wholesome.

One other thing that is leading this nation to destruction is the moving-picture business. Not many of the people know the real character of the motion-picture business, and consequently they are doing almost nothing to save the cause of Christ from the evil work of these unholy pictures. You know pictures reach the brain and make a lodging-place there for themselves more readily even than did the whiskey business. The Church isn't at all awake on the question. Hundreds of Church members not only attend, but defend them with a courage that is worthy of a better cause.

The battle is on, and it is on against a trust as greedy and unscrupulous as was the liquor traffic that would override constitutions and sneer at law, ruin homes and damn souls for the money that was in it. There is no matter that threatens the morals of the coming generation more than uncensored movies. As Christian people and patriotic folks who love home and State, we cannot afford to surrender to these Jewish and Romist money-lovers, who have no interest in the boys and girls beyond the coin they can wrest from them. As a matter of fact, our nation must be awakened to the dangers which are now confronting us in this great battle against the moving-picture business, and the quicker the Church gets on its fighting armor, the better it will be for both the Church and the nation.

Let us put on our fighting armor, like the great reformers of old, and help reform this nation of ours!

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

All delegates and visitors who are expecting to attend the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention at Mt. Carmel Church, July 17th and 18th, and wish entertainment on Tuesday night, July 17th, will please notify Otis V. Joyner, Walters, Va., so that homes can be provided.

WILL YOU?

The coming Chautauqua to be held at Elon College July 30th to Aug. 5th, should have the careful and prayerful consideration of every man woman and child in the Christian Church that really wants to see the work of the denomination go forward. If you are called on to take any part in making this occasion a success, for mercy sake do not say, I can't and ease your poor conscience by making some flimsy excuse that would not pass muster before a tribunal of sluggards or hypocrits.

This Chautauqua is under the direction and management of the Board of Religious Education —a body of people that receive not a single penny for their services, but who are doing every thing they can to put the denomination in the front ranks in every way. Miss Lucy M. Eldredge is the field secretary of the Board, and is working for less than she can command in other fields. Why? If you love the kingdom and its cause, if you love your denomination, if you are a loyal brother or sister, and can possibly do so— I say attend the Chautauqua— and enter the department of study that appeals to you most. Spend your vacation learning truths that are worth while and that will be of service to you in your future life. Meet us at Elon—and be convinced of the worth-while-ness of this institution, and for any information that you may want relative to the Chautauqua, write Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1012 East Marshall St., Richmond, Va. Make your reservations early, as it will be impossible to entertain more than one thousand at this session.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

This year's Convention will meet at Mt. Carmel Church, Walters, Va., the 17th and 18th of July. All member schools and societies are urged to elect and send delegates. All superintendents, presidents and pastors are urged to attend. The program is being arranged particularly for delegates and officials.

The Convention has an official membership of over 200. In 1920, the attendance was 112; in 1921, 103; in 1922, 77. Let us get off the toboggan, and onto the derrick. Let us make this year's attendance representative of the interest we have in Christian education in the Eastern Virginia Conference.

JAMES H. LIGHTBOURNE,
Executive Secretary.

NOTICE.

Bro. W. A. Newman, Henderson, N. Elisha Bradshaw does not come to serve the Church as was expected at one time.

WHAT WOULD OUR FATHERS SAY OF OUR PROGRESS?

We are far from satisfied with the progress we are making in the work of the Lord as a people. While this is literally true, it is also true that we have, along some lines, made such astonishing success in our work as would greatly please our fathers if they could rise and stand in our midst and see just what the Christian Church is doing. We confess, with humiliation, that if we should be judged as to progress along strictly spiritual lines, we might have to hang the head in shame because we have done so little, but if we be judged as to the material prosperity of the Christian Church, then would their surprise be very great.

We trust it is not a vain thing on our part to think that our progress is a wonder, or that it would be a wonder if the early heroes of the Christian Church could arise and stand with us as we take a survey of the field of our activities and the growth which has come to us in recent years. Having taken observations of the work and growth of the Christian Church for fifty years, we feel not entirely unprepared to give some evidence of the growth of our work. While we feel cheered by the thought of the growth and development of the cause for which we labor and which we love, we still feel a degree of regret that the same has not been much larger and richer.

When we began to take notice of the Christian Church and its work fifty years ago, we had no school except at Graham, N. C. We had no publishing house, except a small office at Suffolk, Va. We had no mission work either at home or abroad in the South. We had almost no city churches, and very few educated ministers. It is a thousand wonders that the best men we had did not get discouraged and give up the ship, but they did not—they held on and kept at work. Many of these men were heroic in character and greatly devoted to the cause they had espoused, and yet they had almost nothing as a foundation on which to stand and fight their battles.

It is just about fifty years ago since the lamented and greatly loved William B. Wellons, with his eyes and heart set on enlargement for the cause, undertook to establish the Suffolk Collegiate Institute as a means of educating our people for better and larger work in the Christian Church. That was the beginning of the days of our prosperity as a people. The growth has been slow, but with the passing of the years it has become phenomenal, and the outlook today from the material side is inspiring. Perhaps the most thrifty section of our work at this time is that which centers about Elon College and the going up of its new buildings. Suppose we could assemble such men as Rev. William B. Wellons, D. D., John N. Manning, E. W. Beale, Mills B. Barrett, Alfred Iseley, Thos. J. Fowler, Solomon Apple, Alfred Apple, John W. Hatch, H. B. Hayes, P. S. P. Corbin, Nathaniel P. Tatem, and many others, too numerous to mention, at Elon College and have them look upon the present activities there. No doubt, they would ask where they were and what was the meaning of the work going on there on the several buildings. Suppose that Dr. Harper should be standing by and he should begin to tell of what it all meant—that Elon College had been established there since their days; that last January the main building was burned, and that its loss so stirred our people that men had been induced to give as never before in our history; that we have givers ranging from $5,000 to $25,000, and then two others had given $50,000 each for the erection of new buildings; that there are now four buildings, viz: the Alamance (the administration) building, the Whitley memorial building, the science hall, and the library building; that these were going up, and the prospect is that we should be able to pay for them promptly; and then, looking around at the buildings which were not destroyed by fire, they should be told this is all the property of the Christian Church, and that we have had from 300 to 400 students there year after year for many years, and that now, with the completion of these new buildings, we will be prepared to greatly enlarge the attendance, and that, all in all, what they see is not a mere vision of fancy, but a living, working reality, and that the Church they had labored so hard to establish and the work they had so bravely done, with great sacrifices, was now on the crest of the hill of success—do you not think that there would be great rejoicing and giving of praise to God for it all? Do you not think that the old Elon campus would ring with the shouts of joy over what has come to their work since they laid down their burdens and went home to glory and to God? I feel like we might hear from them a call to our Churches to arise and give this great enterprise the most enthusiastic financial and moral support it may be possible for us to give. We think they would say, "Do not allow anything to stand between you and such success as may now seem to be perching on our banners." Let every member do his or her part, that great things may come to pass in furthering the cause of the Christ among the peoples of the earth.

Our task is not that of giving ourselves to the establishment of a big Church organization. We have a much higher end than that, though even that is not a small end, for the larger the organization, if properly directed and trained, the greater thing may we bring to pass in the establishment of the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Our aim is to contribute something to the aims and purposes of the kingdom. The more fully we give ourselves to this end, the larger will be the ends reached in the salvation of the world. Elon College, under the blessings of God, may enable us to go on to the larger responsibilities and the greater opportunities in the noble mission of our Church, and we are persuaded that this end will be in perfect harmony with the wishes not only of our people, but the same will continue to bring joy and rejoicing to the dear men and women who went before us in the effort to bring the Church to its highest usefulness in the vineyard of the Lord.

"College Day" in the Churches of the denomination is designed not only to get the people better acquainted with our educational work, but also to interest every one in our ranks to seek to have a part in the development of this magnificent enterprise and to have a share in the fruitage of the same. To do this, we should ever be seeking to get each member of the Church to shoulder a part of the burden and so come to his or her best in the upbuilding of the work of the Lord in our day and generation.

ARE WE AWAKE TO THE DANGERS ABOUT US?

Again and again we are half-way reproached by some of our good brethren because, as a religious journalist, we refuse to shut our eyes to impending dangers. They intimate that we ought to keep silent as to these dangers, and so have the people of God feel that all is well. Doubtless, they mean well, but are they correct in their wishes?

Let us see how this argument would work in another line of activity. Suppose a thousand people are embarking on the Titanic for a trip across the sea. They put out to sea. The magnificent ship is sailing grandly over the rolling billows and the foaming white caps. The watchman is calling out now and then, "Nine o'clock, and all is well." Presently he says, "Ten o'clock, and all is well," and then an hour later he calls out "Eleven o'clock, and all is well." Now, suppose it becomes known that, as an experienced seaman, he knew when he called out, "Nine o'clock, and all is well," that even then he had cause to believe that the great ship was approaching icebergs, and so on each hour he was becoming more sure that they were in close proximity to perils of a serious character, but all the while he was calling out, "Nine," "Ten" and "Eleven" o'clock, and "all is well," would you think this watchman was doing his duty? It may be that he would justify his course by saying that there were nervous people on board and he was afraid to excite them, but would that justify such deception? Would that at all be a satisfactory reason for declaring "all is well" when he knew that they were facing gravest perils? Had he let it be known earlier that the ship was approaching an iceberg, the ship might have taken a different course and escaped danger and have saved the lives of its passengers.

There are few men, if any, who would justify silence on the part of the watchman, when he knew danger was nigh and coming nigher every minute. Well, what of the editor of a religious paper who, from his position, gets the news that dangers are near and that these dangers may be very disastrous to the cause we love and for which we labor—ought he to shut his mouth and keep silent and let the danger come upon the people unawares? We think not. He ought to speak out in meeting, and let the people know the true situation. By the grace of God, we do not mean to allow our people to be engulfed in any such perilous situation—it must not be—without giving them warning.

Under the heading of "Aggressive Atheism," that very excellent paper, the Christian-Evangelist, of St. Louis, Mo., as we think, very wisely sounds an alarm, and if the Church of the Living Christ will meet the situation, we do not think the people can be too clearly and surely informed of the facts in the case, for if the Church does not, in some way, prepare to meet the issue and drive back the black tide, presently it will be too late, and we shall face a situation not to be desired. The editor of the Christian-Evangelist presents the danger as follows, and we commend what he says to our brotherhood, that we may act betimes and save our young people from the horrors of the black night of awful danger which now seems to be approaching us. He says:

Not for a long time have we read anything more startling or more challenging than an article entitled "Tide of Atheism Engulfing German youth," which appeared in the June number of Current History. S. Miles Bouton is the author. He was the correspondent of the Associated Press in Europe, 1911-1919. He published a history of the German Revolution under the title "And the Kaiser Abdicates." Mr. Bouton is now in Germany studying conditions first hand. We recite this information to show that the amazing revelations of the article mentioned above are not the report of the flying tourists, nor the alarmed cries of a startled amateur in observing, weighing and reporting the movements and forces influencing a confused and desperate notion.

Mr. Bouton reports in substance that the Socialist campaign against religion in Germany is at present centered on the plastic mind of youth and that, through pernicious propaganda and drastic legislation for schools, the Church is losing members by the thousands. The mere fact of a big leakage in Church membership is enough to give the thoughtful concern, but if it were only a quarrel with the Church it might be like the quarrel of a boy with his mother—it would soon end, and the people would return. This falling away is from a much deeper and more serious cause. It is real atheism and vicious atheism at that. The Socialists have stolen much in the way of methods from the Church. Among other things is a confirmation service. After this service, a book entitled "Ins Leben Hinein" (Entering Upon Life) is given to the boy or girl. The book is pronounced "a dangerous mixture of good and bad," but one article is considered so obscene that, says Mr. Bouton, "I cannot describe it in any publication intended for English-speaking people." The book quotes Heine's line, "We'll leave heaven to the angels and the sparrows." A school boy, speaking on behalf of his fellows, said: "This is our creed: we know no Father in heaven." Another one wrote: "This Church business is all nonsense. There isn't any God." "Sexual morals are lax. * * * A big part of the country's youth insists—and successfully—on its alleged right to taste all the joys of life—"sich ausleben" (to live one's life out) in the German phrase. We have heard that phrase in this country. Let us know now that it is part of the creed of atheistic socialism. There is much more of the same kind reported in this article. It shows us what a black world atheism can make, and it shows us the roads by which a whole people may be led into it. Not that all the Germans have adopted this vicious and obscene creed. Two-thirds of them are still free, and there's the hope!

We should be concerned about how this state of things was produced. As nearly as we can gather, it flows from two sources—the materialism, which has made science "the procuress of hell"—to use Tennyson's tremendous phrase—by giving power and position without God and the socialism which wants no heaven but physical pleasure. The instruments these ideas used were militarism, which brought on the World War (we must avoid militarism if we wish to escape atheism) and science which does not recognize God. The special point of attack at present is the public school. To corrupt that is to corrupt life at its source. "The head of the Berlin school, Herr Lowenstein, born an orthodox Jew, but now a professed atheist, carries on a constant fight against all religion in the schools."

In all this, there are some urgent lessons for those who would promote Christianity in the world. One of them is that if you try to make civilization out of food, clothing, knowledge, and pleasure you will end in blank atheism. Jesus Christ was challenged to change the stones on the mount of the temptation into bread. It was challenging Him to make a world in which was no physical want. He refused. Such a world would forget God. Heaven cannot be made out of bonds and stocks. Life amidst the lotus and the lilies is not the best.

Another great lesson is that we should watch our public schools. The materialistic forces have already gone far toward having their own way with them. You can teach science in the schools, but you can't teach religion unless you teach in the country. It is well to see what the school books contain. It is well to consider the character of your teachers. It is well to know the company your children keep and the kind of books they read.

PUT IT TO A TEST.

Put what to the test? We mean truth, or rather that which may be presented as truth. Put it to the test. But what is the test? By that we mean when a man comes along with what he claims to be truth and desires your acceptance of the same, bring it to a square measure by your Bible. That is the Christian's standard of truth. It may be that you will say, "But I do not know my Bible well enough to be sure of the interpretation which may be put on what is claimed to be the truth." Well, then, get busy—study the Book patiently and daily till you do feel that you are sure of the matter you are considering. It is a great spiritual defect in your life, if you do not know your Book well enough to choose between truth and error. Just as long as you so remain, you will be at the mercy of almost every spiritual fake that comes along. A man with a glib tongue may persuade you to believe many things are truth, just as he may present them. If you do not know your Bible pretty well along the lines of the Christian faith, then the chances are decidedly against your chance to distinguish between the garb of truth and falsehood, and that means that you are liable to be deceived in matters of faith, and if deceived as to your faith, then you may be led into utter darkness. In that case, you may lose your way to Christ and yourself be lost. You must not forget that some of these men can put up a plea so plausible that you will get the worst end of the bargain, and all because you do not know your Bible. But what can one do under such circumstances? Why get your Bible and study it faithfully, not merely for one hour, but study it as much as you can every day, so that you may know what the Bible means and that you may be able to discern the truth and error as well, and distinguish clearly between them. And with your Bible study, be much in prayer.

Let me give you an instance of a plausible plea that really does look as if it were the true article. I find it in a religious paper—a good paper, too—and yet it misleads the unthinking—the man who does not keep well posted as to Bible truth. Here it is—the writer says:

"The time has come for some one to stand in the midst of the Churches and cry out with the tenderness and passion of St. John—Little children, love one another."

Well, now what is wrong about that? That is the question, and yet in it is hidden an error that may prove a serious hindrance to your life.

We admit that it is not an easy thing to discover the poison which is hid in the beautiful sentiment. What that writer is contending for is the unity of the people of God. That is also a fine thought, and it is needed in real Christian life and service.

What, then, is the danger? Listen, and we will endeavor to point it out to you. Of course, in a certain sense, we must love one another. But what this writer is pleading for is the union of all professing Christians. Even that has a fine side to it, but if we take in all Churches, as this writer suggests, why, we shall have a pile of rubbish—theological rubbish, at that! You see how easily it is for truth and error to get all mixed up. Love for one another in this special sense must be based on truth—nothing else can serve. Let me illustrate the idea in a concrete way.

Only recently a man, we believe he was in New York, gave an impressive lesson in this sort of thing. He has organized a body of people—Christians, Jews and Mohammedans. They are to be as one body. Could you join that society? If so, then you would have to fellowship the Jews and the Mohammedans. Let us see if we could do that. The Jews rejected Christ and still reject him. They will not have Christ to reign over them. Could you receive the Jews to Christian fellowship? If so, then what would become of the Christian faith—your Christian faith? If you fellowship the Jews, they reject Jesus. You would, as it seems to us, take to your fellowship the Jews, but you would put Christ out. How will that do for your Christian faith? Then, take the Mohammedan. He represents a semi-pagan religion. His is the most brutal and cruel of all religions. He, too, denies Christ as a divine Saviour. He holds that the Prophet Mohammet is the prophet of God, and his mission is to repudiate Christ as the Son of God. Now, will you tell us how a Christian can accept in fellowship these two faiths, both of which repudiate the very keystone of Christianity? Suppose one should try this plan, what could he hope for but the loss of his own faith and darkening of his own life. Now, you can see what we mean by not being able to fellowship men except on truth as a basis. If one unite with a body of people who reject Christ, then you virtually reject Him, and for the reason that you fellowship such as reject him; and that is fatal to the Christian faith.

Who are these fundamentalists of whom we read so much in the papers? As we understand it, the fundamentalists are a class of men and women who are taking a determined stand for the Bible as the Word of God. They have been called out by the "liberals." And who are the "liberals"? They are a class of professing Christians who believe it is entirely within their province, as Christians, to reject any portion of the Scriptures they may wish. We see a good many who regard themselves as standing for the Word of God seem to throw off at the fundamentalists, as though they were as much off the track as the "liberals." For instance, the Religious Herald, of Richmond, Va., seems to assume a fighting attitude toward the fundamentalists and at the same time its attitude toward the "liberals" seems not at all that of decided opposition. The main objection the Herald has against the fundamentalists, as we understand it, is the fact that the fundamentalists lay much stress on the premillennial reign of Jesus. The Herald seems to believe in the second coming of the Christ, but is awfully opposed to the idea of His millennial reign on this earth. We can hardly grasp the difference. As we understand it, the premillennial reign of Jesus is the same thing as His second coming. Then, if the Herald favors one, why not the other? The Herald's attitude toward the fundamentalists does not seem quite clear. Suppose there is a difference between the premillennial reign of Christ and the second coming, is there not a much greater difference between the Herald's attitude and the attitude of the liberalists? Then, if the Herald's attitude toward the liberalists is not one of sympathy, why does that paper seem to lean toward them rather than toward the fundamentalists? This attitude puzzles us.

God cannot give to a man larger blessings when he has wasted what he had. As the parent tries his child with a penny before he gives him a dollar, so God gives us the smaller responsibility before He trusts us with the great things of the kingdom. God is an enemy to waste.

A visitor at one of the art galleries of Florence said to the aged attendant: "I do not think much of your pictures." The answer of the old man was: "Oh, sir, the pictures are not up for judgment, but the visitors are." Jesus Christ is above judgment, but those who make light of Him are condemned in their judgment.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The observance of "College Day" in our Christian Churches is an innovation that needs no question mark and no period. It is a simple annual service of song, Scripture, prayer, and sermon, with Elon students and high school graduates present in a body in the regular congregation. It is a recognition service for young people who are to fill the Sunday School positions, pews, Church offices, and pulpits, in years to come. It is not simply a literary service, but a recognition of the Christian element in the best education. The college is the product of the Church, representing its liberality, its purpose, its prayers, and its highest ideals.

The value of "College Day" is in keeping the college aims and claims before the congregation in the person of its students and patrons, and the fellowship that worship together inspires; and, more, it puts those who have not been to college in friendly touch with those who have had college training. It furnishes a big opportunity to the Church and lays a big obligation upon college students.

On that day, students should be at their best as representatives of Christian education. If they fail to impress the people with the Christian benefits of college training, they rob the day of its value, and the future of support. That is the one day of the year for parents, young people, and lovers of their Church to manifest an interest in Christian education, and their own institution.

Denominations go up or down with their institutions. Interdependence between the college and the local Church is the mortar between the bricks in the wall of its structure. "College Day" will eventually become an annual factor in the life of the Church, keeping the college before the people as Easter keeps the resurrection before Christendom. "College Day" is not a spasm, a bubble, a mushroom, or an ephemeral experiment; it is the fruit of a permanent desire to put education into the Church and the Church into education. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," was written by Hosea nearly eight hundred years before the Christian era. Knowledge covers a large field. It may be the universe of matter, of minkind, of Jesus Christ. Science is the knowledge of matter; history of mankind; Christian experience of Jesus Christ. Practical life employs all these, and Christian education deals with all of them.

"College Day" gives an opportunity to all members of the congregation to make an offering to the colleges, and there is a double blessing in giving—it blesses those who give and those who receive. There is education in thinking, in praying, and in giving to the college. It will grow into a custom for the Churches, and crystalize into a habit for the individual; and nothing has greater value that established righteous customs and fixed Christian habits. The Jewish festivals educated a nation, and the Lord's Supper has educated the Church. W. W. Staley.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

By means of the prayers, the consistent efforts, and the careful planning of the leaders of our Church in the Far South for an institution of higher learning, we have come to the present, when our hopes seem about to be realized. The preparation and preliminary organization have been well done, but now we are in the midst of the actual construction and organization of the college itself.

This is not a time, however, when we can heave a sigh of relief and settle down to a state of inactive satisfaction. It is a time when all should rally to the support of our new institution, in every way possible. We must give generously, very generously, of our time, our money, our energy and our good will, and we must continue to pray for the success of the institution.

As I am entering this new field of work to take charge of the great project of establishing a new institution of learning, I feel the weight of the responsibility which rests upon me. If it were not for the confidence I have in the loyal support and faithful co-operation which I will receive from the people of the Christian Church, and particularly from the Christian Church people in Alabama and Georgia, I would not feel that I could undertake the work.

Perhaps there are a few who wonder why the Church should take up the work of education now at a time when the State is doing so much along educational lines. It is true that the State is doing a great and a good work in education, and we rejoice in the fact; but the educational facilities which the State offers are necessarily secular because of the fundamental principles of our government which require the separation of the Church and State. Hence, it remains for the Church to provide itself with some means of educating both its ministers and its lay leaders. However, aside from the definite work of educating the Church leaders, the Church college offers a high type of education which many wise parents welcome for their children. These parents appreciate the great value of the building of Christian character along with the acquiring of book knowledge.

I feel sure there are a large number of people throughout the Church who are not only willing, but anxious, to do something worth while to help advance this worthy work of Christian education. There are also quite a number of good people who are members of our Churches, but feel very little interest in our Church colleges or Christian education merely because the situation and value of the work hasn't been brought to their attention.

The proper celebration of "College Day" in all our Churches will, in a large measure, take care of both of these situations. The "College Day" exercises should explain the purpose and the needs of our Church colleges, and show the people how they can best help support these institutions. Of course the prime motive behind the "College Day" celebration is to encourage the young people of the Church, who are ready for one of our Church colleges, to go to one of our own institutions if possible.

It is only because of the unusual and pressing financial need of our college, that the financial part of the "College Day" service is being so much stressed at this time.

Let us all pull together for the advancement of Christ's kingdom here on earth by following His example of encouraging the kind of education which developes character.

HAW RIVER, N. C.

Haw River Christian Church was organized in the year 1895 under the labors of Dr. Patrick Henry Fleming, Burlington, N. C. This Church is located in the central part of the little town of Haw River, located by the side of the road, and is a friend to man, to borrow the thought of Sam Walter Foss.

The Haw River Church has had pastors as follows: C. C. Peel, W. G. Clements, W. C. Wicker, J. F. Morgan, F. C. Lester, and P. H. Fleming. These men have wrought well, and their labors are appreciated and are now bearing much fruit.

On Sunday, June 17, this Church celebrated its twenty-seventh anniversary. A special program was prepared. Dr. Fleming, the pastor, was in charge. Dr. W. C. Wicker, Rev. J. W. Patton, Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, and the writer made brief talks. Miss Emma Thomas, a direct descendant of the White Pilgrim, read the history of the Church, a paper full of information and marks of progress for the kingdom's growth. Special music was rendered and the occasion enjoyed by all present—and that was a house full to its capacity.

The writer's remarks on the occasion were based on a total of the Church's finances as recorded in the "Christian Annual" during the past twenty-seven years. The Church, though small in membership, has aided the kingdom's progress nearly $20,000. This amount has been contributed by its total membership of 196 since its organization. Of this number, twenty-eight have died. The Church has a membership now of 130 after subtracting deaths and removals.

The work of the Haw River Church is not unusual, but an example of how the kingdom goes forward. The history of the Church is a history of struggle, but that is a duplicate of every Church. The world's best is the outcome of struggle, of study, of prayer and of vision. It is the sum total of what all the Churches are doing that makes the work of the Convention possible. It is the sum total of what all denominations are doing that is planting truth and righteousness in the world. No Church, no pastor, no worker, has a right to be discouraged so long as such a Church or individual is adding to the sum total of good. Smallness does not count; greatness does.

The Haw River Church has loyal members, a good Sunday School, active Christian Endeavor Society, a good pastor loved by all, and a unity of effort that is telling. The Church has written into its history that it has never let a call go unheeded, and that alone speaks for its breadth of vision and its loyalty to Christ.

GREENSBORO, N. C.

For the first time, yesterday our primary department of the Bible School was able to meet in their separate class-rooms. The entire basement of the First Church has been prepared for that department. We regret that we still have to keep our little folks "under the ground," but with the addition of six new rooms for this department and the finishing of the "hut" a short time ago, we now have a fairly good Bible plant, even though disconnected. We are hoping to secure some needed equipment in the near future.

We have recently raised here $1,500 to pay off our deficit in the current expense fund, which has been carried, most of it, for several years. And with this amount and that raised for the new building addition and equipment, the First Church this year has given, outside of the regular budget, about $5,000.

Rev. B. F. McLendon (Cyclone Mack) is to begin an evangelistic meeting here next Sunday to last six weeks. And it is reported that Mr. Sunday, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Churches, is to hold forth here next February. So we hope that both he and Mr. McLendon will be able to do what Mr. McLendon says he hopes to do—reach that great class who never darken "the doors of a means of grace."

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE CHURCH AND OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Is the Church of the present doing its full duty in trying to direct the thought and activities of our young people, or is the Church contenting itself to preach to the young people for a half-hour on Sunday and then leave them without further let, hinderance, or suggestion to direct their activities? There are very many things in our time to claim the thought, energy and interest of the young people. Is the Church doing its duty in trying to help fill up the lives of these young people with wholesome and helpful thoughts, suggestions and activities?

Since what period in the development of the Church has the Church confined its functions and activities to the one feature of gathering for preaching on Sunday and holding a Sunday School and a Christian Endeavor Society on Sunday? Certainly this was not the only function nor the sole activity of the early Church. In the beginnings of the Church, told of in the last few verses of the second chapter of acts, we find that the Church activities dominated the whole economic and social, as well as the individual, life and activity of its members. When we consider what the early Church did and how varied were its activities, one wonders how it has ever happened that when one speaks of a Church immediately a group of pious people in a building somewhere with a preacher in the midst and giving a message is thought of. Preaching seems to have been only one small part of the activities of the early Church, but about the preaching and around it as a concentric fact or truth there were many and varied agencies and activities directed by it. The community Church is no new idea or institution. The finest example of a community Church that I know anything about was the first one, which grew out of the preaching of Peter on the day of Pentecost, and told about in the second chapter of Acts. The writer saw some time since the title of a book, "The Church at the Center." There is exactly where the dear Lord put the Church immediately following the day of Pentecost, and it would have been there ever since if we had kept spirit and held to the faith of those early days. Organizing a community Church is certainly no novelty. The Church is the mightiest institution on the earth today, and it has a right to dominate in the community and control all our economic and social activities. Religion is fundamental in the human heart, and if it functions properly, takes possession of the whole life and controls it.

When the Church simply undertakes the task of preaching and teaching a few hours once a week, it has certainly restricted its efforts within limits not suggested in our history of the early Church, in so far as that history is recorded on the pages of the Book. Preaching is only the beginning, not the end, of Church activities, and is certainly only a part, not the whole, of the Church objective. If community life were directed more through Church activities, one readily believes that many evils now rampant in community life would be eradicated.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL BEGINS WORK.

It will be a matter of general interest to Sun readers to know that Miss Pattie Coghill, of Fuller's Church, Vance County, N. C., and who graduated from Elon College at the recent commencement, begins her work July 1st in behalf of women's and young people's missionary societies. Since Miss Bessie Holt resigned this work some two years ago, the women have been on the lookout for a proper person to carry forward the work so well done by Miss Holt (now Mrs. Clem). They feel at last that they have secured a worker who will throw her life into the task and can render invaluable aid in developing the missionary work. Miss Coghill has been deeply interested in missions for years, and has taken the course in religious education given in Elon College, and is at present attending the missionary conference at Blue Ridge, N. C., in further preparation for her work. Her desire is to come in personal contact with women and young people of all our congregations and endeavor to create in the individual mind a desire for missionary activity, community service and kingdom development in every possible way. Miss Coghill is well qualified for her work, and is devoted to Christian activities.

The writer feels that the time was never riper nor the prospects brighter for service along this line. Within the last week he has had two letters from two women of different congregations, asking for literature and instructions and pleading for help to organize young people into missionary societies or groups. Our young people are the hope of the future, and unless we bestir ourselves to incline them to Church activities, the future of the Church cannot be very promising. I have the faith to believe that Miss Coghill will be a very acceptable worker wherever she goes, not only in behalf of distinctive missionary activities, but Church and community development, which is, after all, missionary work. Any of our missionary societies, Sunday Schools, women workers, or pastors desiring the assistance of Miss Coghill can reach her for the present by addressing request to the writer. J. O. Atkinson.

WHY?

One wonders if any Sunday School superintendent or teacher can find any good excuse for not desiring to have missions taught in the Sunday School by an address or a paper or an informal talk once a month at least. One wonders what excuse, if any, there can be on the part of any of our Sunday Schools for not giving the offering of one Sunday a month to missions. With only two or three exceptions, all our leading, live, growing Sunday Schools are doing this, and in no case to their hurt. It certainly does not hurt the Sunday School to think and to give in terms and for the sake of others. I cannot believe that our Southern Convention and all our Sunday School Conventions could have repeatedly gone wrong in urging all Sunday Schools to take an offering once a month for missions, and one once per month for the Orphanage, keeping the other two offerings per month for current expense. So many schools are doing this to their own profit and delight and are helping so effectually and spiritually in a great work that one wonders why every school in all the Convention does not do this good thing. By acting together and through united effort and co-operation, will the Christian Church prosper. What a power for good in kingdom service and in advancing in our missionary undertaking our Sunday School would be if all would co-operate and put their efforts and contributions together for the cause of extending the kingdom. J. O. Atkinson.

HELPING CARRY THE WHOLE BURDEN.

The writer sincerely wishes that every captain, every pastor, and every interested friend who helps collect a pledge, or make a payment on a pledge, to our Men and Millions Movement, may realize that they, by that act, help to carry the whole burden of the whole Church. If there ever was an opportunity for every member of the Christian Church to obey the scriptural injunction, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal. 6:2), that opportunity is now afforded us in our Men and Millions Movement.

There is no mistaking the fact that in very many instances paying these pledges is a burden all right. By this morning's mail comes a letter carrying the following statement: "I am sorry that I am behind on my Men and Millions pledge. I have had two deaths in my family since the pledge was given, and I am behind with my doctor's bills, and other bills, too tedious to mention, but if God spares me to make the money, I aim to pay my Men and Millions pledge before the five years expire. I shall trust to nothing short of Providence and my own efforts. Pray for me." This is typical of many letters received, and shows a zeal for a good cause worthy of a sincere and devout Christian heart.

Let none of us think that others are paying these pledges from their plenty and out of their ease, but that very many besides ourselves are shouldering a real burden in accomplishing this great task to which our Church has given itself. Let us remember that every dollar paid on these pledges goes to help and to carry forward every deserving and needy enterprise of our Church. Surely, in this movement we are bearing one another's burdens. J. O. Atkinson.

Anatole France, a man 79 years of age, said a fine thing a few days ago. It seems there was a delegation of American women who had just been touring the French battlefields, and, addressing these ladies, he said: "I am certain that you will not refuse the salute of an old man who, having participated in all the political errors of his time, now knows—at the end of his life—that the truth is in government by the people, for the people * * * Hate war with a hatred inextinguishable. Hate it in contemplation of its crimes. Hate it in witnessing its ornaments of triumph—with the palms of victory. That your hatred shall be mortal, kill it. Oh, women! oh, mothers! Our grandchildren will see the United States of Europe! They will see the universal republic. You women of great heart, go into the world animated with these sentiments, and you will save Europe and you will bring happiness to the earth."

Commenting on this strong sentiment, the Christian-Evangelist says: "What a vision splendid—the United States of Europe and a warless world! That is the fondest hope of a man who has lived in the heart of the storm-swept era. It is to be seconded heartily, prayed for earnestly, worked for perpetually. Those men and women who encourage the coming of other wars are enemies to their kind."

Bethlehem Sunday School, Valley of Virginia, is planning a campaign for a 10 per cent increase this summer. This is a "growing Sunday School, and has a live superintendent, D. H. Welch.

"Parks Cross Roads has decided to organize a Christian Endeavor Society," writes Mr. W. R. Rightsell, of Ramseur. We have an increasing number of splendid societies in North Carolina.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Christian character first and always at our colleges.

REAPING THE HARVEST.

On March 11, 1889, Elon College was duly chartered by the General Assembly of North Carolina. There was little of material substance on which to undertake so gigantic a project, but there was abounding faith. The work began under the leadership of that prophetic-visioned man, Wm. Samuel Long. He gathered about himself a group of men and women of like spirit with himself—men and women devoted to the cause of Christ and ready to sacrifice for it. One of those men is still at the post of duty and of sacrifice—the venerable John Urquhart Newman, whose loyalty has never wavered nor has his faith dimmed during these thirty-four years.

The years came and went. No one but those directly related to the work here can ever know the struggles, the anxieties, the sacrifices of Elon's heroic history. Little by little, the first two buildings were completed and paid for. Then came the West dormitory and power-house, to be followed later by the alumni building, the ladies' hall, the men's co-operative hall, the laboratory building, and west end. Meantime, three successful financial campaigns were waged. The State of North Carolina had in the interim looked on with approval and given due recognition to Elon as an A-grade standard college.

And then the conflagration!

On the morning of January 18, 1923, a red day—red with the glowing embers of more than a generation of sacrifice and devotion; red with the destruction of that which had been the heart of our struggling institution—it seemed that Elon's days were to be dark and dismal for the future. It was a heart-searching, heart-aching experience.

But the seed had been sown well. The loss of the administration building was to be the occasion of reaping the harvest. The citizens of Alamance County who had, through the years, been approving on-lookers, rose to the challenge our disaster presented them, and proposed to erect a new administration building at a cost of $100,000 if the friends of the college in the Church would furnish $200,000 for an auditorium, library and science hall, as necessary parts of a modern rebuilding program. The trustees met on January 24th, another red day—red with the spirit of sacrifice and a splendid enthusiasm—and accepted the proffer of Alamance.

The work of raising the funds began. Two brethren were found with bulging hearts, ready to put up two of the buildings, if the rest of us would raise the additional $100,000 for a science hall and the furnishings necessary for the four buildings.

The architect had meantime laid out a five-building plan as necessary for our college in its future of growing hope and usefulness, the fifth building to be the religious activities or Christian education building. On May 28, 1923, a third red day in Elon's 1923 calendar, the trustees voted to erect this building when the funds should be in sight.

Truly is this Elon's harvest season. From the crushed and bleeding hearts of January 18th to the buoyant and radiant hopes of July, 1923—who can give God thanks ample for the transformation? Elon faces a glorious day of enlarged service to God and brother-man. We of the Christian faith and brotherhood have it in our power to make this reaping of the harvest complete. Shall we do it? Are we equal to the opportunity? Are we to be Calebs and Joshuas in this hour of promise, or grasshoppers before the grandest challenge any Church ever had presented it? Calebs and Joshuas! God grant that we may be. The "Bigger, Better Elon" then shall surely be. Let every heart face this issue—"What would God have me do in an hour and for a cause like this?"

THE CONTRIBUTION THE CHURCH HAS MADE TO ELON.

BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

To think of a theme like that is identical with that of "The Contribution the Father and Mother have Made to the Child." The Church—that is to say, the Christian Church—has not made a contribution to Elon College; it was the agency through which God Almighty brought the college into the world, and has lovingly fostered it and supported it since its arrival. The figure may be carried even further than this, for as the father and mother transmit their own parental impress, characteristics and disposition to the future through the child, so likewise the Christian Church of the past transmits to us of the present and to others of the future its educational and cultural character, aspirations, and disposition. But as surely as parents transmit their own attitudes and natures to their offspring, so surely is the Christian Church transmitting its cultural and educational attitude and traits through Elon College to the men and women of the Church in the future.

This is not saying that parents do everything that is ever done for their children. There are hundreds of influences that contribute to the child life—social, economic and religious influences about him—but the main source of supply, and that which saves and dominates, is the parental influence. So, likewise, is the influence and contribution of the Christian Church to Elon College. And, as the parent is judged—that is to say, condemned or applauded—for the traits and conduct of the child, we ourselves and the world about us judge us, either condemning or approving, by the kind and character of our product in the educational and cultural process.

It was the spirit of the Christian Church—not the contribution in character or in kind—that founded Elon College. And it is the spirit of the Christian Church, not the character and kind of any individual or individuals, that has nurtured it and brought it to its present position and prestige. Elon College may not be the best that we of the Christian Church could do in the line of Christian education, but it is the best we have done. The child often falls short, and usually does, of the parents' ideal for him. Nevertheless, the world around about continues to make the inquiry, approvingly or disapprovingly, "Is this your Son, my Lord?" Say what we will, and as we may, but the people who pass and all who inquire propound this inquiry to us of the Christian Convention, "Is this your Church college?" It is simply put up to us to say whether out of our devotion, loyalty and support, "Yes, this is ours, we are proud and happy to say"; or, with regret, to say, "Yes, this bears our name and is of our family, but reflects little honor or does little credit to us."

The following are at least some of the outstanding characteristics and traits that the Church has transmitted through the college:

OLD ADMINISTRATION BUILDING BEFORE THE FIRE

(1) Prayer and Sacrificial Service.—Our memories are indeed short if any of us have forgotten the struggle to erect the first buildings at Elon, and how the prayers of the faithful were offered daily that this temple might somehow come to completion. I often think that the devotion and sacrificial service of those days were beautifully typified in the life and attitude of a poor widow, loyal member of the Christian Church, who took from a secret place in her room an only dollar, which she had saved out of her necessity, and said, "Carry that to Elon College, for, while I will never see the institution myself, and none of my children will be educated there, I wish my Church to have a Christian college for the education and proper training of the Christian boys and girls from the homes of the future who may be able to patronize the college." Such a spirit was duplicated in thousands of hearts in those early days, and that spirit God has kept alive to this day.

(2) Young Men and Young Women for Church Activity and Leadership.—Our Christian homes and Christian Churches and our Christian Sunday Schools have sent to Elon College through the years the great majority of her best, brightest and most promising young men and young women to be trained in the way of Christian culture and Church-life activity. And the college has not disappointed these homes, Churches and Sunday Schools, as is evidenced by the fact that today there are to be found in almost all of our Churches young men and young women who have sought and obtained educational and Christian training at Elon College and have returned and taken their natural place as Christian workers, often as Christian leaders in community, Church and Sunday School. Some of the most active and very best officials, leaders, and members in our local Churches and Sunday Schools today are those who received their training at our college. This is the contribution the Church made to the college, which contribution came back like bread cast upon the waters, after many days with greatly enhanced value and worth.

(3) Young Ministers who were to be Equipped and Trained for Service.—The Church and Sunday Schools from all over the Convention and elsewhere have sent to Elon College their young ministers to be trained and equipped for service in the pulpit. Elon College has not given the Christian Church its ministers. That is not the function of a college. The Sunday Schools and the Churches have given Elon College their ministers, and the function and great privilege of the college was to equip and train those young men for the ministry. We have all over the Church today men—able men, well-qualified men, strong men—who were trained, equipped and prepared at Elon College for the great battles they are now fighting for righteousness. The Sunday School and Church contributed them to the college for this purpose and called upon the college to train these men, and it has not disappointed them. We cannot look to our colleges to give us ministers God alone can do that, and He alone can and does draft them into His service. This He seems to do with impressions in earlier years through the Christian home, the pulpit and the Sunday School. Many more men decide after going to college not to preach (who already had some such impression) than not having had that impression before hand decided after entering college to preach. The Christian college is the training camp for the ministry—not the manufacturing establishment. And so not the least of the great contributions the Church has made to the college is the untrained, inadequately equipped young minister, who, going to Elon, found there the cultural atmosphere and Christian training which enabled him to go out and become the very glory of the Christian institution that trained him, as well as the joy and prized treasure of the Christian home, Church or Sunday School under whose agency and early training God's call was heard and the response came, "Here am I; send me."

It is a poor and most unworthy parent indeed who, through neglect or indifference or unpardonable prejudice, will not do his best to rear and give to the world a most worthy and becoming son or daughter. What shall be said of the Church member who withholds his or her support, or refuses his or her loyalty and devotion, to that child of the Church which is to reflect before the whole world his own character, disposition and attitudes? As parents who produce and give to the world worthy and worth-while sons and daughters give to those sons and daughters their best in love, loyalty and wisdom; so, if we are to produce and give to the world worthy and worth-while sons and daughters through Elon College, must we give to this child of our Church the best in love, loyalty and wisdom.

THE INDESTRUCTIBLE ELON SPIRIT.

By R. S. Helms, A. B., '23.

If we could but spirit ourselves back into the dim ages long before civilization began, and observe man in his primitive haunts, we would probably find him living in a spiritual world, and the greater part of his time being taken up in the observance of those ceremonies which he deemed the most acceptable to the various gods which he saw in all about him.

To primitive man, it seemed that there should be a doer for every deed and for every act of nature. In this stage of education it seemed to the imaginative mind that the unseen population of the world was far more numerous than the seen, and that there were diverse beings among them, some friendly, and some unfriendly to man. And, so, from the imaginative mind and the desire to appease the elements of the opposition, man naturally drifted into zoomorphism.

One of the most mystical forces with which man came in contact was fire, which he considered all consuming. It was highly arrestive to the attention, it had powers to harm and to bless, it comforted him with warmth, and it spread a circle of safety from the wandering beasts of the jungle. Peoples in all quarters of the globe have regarded a lamp, a candle, a fire as a source of safety from unseen terror, and the sacred flame was ever kept burning. Not only did they worship it as a protector from other spirits, but they ascribed to it an all-consuming power.

Many, many years have gone by since primitive man saw the dawning light which was to lead him out of savagery into the blazing path of civilization. The world has made advancements that many years ago were never dreamed of, and were inconceivable to the human mind. Science no longer teaches that fire is an all-consuming power, but that it separates the elements that were before combined into other distinctive elements.

Today we stand on the threshold of a place that is most dear to the hearts; a place once beautified by a building that was cherished for the fond memories, and the many pleasant associations that we had with it.

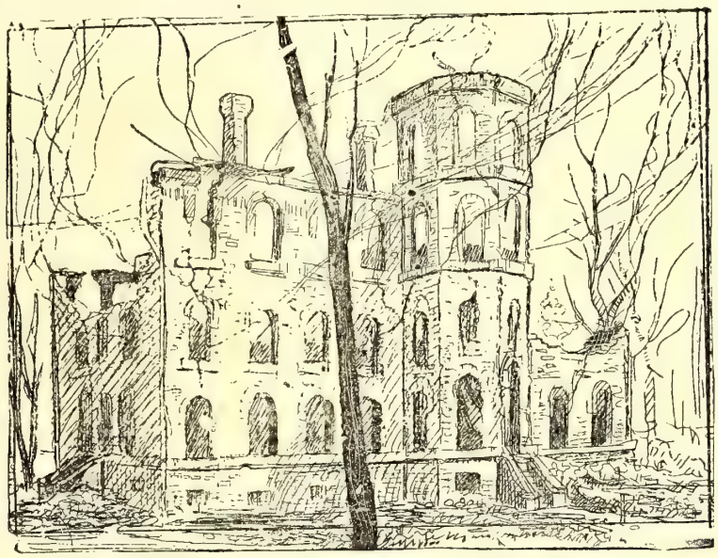
On the morning of January 18th, when the fire alarm was spread through the dormitories, the light of a new day had already begun to fall on a rising world. Immediately every person in the dormitories was out only to find the building a solid mass of smoke and flame. It was beyond the control of every available means. A brisk breeze lifted the flying coals upon its wings and threatened destruction to everything for several hundred yards to the north. Nothing less than heroic efforts on the part of the loyal student body could have saved the other buildings from destruction. It was literally a rain of fire, while the building, which had been the foundation of this institution and had made history for the Christian denomination went up in smoke and in flames.

Students, hastily dressed, wandered about the blazing mass, anxious that something might be done, and through tear-dimmed eyes watched that which was the pride and the glory of our campus smoulder into dust.

The raging flames subsided, and there stood only the bald, bare, bleak walls as a memory of that which was so dear to us. Within a very short time that which had taken years of toil and sacrifice on the part of men and women to build was tottering to destruction.

The old bell, which, for lo! these many years had called the students to her halls of learning. The old chapel in which Elon's four hundred alumni have graduated; the library, stored with knowledge from all the ages past, each and all went down with that memorable building.

But eleven o'clock found the student body assembled in the gymnasium. There were anxious faces and heavy hearts, and an atmosphere of despair could be discerned in all about as the students wondered what steps would be taken. Then there was heard the refrain of our old college song, "So Here's to Dear Old Elon." Immediately every voice had joined the sweet accord, and there arose such music that the angels themselves must have rejoicd as it was waftd on the wings of the heavenly winds. Though we had heard that old song over, and over, and over again, it had never sounded quite so sweetly, and it had never thrilled our hearts quite so much as it did upon this memorable occasion. Though our old building was destroyed, though all seemed dark and gloomy, there lived on that unseen, intangible, immortal, undying thing we call the Elon spirit, which has been famous throughout the history of this institution, and which has been the making of thousands of men and women.



OLD ADMINISTRATION BUILDING AFTER THE FIRE

The hour passed, and plans were made for the classes to continue. The old whistle, which had been silent for many years, was again called forth to do service, and mark the periods one by one.

A beckoning light can sometimes pierce the darkest pit, and a smile can vanquish the darkest gloom.

With courage that had to be set anew, we started out on the last lap of our college year, and thanks to the perseverance of our school-masters, and the kindnesses of our many friends, we are about to reach our commencement.

And now, the clarion call is sounded for you—for you who call this your beloved Alma Mater. The years of time flow ceaselessly on in their flight, and time and tide wait for no man. Those who are discouraged are drowned in the tumult of those who are pressing on to a higher goal. But we are not discouraged. We are among those who can look misfortune in the face and make it a stepping-stone to greater progress; we are among those who are pressing on to the highest goal, for out of those ashes a greater Elon will arise that will send its shining light through all the years that are yet to come.

Though our old building is destroyed—the building in which we experienced many pleasant memories; the building in which we wrestled with our scholastic problems, and learned many hard lessons of life, and made our most lasting friends; though the old building is now mouldering in the dust, these lives on that old Elon spirit which is unconquerable, and which has carried on, and will carry on, its banner in the foremost flights of time. Our alumni who are scattered to the uttermost parts of the earth will catch the renewed spirit of their Alma Mater. The spirit of those who fought and bled and died that the world might be made safe for democracy stalks forth from Flanders field and bids us lift our banner high and "carry on," and, God helping us, we will carry on.

Note.—An oration delivered by Mr. Helms on his graduation day, May 29, 1923.

MY IMPRESSIONS OF ELON COLLEGE AS A CHRISTIAN INSTITUTION.

By E. C. White, A. B., '23.

Do you realize how difficult it would be for you to describe your old home, the place of your birth, to a friend in such a way as to make him feel the same about that home as you feel? John Howard Payne, in writing that beautiful song entitled "Home, Sweet Home," displayed a rare ability along that line which few persons possess. It is one thing to feel, and another thing to express that feeling so that the other fellow can understand and appreciate your viewpoint. That is just the predicament in which the writer finds himself when he attempts to write about Elon College. Elon College was the writer's second home for four strenuous, eventful, yet happy, years. It has been the second home for many students in the past, and will be for many more in the future. Not every place in which one resides can be a second home. As Edgar A. Guest so aptly expressed it: "It takes a heap o' living in a house to make it home." The writer states without fear of contradiction that Elon College becomes a second home to all who go within its sphere of Christian influence and take a wholehearted interest in the many worthy activities which the institution offers.

Elon College is essentially a place of business. Its business is to train men and women for the highest Christian citizenship. But a home must be more than just a place of business. It must offer something nearer and dearer to the heart than mere business relationship. In this regard, Elon is more than a mere college machine which pours knowledge into the receptive mind. It is a place where congenial spirits meet and become acquainted, a place where the closest friendships are formd and where all work together towards the highest objectives in life. Elon students are acquainted not only with the names and faces of their fellow-students, but with their personal characteristics as well. They are indeed one great family of brothers and sisters in the best sense of the word. The close personal asociation between student and student and between faculty member and student makes Elon a happy meeting place for those who enjoy companionship with men and women of noble and lofty ideals.

Had you ever noticed that there is such a thing as the "personality" of a college as well as the personality of an individual? The college with a "personality" is the college that places its trademark upon those who come under its influence. A diploma from a certain college, in addition to its indication that the recipient of the diploma has completed a required amount of work, is a token of approval from that college, but if any college gives a diploma to a graduate and has not given him a part of its personality, then it has failed in its mission. Elon College is a college with a personality. Its motto is, "Christian character, first and always," and its personality is thoroughly imbued with that motto. A spirit of Christian fellowship exists between its students. Its faculty members are Christian men and women. The principles of Christian living are taught in the class-room and every activity of the college is directed toward preparing young men and women for the highest Christian service, it matters not what trade or profession these young men and women may enter. Any student who goes to Elon College for four years and fails to become imbued with the "Elon spirit," and fails to take a part of the Elon personality unto himself has failed in his mission as a college student.

Many great educators have realized the importance of educating the heart as well as the mind, and have seen the need of Christian influence on the campus and Christian training in the classroom. Many higher institutions have set about to blend these two essentials in the lives of its students. Among the foremost of these institutions is Elon College. May its good work never cease! But if, in time to come, Elon College, as an institution, should die, the Elon spirit will never die, for it is based upon the principles of Christian brotherhood taught by the Master, which must live unto eternity.

AS A STUDENT SEES ELON.

By S. M. Lynam, '24.

The choosing of a college to become one's own college is one of the most important choices which a young person is called upon to make. There are more things which enter into the making of a college the right sort of college than most people suppose. It is not always the college with the best-equipped plant or the largest endowment which can contribute most to life. Every college student realizes that the greatest thing about his college is not its plant, its faculty, or its location. He knows that it is something deeper, larger and more powerful. He knows that it is spirit, and it is that quality of a college which is most far-reaching in its grip upon the students which it graduates.

Elon has this intangible thing. No one can come to the Elon campus and fail to feel the spirit of the place. It is a vital force, and it counts in the lives of the alumni of the college. The Elon atmosphere or spirit is perhaps its greatest asset, even though its material resources are constantly increasing.

Elon is not a large college. "Bigness" has never been a goal. The very fact that it is small loans an added advantage. It makes personal contact with every professor practical, and gives to the students more than mere textbook and lecture knowledge. It puts into the education of every boy and girl who comes to the college a personal element. Elon offers ample opportunity for the development of individuality and the growth of personality which, after all, is the real test of any kind of education.

The Elon curriculum is one of the most liberal. In every way it is adapted to the growth of the personality of men and women. The curriculum is broad enough to cover every need of the regular college student. It permits a wide range of choice in the selection of courses of study, and is, therefore, admirably adapted to the personality of the students which it is the purpose of the college to serve.

There are three things which enter into the making of the best college—the spirit, the personal element between students and faculty, and the curriculum. These three things Elon has. The spirit of the college is wholesome, friendly and inspiring. There is an acquaintanceship between those who teach and those who are taught which gives an opportunity difficult to obtain in larger institutions, and the liberality of the courses of study makes it possible for the personality of the students to find free expression, and constant expansion.

EVANGELISM IN THE CONFERENCES.

A Visit to the New York Eastern Conference, the Ontario Conference and the New England Convention.

By Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, D. D., Secretary Department of Evangelism and Life Service.

It was my privilege to attend the recent sessions of the above-named gatherings in response to the urgent invitation of the program committees. At the New York Eastern Conference, I delivered two addresses on "Evangelism" and one on "The Call of the Ministry." I found a delightful fellowship among the pastors and delegates of this Conference, and a keen interest was manifest in the work of the department of evangelism and life service. We have some splendid Churches in this conference, and the entire Conference seems committed to the task of greater kingdom service.

The Conference was entertained by the South Westerlo Church, and the pastor and committee in charge did themselves proud. Every comfort of the delegates was provided for. It was a revelation to me to learn that we have such beautiful and commodious Church buildings, with such attractively kept Church yards. The Churches of the New York Eastern Conference have a characteristic pride in this respect, I was told.

The following week I attended the New England Convention, in session at Manchester, N. H., and on Tuesday night addressed an appreciative audience on the subject, "The Responsibility of the Christian Denomination in Evangelism." Many were the words of appreciation of the challenge presented. Every where I go I find our people intensely interested in the program of our new departmnt, and committed to its program of pastoral and lay evangelism. It was a real privilege to meet with the men and women of our New England Churches. The Manchester Church, of which Rev. Percy Caswell is the energetic and beloved pastor, entertained the Convention in a royal manner. The Manchester Church has an unusual opportunity for service by reason of the large number of young people connected with it.

From Manchester, I went to Montreal via the Boston and Maine Railroad, through the White Mountains of New Hampshire and the Green Mountains of Vermont. Rev. and Mrs. A. A. Richards, former Iowa friends, met me at the station at Franklin, N. H. They are nicely settled in their new home, and the outlook of our Franklin Church, of which he is pastor, seems very promising.

It has been my privilege to see the sceneries of many countries, including the valleys and snow-capped mountains of Switzerland; but among the most beautiful sceneries it has been my privilege to enjoy, that through New Hampshire and Vermont can scarcely be surpassed. My short visit in Montreal leaves many pleasant recollections, and the trip along the St. Lawrence River and Lake Ontario to Oshawa, where the Ontario Conference was held, was very pleasant indeed. The delightful trip and the cordial reception of the Canadian brethren gave me added inspiration and strength for my part on the program.

It was a fine conference session. I delivered one address on "Evangelism," and one on "Life Service," delivered the charge to the Conference missionary, Bro. Bruce Morton, who is soon to take up his work in Porto Rico; delivered the charge to the Conference in the ordination service of Horace G. Halse, of Toronto, and preached at both morning and evening services on Sunday.

The warm appreciation of my services and the many courtesies extended made the work a real pleasure. The Oshawa Church has taken a new lease on life under the enthusiastic leadership of Rev. E. T. Cotton, who has won his way into the heart of his own Church and of the entire city. Bro. Cotten has a most able assistant in the person of his wife, who is a musician of rare talent. These two young servants of the kingdom have a great vision of the possibility of the Christian Church of Oshawa, and in response to the loyal co-operation of the people their vision is being realized in a remarkable way. The entertainment the Oshawa Church presented the Conference under the careful supervision of Brother Cotten was magnificent.

Rev. E. C. Hall, of New Market, Ontario, president of the Conference, accompanied me to Toronto, and showed me some of the sights of that wonderful city. The visit to McMaster's University and to the University of Toronto was of especial interest. At 2 o'clock Monday afternoon I took the boat for Niagara Falls, across Lake Ontario. Having several hours to wait for my train, I was privileged to make a visit to the falls, the which I always do when in that vicinity. The trip up the Great Gorge, and the beauty of the falls never fails to thrill one with the thought of the majesty of power. Though I was away from home a little over a week, and traveled more than fifteen hundred miles, giving seven addresses during the time, yet because of the cordial appreciation of the people and the knowledge that I was rendering definite service to my Master, made the entire trip a source of pleasure.

I was delighted to learn of the splendid work Rev. McD. Howsare, executive secretary and field worker of our department, accomplished among the Churches in New England. The appreciation the pastors and Churches are showing for the work of the department is most encouraging.

CENTRAL LEE COUNTY PASTORATE.

The work here is encouraging. There seems to be in all the Churches increasing interest.

Memorial services were held at Shallow Well on Saturday before the second Sunday in May. Rev. G. R. Underwood, who introduced the memorial idea in this section, and who was pastor of the Church for many years, was present and gave an excellent address. (We should also say that the memorial service held here by Brother Underwood more than thirty years ago was probably the first service of the kind ever held anywhere.) Other speakers who gave splendid addresses were Rev. B. N. Stanfield, pastor of the Jonesboro M. E. Church, and Rev. A. C. Ray, pastor of the Jonesboro Presbyterian Church.

"Children's Day" service was held the fourth Sunday evening in June. The exercises were very much enjoyed by the large congregation assembled.

Turner's Chapel observed memorial day the third Saturday in May. Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., spoke at the morning service, and Dr. R. C. Gilmore, of the Sanford Presbyterian Church, spoke in the afternoon. These were strong addresses and well received. Especially were the people glad to hear Dr. Wicker, a distinguished son of this community. There are some earnest workers here, and trusting in our divine Captain, we are expecting great things to be accomplished.

Grace Chapel observed memorial day the fourth Saturday in May. Rev. W. M. Gilmore, of Sanford First Baptist Church, spoke in the morning service. Mr. Jackson, a young attorney of Sanford, spoke in the afternoon. The large congregation was delighted and helped by both these excellent addresses.

The congregations here are good. The Sunday School has an active teacher-training class.

Sanford Church is adding a Sunday School department, which we hope will be completed in the near future. Also the Church is being enlarged and remodeled so as to make it more attractive and commodious. A good motto for these people would be: "We pull together for the advancement of the Master's kingdom."

Popular Branch has recently organized a Sunday School. For some time they have had no Sunday School. We are expecting a good work there. This Church observed memorial day the second Sunday in June. The speakers were Hon. C. L. Williams, district attorney, and Hon. E. L. Gavin, ex-State senator. These addresses made favorable impressions on the audience.

The field here is large and the opportunity great. We ask the prayers of the brotherhood, that we may be used of the Lord of the harvest to gather much precious grain for His garner.

HEAD OF SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK OF THE FREE WILL BAPTIST CHURCH TO SPEAK AT THE CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS AT ELON COLLEGE, JULY 30TH TO AUGUST 5TH.

Rev. Thomas E. Beaman, pastor of the Free Will Baptist Church, of Goldsboro, N. C., will speak on Friday morning, August 3rd, at the Elon School of Methods, on the subject: "Making Life Count."

Rev. Beaman was educated in the Ayden Theological Seminary and in Moody Bible Institute. During the seven years that he has been in the ministry, he has held important positions in the Free Will Baptist Church of North Carolina, and for four years has been head of the Sunday School work, during which time he has outlined and given to the denomination its present Sunday School system by which the Sunday School work has increased 33 1-3 per cent in membership and efficiency. Mr. Beaman is now field secretary of the Convention, as well as head of its Sunday School work. He has preached in several States of the Union, and is called upon frequently to lecture on special occasions and in institutes.

Rev. Beaman is intensely interested in the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods, and has been endeavoring to enlist the interest of others in his Church, especially of active young people. The Board of Religious Education is very happy that he has consented to speak at the Friday morning lecture hour.

Cragford, Ala., Christian Church has organized a new Christian Endeavor Society. Rev. E. M. Carter is pastor of this Church, and Mrs. W. W. Young one of the leaders in the new society.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.

Making a Great Life.

The Leader of the Twelve.

Do you like Simon Peter? Just why?

The familiar reply will come from many: "I like him because he is so human!" There is sort of a kindred feeling with the man who lived and loved and served and failed so many centuries ago. There is no admiration for his denial of his Lord. But there is a strong liking for the man who loved his Christ enough to leave all to follow Him, and then was big enough to "come back" after he had failed in his allegiance and build up a strong character in performing great service. A close study of his whole life will reveal to every student and class qualities to be emulated and temptations to be guarded against. What are some of these characteristics which made Peter a leader among the twelve and a favorite disciple still?

Simon Peter Heard the Call of Jesus.

He may have been called from his fisher's net by the Sea of Galilee by the Master strolling along the shore (Matt. 4:19). Or you may love to think of that brother, Andrew, who heard of the "Lamb of God" from John the Baptist, and straightway found "first his own brother, Simon, and brought him to Jesus" (John 1:40, 41). The essential thing is that he heard the call and left all to follow Jesus; left his possessions, left the free, roving life of the sea; left his family often. He became one of the first of that long line of heroes who have been willing to leave all to serve Him, and for centuries his obedience to the Master's "Come" has inspired others to volunteer for Him.

Simon Peter was an Enthusiast.

His life on sea had developed his bold, energetic and impetuous nature. He threw his whole heart and soul into every activity. He appeals because of this very vivacity and eagerness which was exhibited sometimes in thoughtlessness. The old adage: "Speech hath many pitfalls; silence none," was evidently not a part of his training, and his eagerness for Christ to have earthly honor and to escape suffering blinded him in a measure to the real meaning and mission of His coming to earth. But Peter's enthusiasm was unselfish. He had no thought for a high place for himself. This quality of enthusiasm made him a leader among the disciples. No leader can go far without enthusiastically believing in his task and loving the cause with which he is lined up. Enthusiasts may make mistakes, but they do not make the same mistakes, nor constantly make the error of doing nothing.

Jesus Christ Appreciated the Worth of Simon Peter.

Instantly Jesus saw in Simon possibilities and renamed him Peter. To Peter was Jesus revealed as "the Christ, the Son of the living God," by the Heavenly Father (Matt. 16:16, 17). To Peter, Jesus gave the command, "Feed My lambs; feed My sheep." Peter was chosen as one to be with Him on the Mount of Transfiguration and in the Garden of Gethsemane. To Peter, Jesus pointed out his own difficulty and weakness and prayed that he might be strengthened: "Simon, Simon, behold! Satan asked to have you, that he might sift you as wheat: but I made supplication for thee, that thy faith fail not; and do thou, when once thou hast turned again, establish thy brethren" (Luke 22:32). Who could help turning back with such a belief and confidence, expressed in supplication, and a trust to perform? What an inspiration to better things is the appreciation and confidence of a friend! How much greater is it to feel that the Heavenly Father is trusting us with much, and ready to help if we but ask Him?

Simon Peter Loved His Lord.

Peter's weakness was not lack of love, but moral cowardice. Physically he was brave. Morally he played the coward in the court-room of the high priest. But then he "wept bitterly." Declaring that he was ready to go to prison and to death, still he had followed "afar off." How many times other disciples, even today, follow afar off, and because so far from their Jesus, deny Him too! Then, is the repentance sincere? Then is the heart glad to hear the query: "Lovest thou me?" and glad to respond with an answer of loving service. Peter loved Jesus, and he left a message filled with his own expressed love and trust and confidence in God's power.

Simon Peter's Life was Crowned with Success.

In these hours of lonely suffering, a new courage and a new purpose came into his life. Peter, the coward, died, and Peter, the loyal, came to take his place. Never again was he to forsake his Master. The first twelve chapters of Acts are filled with the record of the work of the last years of his life, in leading the early Christians, fearless in danger and death, loyal in temptation and struggle, the Peter, whom we most admire. He was "human," but he linked that human power with the divine, and overcame temptation. That made him a hero.

"O God, our Father, we are made strong by he strength of Christ. Our hearts are bound to Him as we remember how He was faithful to Thee even unto death. The more we think of Him, the more we love Him, and the more eager we are to follow Him. Help us to trust Him. Would that we might never betray His trust in us. May cowardice die in our hearts and loyalty be born anew with each new day, for each new day we would renew our allegiance to Him who is the Master of life. And all our prayer we offer in His name. Amen."—Dr. Hartshorne.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

July 15, 1923.

Subject: "The Inner and the Outer."—2 Cor. 4:16-18; 1 Sam. 16:6-13.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Physical strength weakens with years. Spiritually, a man may grow stronger all the time.—Verse 16.

"Day by day" is the secret of Christian strength. As physical exercise to develop the body must be a regular part of the day's program, so spiritual food must be taken and spiritual exercise followed, day by day. Are you a better Christian this year than last, this month than last, today than yesterday?—Verse 16.

"Tribulation worketh patience." Affliction may be turned into a blessing in disguise when it sends the sufferer or the mourner to God.—Verse 17.

God's greatest blessings are unseen ones; that is, invisible to the natural eye. Without air, we could not even live. Without health and strength and love and kindness, life is poor. With these blessings, the man with the least gold is rich indeed.—Verse 18.

So much effort and time and worry are expended for those things which are temporary, and do not bring lasting happiness if they are obtained. How much wiser is the man who devoted his days to those things which are eternal. (See Matt. 6:19.)—Verse 18.

Samuel, like you and I so often, first judged by the height and countenance of the youth before him. God was concerned with his heart, and the man that is a true king in his sight must have a king's heart.

"There is nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth."

The work of the teacher is to inspire the inner life. They are those whom Wordsworth praises:

"Blessings be to them, and eternal praise
Who gave us nobler lives, and nobler cares."

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

"Adrift on Time's relentless tide,
As waves that follow waves, we glide,
God grant we leave upon the shore
Some waif of good it lacked before;
Some seed, or flower, or plant of worth,
Some added beauty to the earth;
Some larger hope, some thought to make
The sad world happier for its sake."
—Whittier.

"Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
Whom we, that have not seen Thy face,
By faith, and faith alone embrace,
Believing where we cannot prove."

Plans for the Meeting.

Have you ever tried an out-of-doors meeting for these hot summer nights? Sing the old hymns. Make it a true vesper service, opening with "Day is Dying in the West," "Break Thou the Bread of Life," "How Firm a Foundation," and these hymns will have a new meaning, and the inner life will be strengthened. Or try a sunrise meeting some Sunday morning. These changes will give new interest when the Church room may be warm, or your group small.

Invitations to this meeting may be written on heart-shaped cards, with "Proverbs 4:23—Discussed at Christian Endeavor Sunday night—Come," written on them, or something similar.

Discuss the meaning of this verse in the meeting, using the heart to represent the inner life, and showing how when the heart is right it is shown in the outer life.

Use the Daily Readings, having them read by one of the younger members, and commented upon by an older member, both having been notified of this part of the program, and both standing before the society to read and to speak. The readings for this week are as follows:

"The Great Contrast."—Rom. 8:8-14.
"The Outer."—1 Cor. 9:27.
"The Outer Temple."—1 Cor. 6:19, 20.
"The Dweller Within."—2 Cor. 5:1-9.
"The Inner Man."—Eph. 3:16-21.
"The Outward Misleading."—John 7:14-24.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "If Your Heart Keeps Right," "Take Time to be Holy," "Have Thine Own Way, Lord," "Let Jesus Come Into Your Heart," "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart," "My Soul be on Thy Guard."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

The final report from the Daily Vacation Bible School in the Bethlehem Sunday School, Valley of Virginia, shows an enrollment of 47, with 24 who did not miss a single day. A greater stress was placed upon Bible memory work in the school this year, and 24 members of the school were awarded red ribbons for learning all assigned in their respective grades. A number received gold stars for additional memory work done. One of the most enjoyable features of the session was the Bible verse-finding contest, which was conducted each day. In the older group, three tied for first place—Pauline Brown, Gladys Myers and Helen Myers. Lucille Lawson won in the contest for children under ten years of age, with Alice Combs a close second. Rev. A. W. Andes is the pastor of the Church, and visited the school and commended its work. Among the leaders were Mrs. R. C. Myers, Miss Ella Pickering, Mrs. John Driver, Mrs. Sellers, Miss Leighton, and all are enthusiastic about the work of the school, and already looking forward to an even better session next year.

Richmond Sunday School re-elected D. J. Kelly, superintendent, and W. R. Harton secretary for the coming year. Other officers are: Assistant superintendent, W. L. Beale; assistant secretary, W. F. Holmes; pianist, Mrs. Claude Woodard, and chorister, D. W. Darden.

Christian Orphanage

THE ORPHANAGE AND ITS WORK.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We are glad some sections are having rain. We are very dry here. Gardens are scorching up and vegetables are scarce. Our vegetables are one of our sources of supply, and we have always taken a good deal of pride in raising vegetables enough for our use; but we cannot combat with dry weather. We have planted potato and tomato plants by the thousand and watered the plants, but the weather has been so extremely dry that we have had but few to live. The weather man promises thunder showers, but, somehow, they miss Elon, but often get in sight. It can be truthfully said that Elon is a bone-dry community.

Quite a number of our children are out on vacations. We give all of them ten days, provided they have parents, friends or relatives to visit. We will have a few who will not go, as they are too far away from their folks and the expense will be too great.

We want to insist that our Sunday Schools make their Sunday School offerings as large as they possibly can, for we have to look to the Sunday Schools through the summer months for the greater part of our income.

Don't forget us, friends; we have 100 children to support.

The children's division,
The young people's division,
The adult division,
The administrative division,
The Church School plan,
Our colleges.

Tells about our leaders in intimate fashion and about the great things our Churches are doing.

There is no religious journal like it published any where else in the world.

The Journal of Christian Education is a pioneer. The Christian Church has pioneered before. Your fathers rejoiced to lead in Christian work.

Help to circulate this journal. You will be proud of having done this ten years from now.

Send orders to John H. Stewart, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Chautauqua opens three weeks from next Monday night. Have you sent in your registration? The next issue of THE SUN will be "Chautauqua Number," with articles from a number of our leading workers, and information concerning the Chautauqua.

"Just as enthusiastic and twice as big as last year," is Mr. Stephenson's vision for the Catawba Springs Convention, July 10, 11, 12. Let's help make it come true. Have you mailed in your report yet? Mail it today!

"Children's Day" was a great occasion in many Churches. Has your offering been sent to Mr. Stephenson with the others?

Called Home

WRIGHT.

On the night of May 20th Miss Odie Wright, beloved wife of Mr. Frank Wright, passed peacefully away to her heavenly home prepared by God for those that love and serve Him. Although her sufferings were great, she was perfectly resigned to her Heavenly Father's will.

Bearing her sufferings with patience and Christian fortitude, her husband and children were ever by her side to do all in their power to relieve and comfort their darling wife and mother, hoping against hope that she would be spared to them many years. But she had fought a good fight, ran the race and won a crown for herself, given only to those who trust and serve God.

She lived to see her children grown and one granddaughter nearly grown. She was a good wife, devoted mother and kind neighbor, and will be greatly missed in her neighborhood and Church, but most of all in her home. But loved ones dear think of the home she has gained —the home of the soul, where sorrow nor death never goes. She will be waiting for you there, and as she cannot come to you, you must prepare to go to her. She, I am sure, will be waiting by the beautiful gate of pearl for her husband and children dear and all that were dear to her.

May this great love be sufficient for you, and when your work here on earth is ended, may you gain a home in that city of pure gold, to be with mother and all your loved ones gone before, and with your God.

To her loving companion, who is so sorely bereaved, I offer my tenderest sympathy and point him to the one that will truly sustain and comfort him in his sorrow and loss.

How well she fell asleep,
Like some great river wending toward the sea,
Calmly and gladly, silently and deep,
Her life joined eternity.

A FRIEND.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Since God in His infinite wisdom has removed from our midst Mr. William Baker, of Liberty Spring Christian Church; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That our loss is Heaven's gain; God is wise, great, and good, and He never maketh a mistake.

Second, That we offer our heartfelt sympathy to those he loved so dearly, and point them to the living God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Third, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun, and a copy spread on the minutes of Liberty Spring Christian Church records.

MARRIED

SORRELL—MURRAY.

On Wednesday morning, June 27th, at the home of the bride's parents, Rev. Matthew T. Sorrell and Miss Ruth Holland Murray were married. It was a quiet wedding, with only a few relatives present. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James I. Murray, and Mr. Sorrell is the son of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Sorrell. Both the bride and groom are members of Catawba Springs Christian Church. Mr. Sorrell is one of our promising young ministers, who for the past two years has been in school at Elon.

They left immediately after the ceremony for Washington. We speak for them a happy and useful life, and pray that our Heavenly Father will guide them into paths of usefulness.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Tunnel to Irrigate the Plain of Jericho.—

Land adjacent to the Dead Sea, which in Joshua's time "flowed with milk and honey," may become a fertile region again if a plan outlined by Albert Hiorth to the Victoria Institute at London becomes a reality. He proposes that irrigation canals be built on both sides of the River Jordan and parallel with it. Throughout their length they would be furnished with suitable outlets for the distribution of water over the sloping plain between the Lake of Genesaret and the Dead Sea. As a source of energy, there is planned a hydro-electric plant on the western shores of the Dead Sea which would receive its energy from the Mediterranean through a tunnel under Jerusalem.—Pathfinder.

The English Drinking Less Beer.—

The Brewers' Society, of London, in a review of the brewing and licensed trade for 1922, states that there has been a large falling off in the consumption of both beer and spirits, due, it is believed, to excessive taxation, low wages and unemployment. Compared with prewar taxation, the duty on beer still remains thirteen times as great, and the duty on spirits five times as great. In 1923, 36,000,000 barrels of beer were consumed, but during the war the quantity fell off by two-thirds. In 1920-21, consumption rose to 26,000,000, fell in the next year to 23,000,000, and during the year ending last March reached only 18,000,000 barrels. Materials, with the exception of hops, are cheaper, but the diminished and steadily falling output more than sets off that saving, and it is said that no reduction in the price of beer is possible until the Chancellor of the Exchequer substantially reduces the duty. If the drink evil in England cannot be killed in any other way, perhaps it can be taxed to death. Therefore, it is to be hoped that the duty will not be reduced, but increased. It is strange, but true, that economic considerations are more potent than moral with a large portion of the human race. Some men cannot be reached through their hearts or consciences, but are very sensitive in their pocketbooks.—Ex.

Prohibition in Hawaii.—

The questionnaire is becoming one of the popular institutions of the modern world, and is, doubtless, a great help in the task of measuring public opinion between national election days. The questionnaire has now been employed in the Hawaiian Islands to determine ex-post facto verdict of the people on the question of prohibition. The document was sent out by the Honolulu State Bulletin, and of the two hundred and seventy-five citizens receiving copies of the questionnaire, the list including educators, clergymen, physicians, legislators, business men and shop foremen, sixty have thus far replied. And of this number, only five are favorable even to light wines and beer, the great majority holding, as does every genuine friend of temperance reform, that the return of these berevages, particularly the return of beer, would inevitably bring back the saloon; and the coming of the saloon, under whatsoever camouflage, would soon mean the opening of the door to all the demons of strong drink. It is a happy outlook indeed for Christian civilization when public sentiment responds so truly to the good results of prohibition; and, as the radius of experiment increases, the cause of prohibition will become still more firmly intrenched with every passing day, until the drunken revels of past generations are forgotten in the light of a better world.—Methodist Recorder.

The Other Side of the Question.—

The Literary Digest says: The operators' side of the question is set forth by one of them—Mr. Franklin Bache. In a speech before the American Coal Association, reported by the Cincinnati Times-Star, Mr. Bache said:

"If the government gains control of the mines, what is to prevent them gaining control of the shoe manufacturing industry, the textile industry and every other privately owned business in the country?

"The public seems to take the attitude that the coal operators are responsible for the high prices. I want to correct that impression. Nearly 70 per cent of the cost of production goes to the miners in the form of wages, while out of the remaining 30 per cent the operators must pay their State and Federal taxes, purchase supplies, pay for maintenance and take what is left for profits. There are 8,000 operators in the country, and if all the profits they made were taken off the total price of coal, the price per ton would hardly be reduced one cent. On the other hand, there are 500,000 miners whose wages have been doubled or trebled in the last five years. If these additional wages were reduced from the total cost of coal, the price per ton would be materially reduced.

"The operators do not oppose the unions. We recognize the inherent right of workers to organize. And we do not say that the miner is receiving too big a wage. What we do say, and want to emphasize, is that the high wages of the miners are responsible for the high cost of coal, and if the public wants lower coal it must follow that course to obtain it. Government control will not obtain it."

The Question of Taxing the Rich.—

The Literary Digest is presenting some views of taxing the rich in the present situation. We fear "there is a woodpecker in the old stump." The following gives a pretty fair idea of the situation: Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, we are told by the Louisville Post, "insists that, should the supertax rates be cut from 60 and 50 per cent on the large fortunes to 33 per cent, the result would be an increase of income to the government, due primarily to the fact that the investments of large fortunes would be diverted from tax-free securities. Now, it might not work that way, but surely the thing is worth trying, and Mr. Mellon is an excellent authority."

"The tax rate on the largest incomes should be drastically reduced," writes B. C. Forbes, in the New York American, "not through pity for the very rich, but because such a change would bring into the Federal Treasury many more of their millions." At present, we read in the neighboring Tribune, "the small incomes bear a disproportionate share of the burdens." "Taxpayers with net incomes of $3,000 or less furnish more than 40 per cent of the taxable income, and those with incomes of $5,000 or less, 67 per cent," notes the Philadelphia Bulletin. Where the net income from the 1921 tax returns came from is shown in the following table:

Incomes	Amount in Each Class.	P. C. of Total.
Under $1,000	$ 213,849,934	1.09
$1,000 to $2,000	3,620,761,768	18.49
$2,000 to $3,000	5,325,931,265	27.21
$3,000 to $5,000	4,054,891,244	20.71
$5,000 to $10,000	2,378,759,237	12.16
$10,000 to $25,000	1,958,156,206	10.00
$25,000 to $50,000	979,629,305	5.00
$50,000 to $100,000	582,230,218	2.97
$100,000 to $150,000	163,520,999	.84
$150,000 to $300,000	145,948,047	.75
$300,000 to $500,000	61,342,550	.31
$500,000 to $1,000,000	42,780,426	.22
$1,000,000 and over	49,411,329	.25
Total	$19,577,212,528	100.00

In studying and comparing these figures with those of 1920, the New York Times finds that "they show a falling off of 597,768 in the number of returns filed, a reduction of $4,158,416,655 in the total net income reported and a decrease of $355,666,580 in the total tax paid." And that "the average net income for 1921 was $2,938.56 and the average tax $107.98. In 1920 the average net income was $3,269.40 and the average tax $148.08."

From the foregoing, the Syracuse Herald reaches the conclusion that—

"The law should be amended so that swollen fortunes can be made to pay just share of the income tax, which in these days of high prices works a real hardship on thousands of men of moderate incomes."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Are you really shouldering your responsibility in your Church?

Get ready for the Chautauqua. It begins July 30th and closes August 5th.

The Reidsville, N. C., work is going well. They have a big Sunday School.

Remember, the editor's office is now at Elon College, N. C. Send all letters for him there.

What is our brother, Rev. C. E. Gerringer, doing in his field? Let us have the news from your work, brother.

What are you doing in your Church to get THE SUN to coming to every family, and every week at that? It is only $2.00 a year.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., was announced to preach in the Henderson, N. C., Christian Church on Sunday night, July 8th.

What has become of the Dendron, Surry County, Va., pastorate? We have had no news from it in a long while? What is the matter, Brother Flowers?

Have you your preacher engaged for another year? If not, you will do well to be looking for him. They are scarce. Delay now may mean that you will have to do without one next year.

Men and women who are interested in Sunday School work ought to attend the Chautauqua. Bro. Flory is to give a course of instructions on "Organization and Administration," two features in Sunday School work which are not studied as they should be.

Do not continue to send your letters for the editor of this paper to Henderson. Remember his address is now Elon College, N. C. After this, he expects to give his whole time to the paper, and he hopes to make a decided improvement in its matter.

Do you keep your Church expenses paid up as you go? It is easier to do so than it is to get away behind and then have to make public appeals for money to pay up. Pay as you go is a good rule for Churches, as well as for individuals. Getting in debt is a bad habit. Don't do it.

We tender a brother's sympathy to Deacon D. J. Mood and his daughter, Smithfield, Va., in the death of his wife and her mother. She was a fine little woman, and much loved by a large circle of friends. Bro. Mood was for a number of years connected with THE CHRISTIAN SUN, as foreman of the mechanical department, and did a good work.

Bro. E. C. White, a recent graduate of Elon College, in the absence of the pastor, conducted services at the Spring Hill Church, in Sussex County, Va., a week or two ago. That is just what our young people just home from college should do—take hold and help anywhere and in any way they can. We understand that Bro. White's work on that occasion was well appreciated.

The following is from the Christian Herald: "We notice more high school and college commencement addresses this year emphasized the need of religion on the part of students. Is that because the teachers have been neglecting religion in the school curriculum, or does it simply mean that the commencement speakers have run out of ideas about culture and literary masterpieces? We wonder what Jesus would talk about to a graduating class at commencement time!"

We should like to hear from our brethren in the more remote Conferences. Give us the news, brethren! You have just as much right to appear in these columns as have the Conferences which are, geographically speaking, much nearer. The editor is unable to give the news unless the brethren will send it in—we are not mind-readers, and so cannot guess the news. Just give us the items, personal and otherwise, and we shall be glad to give them space in so far as it is proper to do so.

In renewing his subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Bro. W. C. Rollings, Sebrell, Va., says: "I appreciate your editorial in the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I bid you God-speed in sticking to the truth. The truth is the light. Cry aloud and spare not. Tell Israel her sins. If some one does not do it, the Church and the world will be lost." The time is here when the enemies of the truth make it necessary for some one to cry aloud. May God help His ministers to be faithful in declaring His truth to them.

In the Friendly Visitor, the parish paper of the Muncie Christian Church, of which Rev. M. W. Butler is pastor, we find the following: "Some of our young people, not only young in years but also in Christian experience, are leading the older ones in real Christian activities. They are in evidence at prayer meeting. It is cheering and inspiring to see them taking such deep interest in kingdom service." We wonder how many of our pastors here in the South are having similar experiences! Tell us, brethren, if you have anything like that in your work.

The Friendly Visitor, in a recent issue, throws out a timely suggestion to many people. It is so good and so to the point in this day of careless living, it needs a wider field, and so we propose to give it a chance to speak to our people: "You'd feel better, be better, live better, think better, and die better by attending some Church services regularly. If you are a non-churchgoer, we suggest that you try out the matter of regular Church attendance as faithfully and as long as you would a worthy business enterprise, and then make a faithful report to your own heart and consciousness."

What is Damascus, in Gates County, doing? That is one of our strong Churches, but we have heard nothing from it in so long that it seems as if it might be taking a vacation—but we do not think that is so. Let us hear from you, Damascus! And there is its close neighbor—Cypress Chapel! That, too, is one of our strong Churches, but we have no news from there in quite a while. The same is true of Berea, Norfolk County, and Berea, Nansemond County, and Bethlehem and Holy Neck and Franklin, and Union, Southampton—all in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Brethren, what are you doing? Let us hear from you, please.

The Church which seeks to do its work without a pastor is simply making a great mistake. How would your farm get along if there was no one to direct its affairs? How would your store get along if you had to leave it in inexperienced hands? The money your Church may save by not having a pastor will be the most costly money you ever saved. You may think your Church will catch up financially by doing without a preacher. You are mistaken. It will most likely get further behind, and then when you do get a pastor he will come to a Church in a run-down condition, and then it will be that much harder for him to make a success of his work.
